FOR STREET IMPROVEMENT.

COMMON COUNCIL HEAR SUGGESTIONS AS TO THEIR WORK.

Councilman Fisk Recommends an Appropriation of $20,000 for the Coming Year—The Report of Mr. Meeker.

At the meeting of the City Council Monday all the members were present except Mr. Bird. The newly elected Councilmen were also present as guests and watched with considerable interest the proceedings. The regular order of business was suspended and the street railway ordinance was taken up and adopted on third reading as was also the building ordinance the one to create the office of building inspector, and the one to regulate the licensing of inns and taverns. They are all ready for the Mayor's signature. Council then adjourned and immediately reconvened in regular session. After the minutes were read and approved, a communication was read from J. P. Homan asking for permission to build an extension on his house at 120 West Fifth street. It was referred to the Fire and Building Committee with power.

A petition from Woolston & Buckle and others of North avenue asked for permission to connect to the sewer at once, and another one from L. B. Woolston, Chas. Lyman and others of the Board of Trade, asking the Council to protect the taxpayers of North avenue from any injunction that might be served. Both were referred to the Sewer Committee.

John Vetterlein petitioned the Council for the privilege of moving his machine shop from 119 Exchange alley to 109 East Front street. It was referred to the proper committee and later granted.

A communication from Michael Watson through his counsel, Lawyer Geo. W. DeMeza, stated that Mr. Watson was willing to pay all the cost of his suit now in litigation in the courts up to date if the city would stop proceedings. The matter was referred to the Finance Committee and later referred to the Corporation Counsel.

The bond of Collector-elect E. H. Bird was presented as approved by Corporation Counsel, received and filed. The usual budget of claims were presented and later ordered paid.

The Board of Engineers appointed Joseph Wyckoff to membership in Zopher Hook & Ladder Company, and the Council confirmed the appointment.

A. J. Gavett recommended the payment of Honan & Sons bill, less $109 15, which was due the city for repairs. It was so ordered. Honan & Sons presented a bill of $179.15 for extra work done on Watchung avenue between Front and Second streets, in laying a new trestle. Consulting Engineer F. W. Farquar reported avorsely in the matter, and it was referred to the Sewer Committee.

Mr. Fisk, of the Street Committee, made an extended report of the work done on the streets during the past year. He recommended the paving of the principal streets in the centre of the city with asphalt, also that Sycamore avenue be improved, and that money for next year's work be raised by the appointment of commissioners issuing bonds. The streets should be looked after at once. He also suggested that all matters coming under the title of public works be put under one head as superintendent of streets. He thought that $20,000 would be needed for next year's work. Eollowing the above report Street Commissioner Meeker's report was presented and read. It is as follows:

The work the past year has consisted of street cleaning, necessary repairs, grading on streets not touched by the sewer trenches and in general preparing for permanent improvements when the sewer trenches have had sufficient time to settle.

So permanent work is possible before next Spring and then only, if we have a severe Winter, or a very wet Spring, so that the dirt may become thoroughly settled in the trenches.

Most of the mounds in dirt streets will disappear and hollows will be left which will have to be filled. The greatest trouble will be found in macadamized streets where the macadam has formed an arch over the soft dirt and the latter settling away will leave it unsupported and liable to give away when any unusual weight is placed upon it. Fortunately the steam roller purchased last Fall will prevent a great deal of this danger. In other cases the macadam will be so thoroughly mixed by gradual settling into the soft dirt beneath that there will be only a remnant of the stone left.

Therefore, to put our streets back in the condition they were two years ago, it will be necessary to pick up the whole surface, level off the hills and fill in the hollows, roll with the steam roller and spread at least two inches of new finish stone over the whole surface and thoroughly water and roll the whole at the same time it would be advisable to extend this topping of two inches of stone to the curb on each side, thus adding much to the durability as well as the appearance of our residential streets.

The above is recommended for that class of streets only. In the business portion of the city the traffic demands something more substantial of which we will speak more in detail later on.

The streets in the business portion of the city demand present attention and should be put in proper condition as soon as the frost is out of the ground in the Spring.

Park avenue from Front street to the railroad should be thoroughly overhauled and all the old plank and other refuse material removed and a good stone foundation laid so that it will be ready at any time for asphalt or whatever surface pavement the common council may decide to employ.

But before this is done an eighteen inch sewer should be built from the present catch basins under the railroad bridge to Green brook: first, to relieve the flooding of sidewalks and cellars in the vicinity; second, to do away with the two gutters across Second street: third, to enable us to increase the grade between Second and Front streets which is too light at present, to properly carry off the water.

An eighteen inch pipe is recommended rather than one of smaller size because the greatest damage is done by the sudden heavy down pours of Spring and Summer, and hence we require a pipe of sufficient capacity to carry off the water before it has an opportunity to do any damage.

Front street, between Grove street and Watchung avenue, should also have the surface removed and the Telford foundation already laid therein carefully and completed and should be finished with asphalt, preferably.

If any permanent pavement is laid on Front street beyond the points mentioned above, it will be necessary to lay a stone foundation first, as the present surface is only a light macadam.

North avenue, between Park and Watchung avenues, has a good Telford foundation and requires only surfacing. Asphalt is on the stones of this foundation and noiselessness the ideal pavement, but on the other hand it is quite expensive.

Our main residence streets should all be macadamized from curb to curb on each side, thus doing away with much unsightly mud in wet weather and unpleasant dust in dry.

It is very desirable that all the cross streets in the heart of the city should be macadamized for the preservation of the main thoroughfares, as the amount of mud and dirt drawn upon them by the horses and vehicles coming from those side streets is surprising and causes the main streets to be much more muddy or dusty than they otherwise would be.

Curbing should be laid upon wherever permanent improvements are undertaken, as there is no one thing that so assists the flow of water in the gutters, and the consequent good drainage of the streets, as a well set curb; it also serves as a shoulder to the pavement, and materially aids in keeping it in place.

There are certain portions of the city that demand sewers for the purpose of carrying off the surface water:

First—Washington and Sixth streets at their intersection. At this point it is impossible to carry off the water in any other way without entailing great cost, and, though it is very bad, the area drained is not so great but that a 12-inch sewer will be ample.

Second—Grant avenue should be relieved from the great body of water that rushes down it during every rain; this can best be done by building a sewer through Plainfield and Grinnel avenues from the railroad bridge to Green brook.

The drainage from nearly eighteen acres would thus be diverted from Grant avenue, and as this area is quite thickly built up, and some of the streets macadamized and graded to a grade, the volume of the water runs off immediately than would if it was sparsely settled, and in the latter case the ground would absorb much of the rainfall. In fact is often found that sewers and culverts that were ample for dirt streets running through sparsely settled sections, become entirely too small, for reasons mentioned above. I would recommend a twenty-four inch sewer through Plainfield avenue, West Front street and Grinnel avenue from the C. R. R. of N. J. to Green brook.

Third—East Second street, between Washington and Richmond streets, is so very flat that it should have a sewer to relieve it. This should be a twelve-inch pipe and be run down East Second street to the Peace street sewer, in which there is an intake already built to receive it.

Another advantage of storm-water sewers is that they do away with culverts and thus permit of a much better finish of street intersections and curb corners, thus adding materially to the appearance of our streets.

One branch of our work that has progressed without much interference is that of flagging and curbing, as the following list will show:

Mr. Fisk had obtained the opinion of Foster Crowell, of New York, who is an expert on matters pertaining to streets and the City Clerk read the same. Mr. Crowell had inspected the Plainfield streets and made many suggestions, including the use of asphalt, wide tires and the dividing into four classes the streets for different grades of macadam etc. The report was received and filed.

Mr. Fisk made another motion that $20,000 be fixed as the appropriation for next year's street work. After Mr. Dumont had demonstrated the fact that it would be impracticable to place the amount so high on account of the taxes coming in so slow, also that it would not be advisable to raise the tax rate the matter was then referred to the Finance Committee. Mr. Fisk moved that when Council adjourn it be to meet Saturday evening January 4th, at 8 o'clock. It was so ordered.

Mr. Dumont offered a resolution that $13,000 be drawn to meet the work on the sewers. The resolution prevailed. Mr. Dumont reported on the Madison avenue extension, stating that the report of the Commissioners appointed showed that $16,800 damages were assessed and $2,900 benefits. He thought the figures were out of proportion and moved that it be returned to the Commissioners for correction which was so ordered.

Mr. Frost offered a resolution that notice be given all property owners that they can now connect with the sewers by securing an order from A. J. Gavett. The resolution was adopted.

Another resolution by Mr. Frost was adopted that gives the Sewer Committee power to employ such help as is needed to operate the sewage beds. Council then adjourned.

SHOT THE BURGLAR.

But the Wounded Robber Got Away, Taking With Him Valuables.

The house of Charles Yingling, sr., was entered at Metuchen, Monday night, by thieves. Mr. Yingling, his wife, and his son Robert went to Baltimore on Saturday to spend a few weeks. Yingling is known to have large sums of money in his house at times, besides other valuables.

Charles Yingling, jr., a younger son, is bookkeeper for George Tobin in this city. He was to come home every night to watch the house while his parents were away. When returning from church, at nine o'clock, he saw two men prowling around, he got David T. Marshall, to stay with him.

At midnight Marshall was awakened by noise downstairs. He ran down with revolver in hand. He saw the window open and a man on the front stoop. Marshall shot at him, but by the time he got outside the man had disappeared. The stone walk in front of the house was covered with blood.

"The Fair Lillian Coming."

The favorite soubrette, Miss Lillian Kennedy, supported by an exceptional strong company, will appear at Stillman Music Hall, for two nights commencing Wednesday, January 8th, in the great play, "She Couldn't Marry Three," with all the original scenic effects, and on the second night will play the great new play, "The Little Rebel." These plays are full of the latest songs, medleys and dances of the day. Notwithstanding that this is an exceptional strong and expensive attraction the prices will be popular, 10, 20 and 30 cents.

Amatuer Theatricals.

Rehearsals are now being held twice a week for "Confusion," the comedy drama which is to be given by the dramatic club of the Plainfield Catholic Club at Music Hall on January 16.

The wife of Mr. D. Robinson, a prominent lumberman of Hartwick, N. Y., was sick with rheumatism for five months. In speaking of it. Mr. Robinson says: "Chamberlain's Pain Balm is the only thing that gave her any rest from pain. For the relief of pain it cannot be beat." Many very bad cases of rheumatism have been cured by it. For sale at 50 cents per bottle by Reynolds' Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

A loud ring of your doorbell in the dead hours of night is alarming. So is the first hollow sound of a cough from one's husband, wife, son or daughter. It is disease knocking, with perhaps a certain visitor waiting not far away. Arrest that cough. Stop it. Stop it at the start. A few day's use of Ely's Pineola Balsam and the danger is past. Relief is immediate; a cure certain. This remedy is rich in the curative principles of the balsams and also contains certain ingredients that are new.

CAMPAIGN FOR CHRIST.

A Religious Revival soon to be Started in This City.

The arrangements are about completed for the union evangelistic services soon to be begun in Plainfield. The committee having the matter in charge have thought it best to keep the public informed as to what is being done, and what is intended. Some time since, the Young People's Societies requested the ministers to take charge of them in a forward movement. This was promptly and favorably responded to, and a committee appointed, consisting of Drs. Barnes, Yerkes and Richards. The committee representing the young people are Messrs. Cornwell, Anthony and Trasvell. A joint meeting was held about three weeks ago, and the work of preparation vigorously taken up. Committees were appointed to provide music, to see that a thorough canvass of the community is made, and to look after other preliminary matters. The services will be begun in the First Methodist church on Front street, on Monday evening, January 13th.

It is not the intention to engage any evangelist, as it was thought that a combined and earnest effort on the part of the ministry and laity would secure the approval and co-operation of all who are desirous of seeing the work of God revive.

The committee are fully alive to the fact that human efforts will not secure the desired results unaided by the Holy Spirit, and they, therefore, earnestly ask that prayer be offered for the Divine blessing.

HORRIBLE VISIONS.

An Uncharitable Woman's Attitude Towards a Male Boarder.

Visions of jails, blue-coated police men, dark cells and the like have been haunting the mind of an innocent citizen of this city for the last two days. About three months ago he boarded with a woman on West Third street. His boarding house keeper had purchased her house fittings on the installment plan and as she was not able to keep up the payments, away went the goods. The boarder did not know that, however, and came to the house one night to find it locked. He spent the night with friends and in the morning found a note directing him to enter through the window and get his property, which he did. Coming out he found a package of pawn tickets on the floor and picked them up. After several days he sent them through Constable Mattox to the ex-boarding house mistress. She promptly threatened to have him arrested for stealing them. The matter was dropped until yesterday, when one of the police force notified the man that he might prepare to go to jail. And now the sight of an officer sends a cold chill down his back.

The Dog Not to Blame.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:

Permit me space in your paper sufficient to correct that part of your statement, in last night's issue, which says, "The dog sprang at Mrs. J. C. Van Dyke causing her fall." We were waiting for her, while the dog was standing to one side, and in Mrs. Van-Dyke's hurry to catch us, she ran into the dog, causing the fall. We are very sorry that the accident happened, but feel justified in making this correction, as the animal in question is not vicious. F. S. Cutter.

Skating Afterwards.

A business meeting of the Epworth League of the First M. E. church will be held Friday evening after which a social will be held. If there is any skating at that time, those attending are requested to bring their skates.

Want a Permanent Copper.

Residents of Netherwood will petition the new city council for a permanent policeman to remain in that district all night.

Major C. T. Picton is manager of the State Hotel, at Denison, Texas, which the traveling men say is one of the best hotels in that section. In speaking of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy Major Picton says: "I have used it myself and in my family for several years, and take pleasure in saying that I consider it an infallible cure for diarrhoea and dysentery. I always recommend it, and have frequently administered it to my guests in the hotel, and in every case it has proven itself worthy of unqualified endorsement. For sale by Reynolds' Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

If suffering with piles, it will interest you to know that DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve will cure them. This medicine is a specific for all complaints of this character, and if instructions which are simple are carried out, a cure will result. We have tested this in numerous cases, and always with like results. It never fails. L. W. Randolph, 143 W. Front st.

WORK OF THE PRIMARY TEACHER.

Important Points for Teaching Juveniles in Sunday Schools.

The first public meeting of the Plainfield Primary Teachers Union was held in the First Baptist church last Monday. A small, but deeply interested audience was present. Miss Beeching, president of the union, presided. The meeting opened with a hymn, after which Rev. Mr. Ferguson, general secretary of the State Sunday-school Union, read a selection of Scripture. Rev. A. H. Lewis, D. D., led in prayer and was followed by Superintendent Case, of the Sunday-school of the First Baptist church who spoke a few words of welcome and introduction. In referring to the primary department, he called it the most important branch of the Sunday-school. After another hymn, Mrs. Samuel Clark, of Jersey City, was introduced and told of her first experiences as a primary teacher. She was one of the very first to introduce the use of the blackboard into primary class teaching. She gave some very interesting examples of work on the blackboard and showed the way in which she has accomplished her wonderful work in that line. The chalk work for next Sunday's lesson she also gave. The principal point she made was that the drawings were not to be artistic, but to mean something to the children, and she recommended the most simple outline sketches.

A question box, filled with queries on the work of the primary teacher, was turned over to Mrs. Barnes, of Newark, who Miss Beeching introduced as "A perfect enclypordia of primary work," and such she proved. The great variety of questions were answered with a perfect readiness, which testified to her familiarity with the work. Her answers were all brief, bright and to the point, and were greatly pleasing to her audience. Among the questions that she touched on were those of a separate room for the primary department, the work of the assistant teachers, the lesson cards and what to do with them, the use of the offerings of the department for only benevolent work, and the use of objects in teaching.

A collection was taken up while Miss Bessie Blair sang the solo "Sowing the Seed," all singing the chorus.

Rev. Mr. Ferguson was the last speaker. His talk was filled with good advice and common sense. He gave his idea of the theory of primary teaching. It was based on four principles, according to his views, which were economy, meaning the adapting of the means to the ends: ignorance, the study of the needs of your own children and "don't know too much;" subordination, the running of the primary department in touch with the rest of the Sunday-school and the church; and dependence on each other.

The meeting closed with a hymn and the benediction.

Ask Control for the Weather.

Manager Charles Runyon, of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company, has made arrangements whereby he will receive official weather reports three times a day—morning, noon and at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Subscribers will therefore be able to get the indications at any time by calling up the central office.

An Artistic Composer.

The music of the carol "Sing, Oh Sing, This Blessed Morn," which was sung at the Christmas festival of the Sunday-school of Grace church, and greatly admired, was composed by Mr. Cleveland Howard. He has also composed another tune for a Christmas hymn and for Lent, which will appear at the proper seasons.

A Driver Resigns.

Stelle Randolph, driver of Hook and Ladder, No. 1, resigned his position today and will return to his home at South Plainfield. Fred Breen, of the United States Express Company, will take his place in the department.

When most needed it is not unusual for your family physician to be away from home. Such was the experience of Mr. J. Y. Schenck, editor of the Caddo, Ind. Ter., Banner, when his little girl, two years of age was threatened with a severe attack of croup. He says: "My wife insisted that I go for the doctor, but as our family physician was out of town I purchased a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, which relieved her immediately. I will not be without it in the future." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Reynolds' Pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

Wife—Here's an account of a man who shot himself rather than suffer the pangs of indigestion. Husband—The fool! Why didn't he take DeWitt's Little Early Risers? I used to suffer as bad as he did before I commenced taking these little pills. L. W. Randolph, 143 W. Front st.

FIGURES AND OBSERVATIONS

EX-MAYOR SAUNDERS INTELLIGENTLY DISCUSSES CONSOLIDATION.

He Contends That the Consummation of the Movement Would Result in Many Benefits—Comparison of the Tax Rates.

Ex-Mayor William L. Saunders, of the borough, furnishes the following facts, figures and observations with reference to the consolidation of city and borough:

I regret that your correspondent who signed his letter "Borough Taxpayer" did not give his name. I am averse to newspaper controversies, especially with anonymous writers. He is doubtless honest in his statements, but he is mistaken in his figures and if he will give his name it will afford me pleasure to compare figures with him. The interests of Plainfield and North Plainfield being identical it follows that each will be benefited by consolidation. This is true from an economic standpoint, as well as from considerations of public safety and welfare, good government, peace and prosperity.

The only think little difference between the taxes of Plainfield and North Plainfield. A tax rate is a very deceptive thing. No comparison of tax rates is just that does not consider the assessed valuation. Based on equal valuation the figures show that taxes in Plainfield are somewhat lower than in North Plainfield. In 1890, we had a low valuation in the Borough and a high rate. This rate was about $2.34 on the hundred, including the special school tax. The year following the valuation was put up and the rate down. The figures are as follows:

1891, tax rate $1.50 on 100, special school tax'd
1892, "	"	$1.79	"	"
1893, "	"	$1.88	"	"
1894, "	"	$1.98	"	"
1895, "	"	$2.06	"	"

It will be seen that our tax rate has shown a steady increase during the past five years. It is true also that our valuations have fluctuated considerably, but this only shows the mistake of comparing taxes in two places based on rates alone.

Elston M. French, who is interested in property on both sides of the brook, favors consolidation and produces the following figures which show that taxes are higher in North Plainfield than in the city:

North Plainfield—Year 1894.

Valuation at 50 cents	$1,000
Assessed valuation—40 cents	800
Rate at $1.98	11.88

Plainfield—Year 1894.

Valuation at 100 cents	$1,000
Assessed valuation—90 cents	900
Rate at $2.06	12.36

If North Plainfield were assessed at 50 cents valuation, as Plainfield is, the rate would be 2.376 per $100, which is higher than the rate in Plainfield by .156 per $100. Comparing the year 1895 we have:

North Plainfield.

Amount of property	$1,000
Assessed valuation	800
Rate $2.22	17.76

Plainfield.

Amount of property	$1,000
Assessed valuation	900
Rate $2.35	21.15

When based on equal valuation the comparison is as follows:

North Plainfield	$2,672
Plainfield	2,350
Excess in North Plainfield for each $100	$ 1.83
Excess on $1,000	1.83

In comparing tax bills it must be borne in mind that the item "city" tax which is .50 on the $100, can not be compared with "borough" tax which appears at .20 on the $100. To the "borough" tax should be added:

Board of Health	.03
Road tax	.30
Light	.32
Total	.65
Adding "borough" tax	.20
	.85

We have .65 on the hundred as compared with .50 in Plainfield. These figures show that even with the borough's higher valuation her tax rate for actual municipal expenses is higher than that of Plainfield. Were it not for the county and school taxes, the fire department and the library there would be no question about the fact of lower taxes in the city. The county tax even at the unequal valuation is only 11 cents to the $100 higher in Plainfield. This is probably due in part to the good Union county roads which we all enjoy, and of which we should be proud. Plainfield school taxes are but 10 cents per $100 higher, a figure that hardly represents the advantage of a High School which the borough does not possess. The library tax is but 5 cents on $100. Fire department and poor taxes are slightly larger in the city. We have a good fire department in the borough, but it is not equal to that in the city. Our police are all right as far as they go, but they are "like angel visits, few and far between."

A BATTLE FOR WATER

FIERCE STRUGGLE BETWEEN AN ELEPHANT AND TWO TIGERS.

The "Rogue" Took Possession of the Pool, and His Claim Was Not Disputed Until the Thirsty Tigers Came on the Scene An Excited Guide Spoiled the Fun.

The tiger hunter does not hunt at random for his game. He knows that in the heat of the day the great cat sleeps the hours away in the deepest solitude he can find. His bed may be in the dense jungle, where he must worm his way in and out like a serpent, or in some dark ravine splitting the hills and offering him a hundred spots where the tawny hide will blend up by the rays of the sun since the hills were created. When the sun goes down and darkness follows its setting, then the royal beast opens his eyes, yawns and stretches, and after a few snarls and growls lastly leaves his lair in search of supper. He may cross a dozen streams, but he will not lap at the water. It is only after he has eaten his fill and is ready to retire and sleep again that a great thirst seizes him, and he seeks the nearest creek or pool and plunges his head in until he must shut his eyes as he laps enough water to satisfy the thirst of an ox.

And then when the hunter knows this as well as the tiger know that the largest animal on earth is as crafty and cunning and far more timid than the fox. If there is danger in the air, he may thirst until his mouth grows hot, but he will not leave the shelter of the forest to drink until after midnight. Then he makes his way through thicket and over fallen trees up hill and down more quietly than the hyena who follows after. When they are in twos and threes and more, the tiger who leads the way to the pool will skulk about, spitting and snarling, and wait for them to depart, but when there is only one the royal beast will assert his right to drink where he pleases and as long as he will.

After riding for two hours our native guide led us to a water hole on the edge of a great forest. During the rainy season it was a lake covering 20 acres of ground. In the dry season it was little better than a mud hole, but furnished the only water for miles around. We saw the track of the elephant, buffalo, deer and wild hog and doubted not that the tiger, panther, hyena and jackal came to the same pool to slake their thirst.

Ere the sun went down we had built our platform among the trees, eaten our supper and prepared to pass the night as comfortably as possible. We cared nothing for elephant, buffalo or deer. It was a tiger we had come to kill, and nothing else. He would not appear until long after midnight the two of us slept and left it to the darkness to watch and wake us at the proper hour. About 12 o'clock he whispered to us that a "rogue" elephant—an outlaw from the herd and more to be feared than the tiger—had come down from the forest and taken possession of the pool. Standing in the center of it, he was trying to frighten all other comers away. We watched him for a few minutes and then crept again, and an hour later the native whispered in our ears:

"Sahib, it is time. The rogue is still here, but the tiger has undoubtedly grown quiet. That means that a tiger is coming to drink. I think he will come by the path over the hill."

It was hours yet to daybreak, but we had the light of moon and stars and could see everything almost as well as by daylight. It is never quiet in an Indian forest by night except when the tiger moves about. Then the very tree toads and insects seem to be warned of his presence and hush their notes for a time. The elephant kept standing like a block of stone, his eyes fastened on the crest of the hill spoken of by the native, and for three or four minutes at a time was so profound that we could hear our watches ticking. Then the head of the tiger appeared above the hill, and half a minute later the beast came slowly and steadily down. He was a full grown male, and he was followed by his mate. There were defiance and contempt in their very gait as they slouched along, and before reaching the pool each gave utterance to a vicious growl to warn the elephant that they were not to be trifled with. He stood so quietly that you would have thought him asleep, and for a moment the tigers sat down on the edge of the pool and glared at him and struck out with their paws as if to have an angry cat. As he did not move, they lowered their heads to lap at the water, but at the first sound the rogue uttered a shrill scream and dashed at them.

We had looked to see the tigers stand, but his terrific rush frightened them for the moment, and they ran away, closely pursued to the top of the hill by the trumpeting elephant. After five minutes he slowly returned to take his place in the pool, his head held high and proud. The watchers when the tigers, perhaps ashamed of their fight, came bounding down and upon him. As he wheeled to meet them and sweep the enemy off with his trunk one sprang upon his forehead and bit and dug and raked him, and the other slighted on his left hip and tried the same tactics. The elephant made a rush into a grove of young trees, and the tigers were swept to the ground. Then he came crashing back in search of them. Huge as he was in bulk, his movements were wonderfully quick. With a sweep of his trunk he rolled one tiger over and over and into the water, and he was thrown to the other, which had mounted his back, he dropped down and rolled over and was up again before we had watched the trick. The beast knocked into the water swam out and together the pair again attacked. They fastened to his hind legs, they bounded upon his back, they were under and over him as cats play with a ball. We heard their heads and claws tearing at his tough hide, and we heard them yelp with pain as he brushed them off or dealt blows with his trunk. Of a sudden, when the battle was fiercest, the excited native accidentally discharged his gun. There was a growl from the tigers and a shriek of fear from the elephant, and when the smoke had cleared away these was nothing in sight. Tigers and elephant had fled in terror from the presence of man.—St. Louis Republic.

Barbaric Dancing.

The queerest fad the women missionaries have ever encountered is the dancing habit in the Gilbert islands. The climate is salubrious, but warm, so that the native dance by night and sleep during the day. The exercise provokes great hunger and thirst, so that gorging and excessive drinking are the result. The adults neglect and dissipate their youth, the children their schools and everybody the churches. A dancing spell often lasts several months at a time. Both missionaries and merchants try to stop the practice, but thus far with but little success. It seems to be a relic of some forgotten heathen faith or fetichism.—New York Mail and Express.

WONDERS OF LABOR.

Ten Remarkable Works in Masonry and Engineering.

The Stone Trade News considers the ten most remarkable works of human labor:

First.—The pyramids of Egypt, the largest of which, near Cairo, known as the great pyramid, built by Cheops, king of Egypt, took 850,000 men 20 years to build.

Second.—The artificial reservoir—Lake Moeris—built by Amenemha of the twelfth dynasty, which serves to store up the waters of the Nile during the season of floods and distribute them over the land during the dry season. Its circumference was 5,600 furlongs, and on its being allowed to fall into ruin the fertility of the region became to a perhaps extent a thing of the past.

Third.—The Taj Mahal, a tomb erected at Agra, in Hindustan, by Shan Jehan, over his queen, Noor Jehan. It is built of the purest white marble, and yet seems so airy that when seen from a distance it is like a fabric of mist and sunbeams, while its great dome soaring up, a silvery bubble about to burst in the sun, and even after you have touched it and climbed to its station seems to authorize a doubt as to the reality. It cost over £3,000,000.

Fourth.—The temple of Baalbec, in the erection of which stones 63 feet long, 20 feet broad and 15 feet thick have been used—more prodigious masses than have ever elsewhere been moved by human power and much exceeding in size the stones used in the pyramids.

Fifth.—The temple of Karnak, described by Fergusson as the noblest work of architecture in the world, was constructed by the hand of man. It covers twice the area of St. Peter's, at Rome, and undoubtedly is one of the finest buildings in the world.

Sixth.—The great wall of China, 1,250 miles in length. It is 20 feet in height and in thickness 25 feet at the base and 15 feet at the top.

Seventh.—The Eiffel tower, erected in the grounds of the 1889 Paris exhibition, 984 feet high.

Eighth.—The Suez canal, with 88 miles of waterway, connecting the Mediterranean and the Red seas, and forming the principal route to India. It cost more than £17,000,000, and 175,000 out of 400,000 shares were purchased by and belong to the British government.

Ninth.—The railway bridge (the largest cantilever bridge in the world) over the Forth, with two spans each of 1,700 feet, erected at a cost of nearly £4,000,000.

Tenth.—The leaning tower of Pisa, which deviates 13 feet from the perpendicular.

The Adventures of Rochefort.

M. Henri Rochefort has written a characteristic introduction to his "Adventures of My Life." He describes the extraordinary vicissitudes of his existence—each day a minister, with enormous power; a month or two later on his way to a convict settlement on the other side of the world. But it is the ups and downs in the lives of others, and notably in the lives of great painters, that Rochefort depicts in the most interesting way. He lived in the same house with Corot and has seen the great master trampling in rage upon the pictures he could find no one to purchase. He has watched Millet at work in Notre Dame de Loretto, at a little dealer's, to whom he had just offered a picture for 900 francs which Rochefort had since seen sold for 87,000 francs. He published a letter of Millet containing the following passage: "I dare not pass before the butcher's." There are not 2 shillings in the house, and this has been my condition for some 20 years." Laughing at the English love of hunting and shooting, Rochefort has seen a man out shooting each morning in the London picture dealers' shops and how he recently unearthed a superb Gericault, which was given to him for a mere nothing.—Saturday Review.

Thought Without Reverence.

"Shall your science proceed in the small chink lighted or even oil lighted underground worship of logic alone, and man's head become an arithmetical mill, wherein memory is the hopper, and mere tables of sines and tangents, codification and treatises of what you call political economy are the flour? and what is that science, which the scientific head alone, were it screwed off, and, like the doctor's fly, preserved in spirits, and fed to keep it alive, could prosecute without shadow of a heart, but one other of the mechanical and mental handicrafts for which the scientific head, having a soul in it, is too noble an organ? I mean that thought without reverence is barren, perhaps poisonous, at best dies, like cockery, with the day that saw it forth; does not live like sowing in successive tilths and wider spreading harvests, bringing food and plenteous increase to all time.—Carlyle.

Polite Reproof.

A lady once ventured to publicly reprove a well known fashionable society man for his overfondness of good living. The gentleman made himself conspicuous by the way he gorged himself at a dinner to which he had been invited. The lady had been invited. To make matters worse, he was sufficiently unwise or thoughtless enough to attempt to excuse himself with the remark that "in eating well I praise the food," thereby using a well known quotation.

It was an opportunity not to be lost by the somewhat disgusted and witty lady sitting at his elbow

"Really, sir," she observed, with a sweet smile, "you will not carry praise to the point of flattery."

Her Query.

The Boston Budget tells a story of a little girl who went to church on a recent Sunday with her mother, a devout member and regular attendant of the Episcopal church. The little girl sat very quiet and demure through all the long service, but her quick little ears and bright little brain were not so quiet as was indicated. After the service she looked up into her mother's face, and, "Mamma," she asked earnestly, "they say: 'Ah men' so much. Why don't they say, 'Ah lady?'"

Notice to the Conductor.

Chicago Passenger—I say, conductor, did you notice my ticket?

Conductor—Um! I don't remember it, sir.

"My ticket is for St. Louis."

"Well?"

"Well, I don't want you to forget to stop there, that's all."—New York Weekly.

The best rules to form a young man are to talk little, to hear much, to reflect alone upon what has passed in company, to distrust one's opinion, and to value others that deserve it.—Sir W. Temple.

THE INCREASED TAX RATE.

A WRITER PROTESTS AGAINST HEAVY MUNICIPAL EXPENSE.

He Claims That Taxes Are Far Greater in Plainfield Than in New York, Philadelphia or Chicago—Argument of Figures

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—I wish to call special attention to the enormous and alarming increase in our taxes for the last quarter of a century. These figures (which will not lie) should arrest the serious and candid attention of every taxpayer in the city of Plainfield.

In 1870 the total valuation of taxable property in the city of Plainfield was a fraction over $2,000,000; the tax rate $1.86 per $100, yielding a fraction under $58,000. Even these figures were considered oppressive at that time, and in '71 or '72, I think, an independent citizens' ticket was formed with John H. Evans as Mayor, and as a result the tax rate was reduced to $1.43 per $100 in 1880, yielding $61,000, (only $3 000 more) than that of 1870 on a valuation increased to say $1,300,000, the lowest rates of taxation ever established in Plainfield.

While the valuation continued to increase at the rate of $100,000 a year, the taxes gradually increased again up to 1886, when on a total valuation of about $5,000,000, and yielding over $90,000,000, the tax rate was increased to $1.86 per $100. In '88 and '89 they were still further pushed up to $2.18 per $100 and yielding a total income of about $122,000. The plea was then made that our assessment rate of valuation was entirely too low, and the proper way would be to increase that and thus reduce the ratio of taxes. Let us see the result. Fifty per cent. was added to the value of taxable property in the years 1890 and 1891. The total valuation of property was pushed up to $6,400,000 in '91, while the tax rate was run up to $2.21 per $100, and the total income to say $140,000; this amount was an enormous increase, but what do we have today?

For 1895 the total amount of taxable property is increased to $7,200,000, nearly 2½ times the amount of 1870, and the tax rate pushed up to $2.32, yielding the enormous total of about $167,000 subtracted from the pockets of the citizens of Plainfield. A proportionate advance in a few years would force our property subject to taxation to say $10,000,000, and a proportionate increase on the tax rate would probably reach $3.00 on $100. This is a frightful increase, and as already stated it challenges the serious attention of every citizen and taxpayer of the city of Plainfield.

It will be admitted that the municipal government of the cities of Chicago, Philadelphia and New York are the most corrupt of any cities in the known world. What the rate of taxation is in Chicago I am not able to say. In Philadelphia at the present moment an examination is going on into the monstrous corruption that has prevailed in that city. As to New York, we all know what Tammany has done for that ill fated city, and while I have not the exact figures before me, my impression is that the tax rate of these two cities is less than $2.00 per $100, say $1.85 to $1.90. Without making this communication too long, I may in a future one attempt to show what the effect of this has been, and will be on real estate in Plainfield and its influence on deterring others from coming in and being citizens with us in the future. M.

STRUCK THE BRIDGE.

Another Central Railroad Brakeman Injured at Fanwood.

The Fanwood bridge over the tracks of the New Jersey Central Railroad had another victim last evening and had he been two inches taller it would have been death to the trainman. A west-bound freight train, drawn by engine 85, went under the bridge at about 9:30 and E. T. Walton, of Mauch Chunk, a brakeman, was standing on top of one of the cars when the edge of the bridge struck him just on the top of the head making a large scalp wound. He was taken to North Avenue station and Dr. J. T. Fritts was called. He sewed up the wound and the injured man was sent home.

Observing Mr. Huff.

While on his way home Christmas eve at about twelve o'clock, Horace Huff, of West Fifth street, noticed a long string of fancy baskets hanging in front of Van Emburgh & Son's store. Although the store was closed he found Mr. Van Emburgh there and told him of the baskets which were immediately put in a place of safety. They were valued at about $10 and would undoubtedly have mysteriously disappeared had not Mr. Huff seen them placed out of the reach of night prowlers.

Frightened No More.

The drilling of Captain Ross' Home Guards in the Revere House office every evening, and the threatening war talk nightly in the Red Parlor, frightens U. S. Consul Demarest no more. He was offered a transfer to a consulate in France this morning.—The Brockville Times.

A HORSE IN COURT.

Not the Steed Himself, But His Rightful Owner Was There Declared.

The case of David Anguerbauer against W. L. Hetfield in execution to try the right of property, which came up in Justice Newcorn's court Thursday afternoon, was the result of another case wherein W. L. Hetfield sued J. H. Blimm, Jr., in Justice Mosher's court for the sale of a horse. At that time judgement was given W. L. Hetfield, and an execution was at once issued for David Anguerbauer, as he claimed that the horse belonged to him, having purchased it June 14, 1895, prior to the suit. Justice Newcorn granted his application for a venure to try the right of property, and the case came up yesterday before the following jury: C. M. Fine, Henry Drake, H. Hatch, Isaac Runyon, A. P. Miller and A. C. Rogers.

Lawyer H. C. Runyon appeared for the complainant and W. L. Hetfield for himself. For the former, J. H. Blimm, Jr., as witness, was sworn and testified to his part of the deal, while Anguerbauer offered in evidence a bill of sale. On the other side J. E. Mosher and W. R. Mattox were sworn as witnesses. W. L. Hetfield based his claim on the admission of Mr. Blimm to sell the horse for the grocery bill and his admitting he owned the animal. The case went to the jury and after two hours deliberation they returned with the verdict that the horse belonged to David Anguerbauer.

AN EVENING AT HEARTS.

A Charming Social Gathering in Washington Park Last Evening.

A delightful social gathering was held at the home of Miss Kate Overton, of Rockview avenue, last Friday, in honor of her friend, Miss Gertrude Eddey. The first part of the evening passed very pleasantly in a game of progressive hearts, at which Miss Alice Thompson and William Coriell proved to be the most successful, while Miss Sadie Douglass and Edward Petrie won the booby prizes after a close contest. The rest of the evening was spent in dancing and conversation, while dainty refreshments were passed toward the close of the evening. Besides Miss Overton and her guest, there were present the Misses Grace E. Overton, Grace Petrie, Edith Lane, Lulu French, Sarah Douglass, Laura Wilkins, of Rochester, and Messrs. Carlos C. Gullup, George A. Horne, Walter Douglass, William Coriell, Raymond A. McGee and Edward Petrie.

AN UNLUCKY JUMP.

Peter Blimm Tries to Mount a Fire Carriage and Breaks His Leg.

Peter Blimm, of Somerset street, met with a serious accident Friday when the alarm of fire was given. He ran from his home to the corner of Front and Somerset streets, and reached there just as Alert hose carriage was passing the latter street. In his attempt to jump on the rear of the carriage his left foot turned over and he was thrown with such force as to fracture the leg near the ankle. He was picked up from the street by his friends and taken home, where a physician was summoned. He found, as above stated, that the bone was fractured, and gave the proper treatment. Mr. Blimm will be laid up for sometime as a result of the accident. He is not a fireman.

Quiet Home Wedding.

A very pretty home wedding was held at the residence of Charles A. Hunter on Tuesday at noon, when Miss Jennie Adele Hunter was united in marriage to Edward Follensbee Many, of New York. The wedding was a very private one and only the most intimate friends of the couple were present. C. A. Hunter, Jr., brother of the bride, was best man, was best man. Rev. W. R. Richards, D. D., performed the ceremony, assisted by Rev. William A. Masker, of New York, an uncle of the bride. Holly, smilax and cut flowers were tastefully arranged about the interior of the house. A delightful wedding dinner followed the ceremony. The newly wedded couple started on a three weeks trip through the south. On their return they will take up their residence in New York.

AGAINST THE CONSOLIDATION.

A BOROUGHITE WHO IS OPPOSED TO BECOMING A PART OF THE CITY

He Writes That the Advantages to be Gained in Government Are Not Worth the Increase in Taxes—A Bit of Sarcasm.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—The letter signed M, in your issue of last evening, in reference to the city tax rate, is indeed timely and furnishes to the borough taxpayer the strongest kind of an argument against union of the city and borough. In fact, the sentiment in favor of union seems to be almost wholly on the city side. So far, ex-Mayor Saunders is the only taxpayer who has spoken in favor of union and his reasoning shows that he is not familiar with the facts. He says that if union takes place the Borough taxpayer will get the benefit of the money he spends in the city.

On the contrary, the difference in rates (26 cents on $100 of valuation) this year would compel an increase of over $5,000 more than at present, and unless all signs fail the difference will become double what it is now. Any borough taxpayer can tell exactly how much it would have cost him this year by multiplying the valuation of his property by 26 cents on the $100. This represents the cost. Can we hope for corresponding benefit? The borough has equal postal and water facilities, the same light, equal fire protection, just as efficient, and as far handsome, police force and far better roads. True we have no library nor high school. Would they be worth $5,000 a year to us? True we have no sewer beds. No! nor the disgrace of having put them directly under the nose of a neighboring town. Do we want to help pay the Union county road bonds, the school bonds and the sewer bonds, for the sake of saying there is no dividing line? Give the people on this side a chance to vote on the question and they will say no with emphasis unmistakable.

Borough Taxpayer.

THE GUN FROM PLAINFIELD.

It Fell Into Reckless Hands and Killed a Young Boy.

Sometime ago Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., had an old army musket in their rooms, which contained a charge of long standing. Everyone was cautioned not to snap the trigger.

The gun belonged to a Mr. Lum, a resident of this city at that time. When Mr. Lum moved to Greenpoint, L. I., the gun went along. His son together with some other boys in the neighborhood formed an organization known as the Greenpoint Rangers and the gun was brought into use. They would play Wild West, burglars, etc. The other day they were playing burglars, a boy named Lawless taking the part of the burglar, while the gun was in the hands of a boy named Babbington. The scene was around a woodshed. As Lawless was attempting to escape the latter boy aimed the gun and pulled the trigger. It went off and tore the entire left side of Lawless' face off, killing him instantly. The boy who did the shooting is frantic. He was arrested at once.

GIFT GIVING AND RECEIVING.

IT STILL CONTINUES WITH THE LOCAL SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

Christmas Exercises Held in Many of the Church and Chapels Last Evening—The Various Programmes and Participants.

From The Press of Dec. 28.

There was not sufficient room in the chapel of the First Presbyterian church last evening for the large crowd that desired to witness the Christmas entertainment. A beautiful Christmas tree, illuminated with incandescent electric lights arranged by A. Y. Searing, was a decided feature, Mr. Lounsbury, the Superintendent of the Sundy-school, made a most excellent master of ceremonies. After a recitation by Miss Edna Burr, and the singing of carols by the scholars, a delightful canta entitled, "The Toy Makers of Wonderland," was rendered in which the following scholars took part: Beatrice Miner, Wm. Hepburn, Harry Messerschmidt, Donald Bechtel, Norman Hill, Jennie Dunham, Louise Kline, Leah Hammond, Lulu Kline, Martha Kline, Winnie Hammond, Ella Atchison, Belle Williams, Harry Hazeltine, Leslie Badford, Ethel Laing, Vincent Miner, Flossie Martin, Mary Dunham, Minnie Atchison, Marion Englehardt, Bertha Englehardt, William Mehl, Mamie Mehl, Minnie Line, and Edna Martin.

Rev. C. E. Herring then made a few appropriate remarks, which was followed with singing by the school. Mr. Lounsbury on behalf of the King's Daughters presented Rev. Mr. Herring with a very costly pair of gold linked cuff buttons and a candy cane about four feet long. The latter presented organist Wm. E. MacClymont with a silver mounted baton. Assistant Superintendent Mrs. Howard Pope received a handsome onyx lamp stand and banquet lamp in recognition of her faithful services. E. M. Case was the recipient of a pocket-book from his class. In conclusion those in charge, Mrs. Howard Pope, Miss Bessie Blair, Miss Maag, Miss Kellogg, Miss Messerschmidt, Miss Pruden, Miss Agnes Blair, L. L. Remsen, H. B. Lounsbury and A. Y. Searing, distributed dolls, games and candy to the scholars. Miss Remsen was the pianist.

The delightful weather filled Hope chapel to overflowing last evening with those who came to attend the Christmas festivities. There was an especially large attendance of the Sunday-school scholars and a number of their parents and friends came to to see the fun.

The programme was as follows: Selection by an instrumental quartette composed of Gilbert Lovell, Lindley Hillman, Charles Davis and Walter Serrell; song by Miss Nettie Thompson; reading by Rev. Mr. Newell; selection by instrumental quartette; surprise by "Trilby;" song by Miss Nettie Thompson.

The gifts and candy and fruit were then distributed among the young people.

"Trilby" was a large cloth elephant, the motive power for which was furnished by two young men, which performed some most remarkable feats.

Santa Claus appeared at the close and distributed the gifts. He was impersonated by B. W. Hand.

The committee in charge of the entertainment consisted of J. S. Schoonmaker, Fred. Andrews, Miss Stewart, Miss Page, Miss Nash, John H. Coles and Emil Troll.

As usual, the Sunday-school scholars of the Society of Friends on Washington avenue had a most enjoyable Christmas entertainment at the meeting house last evening under the direction of Superintendent Mrs. Margaret F. Vail. The following programme was rendered: Twenty-Third Psalm, school; recitations, Ethel Lorton, Horace Vail, Clifford Vail; readings, Mabel Vail, Leslie Hallock, Caroline Hallock; recitations, Anna Morrison, Charles Peterson, Bessie Pound; recitations were also given by the Superintendent, Mrs. Vail, and Miss. Grace Vail, of Dunellen, after which Aaron M. Powell made a short address. The scholars and their friends were then served with an abundance of ice cream and cake.

The Sunday-school room of the First Baptist church was filled to overflowing with the scholars and their friends last evening, at which time the Christmas entertainment was held. Secretary Charles Smith was in charge and announced the several numbers. The exercises opened with an amusing reading by Miss Grace Cooley, after which Howard Durand, of New York, appeared and for over an hour entertained the audience with humorous stories, trick violin playing, ventriloquism, bell playing, etc.

The programme was brought to a close with a finely rendered solo by Wm. N. Runyon, and candy was then distributed to the scholars.

The primary department of the First Baptist church Sunday-school had a jolly good time yesterday afternoon at the church when they presented a cantata entitled, "An Old-Time Christmas Party." It included singing by the school; reading of Scripture, Mrs. Harold Serrell; prayer and singing, school; dialogue, Harry Woodland, May Batchelor and Elsie Brokaw; song, Little Givers, school; recitations, Josephine and Marguerite Serrell; song, The Christmas Tree, semi-chorus; recitation, Santa Claus; recitations, Carrie Bird and Nellie La-Rue; song, Christ at Bethlehem, semi chorus; recitation, Jeremiah Twining, 3rd; song, Bell Ringing, semi-chorus; recitation, May Batchelor, dialogue, Mamie Coddington, Emma Bowers, Nettie Wise, Anna Allen; recitation, Mrs. Powlison; recitations, Helen Smalley, Jessie Clawson, Harry Allen, Russell Macintyre, Edna Cronce, Wallace Pierce, Cory Adams, Beulah VanWinkle; song, Away in a Manger. Santa Claus then pleased the scholars by distributing dolls, candy and games to them. Those in charge were Superintendent Mrs. Powlison, assistants Mrs. Harold Serrell, Mrs. J. VanName, Miss Susie Woodland and Miss Eudora Grant.

The children enjoy a good time as well as their elders and those of the primary department of the Sunday-school at the Methodist church were given a very pleasant time in Vincent chapel yesterday afternoon when their Christmas festival was held. The programme consisted of carols by the children, recitations by Dorothy Douglass, Edwin Springer, Marian Overton and Gladys Peck. Miss Grace E. Overton read a Christmas story. Then followed the grand march, during which the children were presented with fancy paper caps and then all were marched to one of the rooms in the rear where a delightful supper was served to the little people. Those who assisted in serving them were Mrs. J. R. Joy, Miss Bertha Whitney, Miss Penny, Miss Douglass, Miss Edna French, Miss Maud French, Mrs. S. M. Clark and J. W. Jackson.

A delightful entertainment, pretty decorations and a large crowd made the Christmas festival of the Monroe Avenue chapel last evening a great success. The programme was divided into two parts, the first part of which was furnished by local talent. It was as follows: Carol, "Carol Loudly, Carol Sweetly" by school; prayer, dialogue "On Christmas Night," Agnew Dodd, Albert Cowling and Fred Phillips; recitation, "A Message to Santa Claus," by Miss Van Ness; carol, "Ring out, Sweet Bells," by school; recitation, "To Santa Claus in France," by Miss Kline; quintata, "An Old Christmas Eve," Walter McGee, Ella Rogers, Ada Rogers, Weona Dodd, Etta Randolph, Lulu Randolph, Sadie Elliott, Vaughn McGee and Stephen Aldrich.

Mr. Lyons, of New York, acted as entertainer in the last part of the evening and made a great success of his share. He first gave a "Punch and Judy" show, introducing several novel features and keeping his audience in a roar of laughter. He then showed his expertness in conjuring and astonished everyone by eating oakum, then spitting fire and smoke, and finally removing several several yards of paper and a bone three feet long from his mouth. The programme devolved much credit on the committee which arranged it, and was composed of the Misses Grace Palmer, Linda Foster, Hattie King, and Frank Hatson and Fred Phillips.

The decorations were especially pleasing and consisted of greens artistically draped about the chapel while a large evergreen star lighted by different colored electric lights hung over the platform. The committee in charge of decorating was composed of Messrs Stafford, Praed and Quick. Mr. Quick was the electrician of the committee and is deserving of special credit for the successful addition of electric lights to the other decorations.

A Beautiful Sight.

Perhaps the handsomest Christmas tree in Plainfield was a large one at the home of Mr. L. E. Cole, 78 Duer street, donated and personally decorated by Fred C. Cassell, of Brooklyn, in honor of the children of Mr. and Mrs. William Cadmus, one of whom, Edna, was named by Mrs. Cassell. As Mr. Cassell's business in Murray street, New York, is that of furnishing decorations for Christmas trees, no expense was spared in decorating the one above mentioned. The many friends and neighbors who looked on it last evening, lighted and decorated as it was, were loud in their praise of its magnificent effect.

Firemen Thanked.

To the Editor of the Daily Press:—Will you kindly allow us space in your columns to thank our firemen for the very quick and efficient service rendered us in extinguishing the fire that occurred in the City Mills last night. We think that a delay of five minutes would have caused the destruction of the entire property and, as the insurance was very light, we are especially grateful to the fire department.

AN OLD COMMUTER KILLED.

LOUIS B. MENGER WALKED ON THE TRACK TO HIS DEATH.

Struck By a West-Bound Passenger Train and Thrown Under a Moving Freight—Taken to the Hospital Where He Died.

There seems to be an unusually long run of casualties on the Central Railroad of New Jersey this winter, and Saturday another victim was added to the already long list. Louis B. Menger, of 437 East Fifth street, was fatally injured by being run over by a freight train. Mr. Menger is a regular commuter and started this morning with the intention of taking the 8:27 train. Instead of going down Fifth street to Watchung avenue and thence to the North avenue station, he took the short cut through Washington, Fourth and Church streets, which is frequently used by the commuters of his neighborhood. The west-bound train which is due at Plainfield at 8:16, drawn by engine 374, was just approaching as Mr. Menger started to cross the tracks. He crossed the first two without trouble and seeing a freight train on the north outside track he started to walk down the west-bound passenger track. The engineer of engine 374 applied the air brakes and sheet the whistle furiously, but the old man in front did not hear until too late. He was standing over the right-hand rail when the engine struck him and he pitched headlong under the wheels of the moving freight train on the next track. In another instant the wheels struck the back part of his head, opening a large wound, and crushed his right arm. The accident occurred about about seventy five feet East of the Watchung Avenue bridge and in full view of those at the North Avenue station. He was picked up unconscious and carried to the station in the baggage car of the train. He was taken to the telegraph office where Officer McCue discovered a commutation ticket and a card that identified him as Louis B. Menger.

The ambulance was sent for and conveyed the injured man to the hospital where he died shortly after 9 o'clock.

Mr. Menger was an old man, partially bald and with long white hair. He was about seventy-five years old. He and his wife have been living with their daughter, Mrs. Dubriskai, since April when they moved here from Brooklyn. He has two sons and two daughters living but Mrs. Dabriskai is the only one residing in this city.

As soon as the accident occurred and his identity learned, his family were notified at once and his daughter arrived at the hospital in time to be present at the death of her father. His wife was almost prostrated by the shock.

The Germans was danced, Miss Opdyke and her brother, Howard Opdyke leading. Among those present were: The Misses Shepard, Holly, VanBoskerck, Tracy, Stewart, McCready, Smalley, Whiton, Durand, Walz, Cooley, Evans, Waring, and Messrs. Shepard, VanBoskerck, Percy Stewart, Rowland Cox, Jr., Clifford McGee, Harry Talmadge, Walter Murray, Dr. B. VanD. Heeges, Irving West, Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. VanBuskirk, Mr. and Mrs. John Doul Miller, Mr. and Mrs Howard Tracy.

WINNERS AT EUCHRE.

The Young People's Club of Dunellen and North Plainfield Meets.

The Young People's Progressive Euchre Club, of Dunellen and North Plainfield, met last Friday at the home of the Misses Benton, of Dunellen, and a very pleasant evening was spent. Miss Mattie Barrett and Mrs. William Cadmus, one of whom, Edna, was named by Mrs. Cassell. As Mr. Cassell's business in Murray street, New York, is that of furnishing decorations for Christmas trees, no expense was spared in decorating the one above mentioned. The many friends and neighbors who looked on it last evening, lighted and decorated as it was, were loud in their praise of its magnificent effect.

The next meeting of the club will be held Thursday evening, January 9th, at the home of Miss Janie Churchill, of Dunellen.

Lectured by Mrs. Elwell.

Three lectures by Mrs. Maria Huntington Elwell have been arranged to be held at the home of Mrs. J. K. Myers, 139 East Seventh street, on Tuesdays at 4 o'clock p. m. January 14th. Dorothy Wordsworth's Diary; January 21st, Lowell, as known by his letters; January 28th, The Ethics of Shakespeare, as illustrated by Sear.

ONLY A DREAM.

In future ages which we may not see,
When those that follow have begun to be,
What strange, eventful things will happen then!
And what great thoughts will stir the minds of men!

If Sunday papers keep right on and grow,
They'll cover houses, just like sheets of snow;

But if the houses keep on growing, too,
Perhaps their doors the papers may go through
And there'll be carrier boys of wondrous girth
And then they'll have to have a larger earth.
I need not tell the quick ascent my sight
There sped a future carrier in his flight—
A train of gilded cars up in the sky
That flitted through the air as swallows fly;
The engine made of burnished brass, with wings
That reached toward heaven. They were wonderful things.
And with his hand upon the brake I gazed
Upon the future carrier boy amazed.
Behind him stretched in one long line the cars,
Packed full of papers that had come from Mars
For so immense the printing presses grew
On Mars they had to run the papers through.
On came the train, and as it hovered round

Assistants dropped the papers to the ground,
Supplying newsstands. Then from door to door
The train proceeded, dropping thousands more.
So Interested I became, alas!
I did not think of just what route 'twould pass
Until the train came over me. Great Scott!
I tried to run, but found that I could not.
And then I woke, supposing I was dead.
That boy had dropped a paper on my head!

TOM MASSON.

You Must Not Waste Time.

"Dost thou love life?" asked Benjamin Franklin. "Then do not squander time, for time is the stuff life is made of."

Once when Franklin was in business as a printer and bookseller in Philadelphia a man came into his place and dawdled about, examining the books exposed for sale. At last, having made up his mind as to what he wanted, he inquired the price of the book chosen, and the clerk said $1.

"Can't you take less than that?" said the man in feigned surprise. "One dollar is the price," said the clerk.

But the would-be purchaser was not satisfied. "I want to see Mr. Franklin about this," he said. "Mr. Franklin is very busy in the presscom," said the clerk. "But I must see him," said the man.

So the clerk called Franklin, and of him the man impatiently asked the question, "One dollar and a quarter," was the philosopher's reply. "But your clerk offered it to me for $1," protested the man. "Then," said Franklin, "and I could better have afforded to have taken $1 than to have left my work at this time."

"Well," said the man, "what is the very best you can do in making a price on this volume?" "One dollar and a half," said Franklin. The man's brows grew wide. "Why, you said only $1.35 a moment ago." "So I did," said Franklin, "and I could have better afforded to take that sum then than $1.50 now. The man paid the price without any further quarreling. He had learned a lesson that Franklin wished to teach—that time is too valuable to waste.

Sentiments of Famous Men.

Here are a few wise sayings:

When Peter Cooper was asked at an advanced age how he had accomplished so much and had preserved his strength of body and mind, he said, "I always found something to keep me busy."

A. Bronson Alcott crystallized a great truth when he said, "We mount to heaven mostly on the ruins of our cherished schemes, finding our failures were successes."

Charles Dickens uttered a sentiment that every young man who desires success would do well to lay to heart, "The one serviceable, safe, remunerative quality in every calling and pursuit is the quality of attention."

John Wesley showed how foolish it is for one who hope to win to spend their time in fretting when he said, "I dare no more fret than I dare curse and swear."

Sir Walter Raleigh, when asked how he managed to accomplish so many and such diverse things in such brief times as he required for accomplishment, said, "When I have anything to do, I go and do it."

The everlasting truth of this character is sure to win success was put in concrete form when William M. Evarts said of a famous preacher, "The man behind the sermon is the secret of John Hall's power."

John Stuart Mill showed how possible it is for a man to rise above his environments in these words, "Though character is formed by circumstances, our own decrees can do much to shape these circumstances."

THE PASSING OF THE NEW YEAR.

These Mile Posts on the Journey of Life Fly by Faster One by One.

It has no doubt often occurred to you, fellow traveller on Time's coach, that the milestones of the New Years fly past much faster now than they did in the early stages of your journey.

When an interminably long walk it seemed to be between the first New Year's day of your memory and the second. Perhaps you were 6 or 7 years old then and in school for the first term. If so, New Year's had its sorrow as well as its joy, for it was the last day of the midwinter holidays and next day you had to begin your wrestling with the intellectual arithmetic and the geography and maybe with the elements of its English grammar. Look back now and pity yourself. Do not make the mistake of most of our acquaintances and declare that particular New Year's to have been the happiest of your existence. Pshaw! It was perhaps the most miserable. The fact that you have forgotten your childhood's miseries does not make it true that you were happy.

It was several years after that before the New Year began to move appreciably faster. Perhaps it was not till your sister and your partner's dark eyes began to exchaff you about the silky down upon your upper lip, and your portly, comfortable father, in speaking of some doings of yours of which he did not approve, referred to you as a "foolish young man." Then you noticed the flight of time, I'll be bound. No one had called you a "young man" before. You were ready to forgive the governor's chidings for that. You rejoiced that although you were very young indeed you had yet been called a man.

At that time you had great respect for your own opinions on most matters. You began to shave forthwith, and you felt for the whole world of callow youth, who was of about your own age, "old man." If any one called you "my boy," you felt resentful. He seemed utterly out of place. But you had not yet learned that manhood brings with it certain definite and sometimes heavy responsibilities. It is possible you discovered this significant truth very soon afterward, though perhaps it was not till two or three more New Years had passed that the truth dawned on knowledge came to you with somewhat of a shock—probably pleasant, possibly otherwise. At all events, it was not long after that that you found out that your knowledge was not universal and your wisdom was not infallible.

And ever since the New Years have flown by faster and faster. After awhile your girth grew greater. Then there were lines in parts of your face that had once been smooth. Next the top of your cranium, that was once thick thatched, grew bare and smooth and shining. Glasses came next, and your hands wrinkled up. Then there were twinges in your joints, and what hair was left grew gray, then white. Only yesterday you began to carry a cane—once you carried it for ornament—because you felt the need of walking. Yesterday? you ask. Oh, yes, I remember. It was a good ten years ago, but you see the New Years fly by faster.

What! Are you going to leave the coach? Is your life journey done? You amaze me. I thought you were good for several more New Years. Well, goodby, my boy; goodby.

So he is gone. But, bless me, he was only 78. He was a young man yet. Now, those of you who are left in the coach with me—let us give the new year 1896 a rousing welcome! And may the road between here and 1897 be a smoother one for all of us than was that of 1895!

E. Y. K.

FIRST OF JANUARY RESOLUTIONS.

Notions That, Carried Out, Will Help to Make 1896 a Pleasant Year.

If you wish to avoid one fruitful cause of discomfort during the coming year, make a resolution not to grumble about the weather. Kicking and fault finding never made a hot day cooler or a cold day warmer, but on the other hand, they always intensify the current weather trouble immensely.

If you want to make your husband good natured, resolve to help him to have his own way invariably. He probably will anyhow, and the adoption and carrying out of this resolution will save a whole lot of trouble.

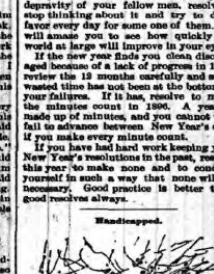
If your wife has got in the habit of asking you for money every day, resolve to make her a weekly allowance and then keep your resolution. You'll be as much surprised by the result as she will be by the resolution.

If you have become disheartened by the depravity of your fellow men, resolve to stop thinking about it and try to do a little missionary work among them. It will amaze you to see how quickly the world at large will improve in your eyes.

If the new year finds you clean discouraged because of a lack of progress in 1895, review the 12 months carefully and see if wasted time has not been at the bottom of your failures. If it has, resolve to make 1896 minutes count in 1896. A year is made up of minutes, and you cannot well fail to advance between New Year's days if you make every minute sound.

If you have had hard work keeping your New Year's resolutions in the past, resolve this year to make none and to conduct yourself in such a way that none will be necessary. Good practice is better than good resolves always.

Handicapped.



Dashaway—Well, uncle, I suppose you will have roast chicken for your New Year's dinner.

Uncle Ebony—No, sah. It's a leetle cold and de chickens dey doan' roost aslong no mo'.

New Year Greeting.

A gude New Year to ane and a',
And many may ye see!
And during a' the years to come,
Oh, happy may ye be.

TOLD BY THE NAILS.

SIGNS BY WHICH A MANICURE IS ABLE TO READ CHARACTER.

Finger Nails That Indicate Love of Luxury and Others That Tell of Melancholy. Study Nails, and You Will Learn Whom to Trust and Whom to Shun.

"Dear me, but you are luxurious in your tastes!" said a pretty little manicure, who does a thriving business in caring for the hands of men as well as those of women. The customer to whom she spoke was a young woman whom the manicure had never seen before.

"And, pray, how do you know that I am luxurious in my tastes?" the customer asked in astonishment and at the same time with much interest.

"Oh, I can tell by your nails. You hear people constantly talking of character being shown in the hands, feet, eyes or mouth, but no one but a manicure with years of experience knows how people can be read by their finger nails. I've been in this business five years. Many of my customers are men, and I've got those that come to me regularly down pretty fine, and I'll be mighty much changed in some words with most of them. I judge everybody the first time that I fix the nails, and it isn't often that I make a wrong estimate of a person's character."

"But how in the world can you tell what a man or a woman is merely by the finger nails?" asked the customer.

"Dear, me, I thought I had told you. As soon as I took your hand in mine and saw how your nails grew into the flesh at the points and folded I knew at once that all your tastes are luxurious, and you indulge yourself too, just as far as you can, don't you?"

"I'm afraid you are right."

"There, now, I know it. All of my customers who have such tastes have nails that grow into the flesh. They quarrel about it and I have to file and smoothen this tendency, but I can't stop the work of nature. Of course it's ugly and often causes pain to have the nail pushed itself in the flesh, but if one is fond of self indulgence one must pay the penalty, even to the finger nails.

"The other day a little woman came in here with pale nails. They were almost lead colored. She made two or three pleasant remarks and finally said:

"'I wish my nails were pink, like those of most girls.'

"'But you can't have pink nails so long as you are so melancholy,' I answered, and she blurted out:

"'You never saw me before and don't know whether I'm melancholy or not!'

"'Oh, yes, I do,' I said, because the color of your nails tells me so! I've several melancholy customers, but they don't know that I know it. When a person is subject to fits of the blues or what is still a constant state of depression, the nails seem to turn lead colored from sympathy. If you would make up your mind to always be cheerful, your nails would grow pink after awhile.

"Then she told me how she had lost her sweetheart just two weeks before they were to have been married, and although three years have elapsed she has never been able to shake off the melancholia."

For just then the car in which the girl was heard, and then the customer said:

"'Do you know what you're been telling me is very interesting? I wish you would tell me more, for I'm going to begin to study nails.'

"Well," resumed the manicure, "broad nails indicate a jolly, gentle, kindly and healthful nature. Of course people with broad nails often overcome their timidity and have perfectly easy manners, but they are invariably gentle. I made a customer very angry once. She was a middle aged woman, and it was the first time that she had ever been to me. She said she was a dear friend, Mrs. Brown, who was one of my regular customers, had recommended her to come to me. As soon as I began to work on her nails I began to see that she quarreled with my instruments and my way of using them, and finally let in on her dear friend for sending her to me. I worked away and said nothing, and when I finished her nails looked really beautiful. She looked at them and then as me and said:

"'You must think me very disagreeable!'

"'Oh, no!' I answered. 'I knew you would quarrel about something when you sat down, because your narrow nails told me that you had a quarrelsome nature, and you see you have quarreled with me, you have an inordinate ambition. Pardon my frankness, but people with narrow nails like yours are always quarrelsome and ambitious.'

"She flounced out, but she has come to me once a week ever since.

"That very day a stout man of athletic build came in. He had very piercing eyes upon me and seemed to be trying to read me, but I had the advantage, because I knew what he was and had only to look in his face. After a time he began to question me about my business, and I plucked up courage to volunteer:

"'And you are a student, you are fond of knowledge and are full of liberal sentiment.'

"He stared at me as if I were crazy and said nothing more, but when he went to leave he undid a parcel, took out a book and wrote upon the fly leaf, 'For the little manicure who reads character at first sight—from the author,' and presented it to me. That author was one of the most popular belonging to the realistic school, and I guessed he thought I was a witch, or of course he thought that nobody would take him for a student with his magnificent physique. But he didn't betray his thoughts and had indicated to me what his chief characteristics were, and he has never been back since. Perhaps he was afraid of me, but anyway I prize that book he gave me above anything else that I have.

"Small nails indicate littleness of mind, obstinacy and conceit. Watch out for the person with small nails, especially if it happens to be a man, for he will be capable of petty thoughts, speeches and actions and thinks more of himself than of any one else. If it is a woman, she is apt to be spiteful and jealous, and, generally speaking, says things behind your back that she wouldn't to your face.

"People of bilious temperament have red and spotted nails, and so do martial men, delighting in war. Where you see these nails you may be sure that the person possessing them is easily irritated, though apt to get in a good humor just as easily.

"There is a superstition to the effect that white marks on the nails denote misfortune, but there is nothing in it. These white marks are caused by slight colds, merely show that there is too much acid in the system. They are rather disfiguring, but are easy enough to get rid of. If one is inclined to diet for a week."—New York Sun.

The Constitutionalist.

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY,

PUBLISHED AT

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms—$2.00 per year.

A. L. Force. Editor and Proprietor

Oh, winter, how belated you are.

The Legislature convenes Tuesday, January 14th.

When will Congress get through tinkering with the tariff?

It seems as though every Government ill is dosed with a new tariff schedule.

How nice it would be if Plainfield could only start the New Year without any cider joints.

The Green brook pollution problem seems to be working itself out to a successful and satisfactory end.

Among the things which it is hoped that the new year will see in Plainfield is the extension of the street railway.

Venezuela has 2 131,908 population and eight States. Fifteen per cent. of the population are pure blooded Indians.

It is evident that Roselle needs a building inspector. A $2,000 building, in which the post office was to be located, was razed by the wind Thursday night.

Barney Ford has returned with eight indictments hanging over his head. But if he fares no worse than the others who faced similar charges he will not suffer.

There is talk about schemes being on foot to make two additional counties in New Jersey. The proposition is to form one out of the western part of Hudson county and the other out of the city of Newark.

Assemblyman Reed is rather in favor of having Plainfield annexed to Somerset county and consolidated with the borough. We would welcome the addition to our county.—Unionist-Gazette.

If our bankers and business men wish to avoid the mischief which menaces the country, and have any influence with members of Congress, they should at once use that influence to urge the necessity of pursuing the straightforward, manly course of offering to pay in as good money as that which it is desired to borrow.—Chicago Tribune.

Elizabeth people have been greatly troubled during the past few months over the unhealthy condition of the Elizabeth river, which has emitted such a stench as to be a menace to the health of the city. Unlike Plainfield with the Green brook pollution problem, they are unable to prevent sewage from flowing into the river, and in consequence it is proposed that the city spend $20.000 to remedy the difficulty by a new system of emptying the sewage into the river.

Newark is grappling with the trolley freight question. A number of manufacturers of that city have petitioned the authorities to grant franchises to the street railway companies to do freight hauling. They claim that the granting of such a right to the companies would greatly increase the facilities of manufacturers in shipping and receiving freight, from the fact that switches could be run direct to their buildings from the trolley roads, and would result in increased production and consequent benefit to the city at large.

The news that Clara Barton has consented to go to Turkey to take charge of the distribution of the funds for the relief of the suffering will be welcome to all lovers of humanity. There are many reasons why the Red Cross Society is peculiarly well adapted for the work. It is purely humanitarian. No suspicion of religious or racial prejudice attaches to it. Should it find Moslems in need it will help them as quickly as Armenians. Most of all, however, it will carry the support of all civilized Governments, and it is scarcely possible that even the Turks will make any attempt to hinder, or refuse to protect, the agents.—Camden Democrat.

In Michigan, where fifty-three persons in each one thousand of the voting population can neither read nor write, a movement to restrict the suffrage by providing for an educational qualification has already gained considerable headway. This agitation, which usually follows after the accession of a large immigrant population, is resisted in Michigan on the ground, chiefly, that the native-born citizens are almost as illiterate as are the foreigners. But it is likely that the nativists will have their way in the community; and thus, perhaps, illustrate a new method and policy in dealing with the swarm of undesirable immigrants who annually descend upon our shores.—Newark News.

The cider sold in the cider joints is more like whiskey in effect.

It is generally conceded that Senator Thompson will be the next President of the Senate.

The season for the man who says his will power is strong is here. It is a part of the good resolutions, but it is the first part that fails.

A "Borough Taxpayer" says the borough marshals are much handsomer than the city police. Now that is drawing the comparison a little too strong.

Can it be that all the geese of the old woman up in the clouds have flown away so that she can not pick their feathers? From the absence of the beautiful snow it would seem so.

The New Jersey Contractor has the following to say in its last issue:

A study of the real estate transfers as published weekly by The Contractor and The Gazette show that more real estate changes hands, either sold, exchanged or given over in various transactions, in Plainfield, than in Elizabeth or any other city in Union county. This speaks well for Plainfield, but how does it look for Elizabeth?

Of course it speaks well, but it speaks still better when one realizes that in North Plainfield, where there is proportionately as many reality sales as in the city, the transfers are all recorded in Somerset county. Plainfield is easily the most desirable and fastest growing residential city in New Jersey.

Rahway has gone New Brunswick one better in the matter of cleaning streets. Tramps now perform that labor in that place.—Plainfield Press.

That is because there is no City Improvement Society there. Still it is a step in the right direction, as The Fredonian has advocated. Why should not the tramps and the short term prisoners be made to clean the streets of every city of New Jersey? It is not necessary to adopt the ball and chain system if it is considered objectionable, but some other method could be devised to utilize the unused labor which is stored up in the city and county jails.—New Brunswick Fredonian.

The splendid service which the Muhlenberg Hospital affords to the sick and maimed of Plainfield is recognized and appreciated by every citizen. The fact, however, that only allopathic physicians are allowed to practice in the hospital, while many paying patients are of homœopathic tendencies, seems to be an unwise, and, at times, an unfair rule. The action recently taken by the Board of Directors of the Passaic Hospital Association is opportune to this point. Formerly only members of the Passaic City Medical Society were appointed to the staff, and that society is composed of allopathic physicians. The reason given for the change is that many leading families refused to help the hospital because homœopathists were not recognized. The Daily Press would commend this action of the Passaic authorities to the attention of the Board of Governors of the Muhlenberg Hospital.

The Elizabeth Herald complains that that city, with 50,000 people, will not support one theatre as it should be. The Camden Courier remarks that with 65,000 people they are just as bad. It is doubtful if there is a city in New Jersey, with the exception of Newark, Trenton and Jersey City, that has a paying theatrical enterprise. This condition of affairs exists simply because most Jerseyites are able to witness performances in either New York or Philadelphia at an expense increased only by a moderate car fare over that which they would pay at home. The superior performances which are attended in these cities—the best that can be seen in the world—are considered amply worth the increased cost. Music Hall of Plainfield has to compete with every New York playhouse, and then some people wonder why Music Hall is not a howling success. If the $300 which Plainfielders spend every week in New York theatres was spent in Music Hall, perhaps Plainfield would see more metropolitan successes. The truth of this is evident when it is known that Frederick Warde and The Capitol gave two of the finest performances ever witnessed in this city and played to beggarly audiences, while Uncle Tom's Cabin played almost to a packed house and gave, in street parlance, a rotten show.

A SINGULAR COINCIDENCE.

Percy Cut Willie's Hand and Willie Then Cut Percy's Hand.

About two years ago Willie Myles, of Elizabeth, and Percy Giddis, of Regent street, this city, cousins, were visiting their uncle, George Mantz, of Warren township. While there they were cutting brush. Percy, who was nine years, accidentally let the axe slip and almost severed the finger off Willie's hand. Dr. Zeglio was called and dressed the wound. "Willie, who was eleven years old, was marked for life, but by the skill of treatment he received he lost no fingers.

Strange to relate, these two boys again visited their uncle together yesterday. Percy wished to show Willie how his uncle cut corn for the cows, so he picked up a bunch of stalks, holding them on the block. Willie raised the axe in the air and let it fall, expecting to cut the stalks, but unfortunately for Percy, his hand was too close to the block, and the fall of the axe almost severed the index finger from his hand. His uncle at once brought him to Plainfield, where Dr. Zeglio dressed the hand, and hopes to be able to save the finger.

A WESTFIELD SUICIDE.

A Fifteen Year Old Grass Widow Commits Suicide.

Mrs. Leggett, aged 15 years, and living at the home of her stepfather John Shenkle, about a mile from Westfield, committed suicide Friday between 7 and 9 o'clock by taking a dose of strychnine, which she drank out of a bottle kept in a closet. She had asked her father to let her go out but he refused.

It will be remembered that the girl went to Waverly Fair last Fall with a young man named Leggett and while away they were married in Newark. Her husband only lived with her four days. Since then she has been living with her stepfather. The girl became involved in trouble and this it is probable has worried her into committing the deed. Dr. Kinch, of Westfield, was sent for last evening but she died before he arrived. The County Physician arrived this morning and gave a burial permit.

RALLYING TO THE ARMENIANS.

A Public Meeting to be Held to Secure Help for the Sufferers.

At a meeting held at the Crescent Avenue church Wednesday evening to take action in reference to the sufferings of the Christians in Armenia, Rev. E. M. Bodman, Mayor Gilbert and Isaac L. Miller were appointed a permanent committee on the subject. That committee has determined to hold a public meeting Thursday evening, January 2d, at 8 o'clock in the Crescent Avenue church, and will be addressed by Prof. Riggs, of New Brunswick, so well and favorably known in this city, Mayor Alex. Gilbert and possibly others. A collection will be taken, and it is also expected that suitable resolutions will be presented for the action of the meeting.

In view of the fact that hundreds of thousands of Christians in Armenia are in the direst suffering, many of them without shelter, food or clothing, it is hoped that there will be a large attendance and a generous response.

A FLEECE GAME.

Two Crooks Try to Get Wearing Apparel Without Settling.

An attempt was made last Friday and Saturday by two men to fleece L. Sternberg of an overcoat and a suit of clothes. One man gave the name of Burns and said he worked for Chapot, while the other one gave the name of Robinson and claimed that he worked on the sewer beds. When they received the goods a small deposit was left.

Saturday noon the company's collector and detective who had witnessed the sale, saw the two men at the North avenue station and learned that the men had purchased tickets for Pittsburg. He at once approached the men, demanded the overcoat which one had on and the suit of clothes which were in a trunk in their possession. The men reluctantly gave them up.

LAW INTERRUPTED LOVE.

Dave Hooper Caught and Held for the Grand Jury.

He was escorting a lady friend home when the mighty arm of the law came down on his shoulder. He, in this case, was Dave Hooper, the colored individual wanted by the city police for stealing a pair of horse clippers from Dan Roberts. The officers in the borough caught him last evening in the way mentioned and turned him over to the city authorities. This morning he appeared before Justice Mosher, and was committed to await the action of the grand jury.

A Satisfactory Test.

Sometime ago Chief Doane stopped the work on the roof at the Jackson building, until he was satisfied that the roof would be perfectly safe. This morning, Cumins & Evans, of 38 Dey street, New York, who are doing the work, sent for Chief Doane to witness a test between the tin and asphalt roofing. A fire was started on a long section, composed of tin roofing and asphalt roofing, and left burning for a half hour, during which time a hole was burned in the tin, but no impression was made on the asphaltum, and another test was made from underneath with the same results. The test being satisfactory the work will now proceed.

Green Cut Bone For Eggs.

There is a substance found in every household that contains a complete hen food, and that is fresh, green, raw bone, as it comes from the market. To be sure this bone must be reduced to a proper size and this, some would say, takes too much time and labor; perhaps so, but this valuable food is all there, when you have got it. You have in it all the elements of the egg and chicken in just the right proportion, which is not found in any other preparation of food.

Since I purchased a Mann bone cutter, which will cut rapidly and fine, the old objection of breaking up the green bone with a hammer does not hold, and our poultry give us more profit than any other branch of farm work.—[E. B. Backus, Guilford Co., N. C.

A Flourishing Club.

A meeting of the Plainfield Camera Club was held Saturday night to elect officers for the ensuing year. The reports of the old officers were first heard from, and they showed that the club was in a very flourishing and satisfactory condition. The following officers were then elected: President, Otto Ahrens; vice-president, Harold Serrell; secretary, J. Hervey Doane; treasurer, Harry Coward; directors, Otto Ahrens, Harold Serrell, J. Hervey Doane, Harry Coward, W. H. Rogers, J. E. Stewart and W. H. Freeman.

LITTLE MAMIE TRAVELED INCOG

A SEVEN YEAR OLD TOT ENJOYED A TRIP BY HERSELF.

Little Miss Green Sent on an Errand to Her Papa, and Then Boards a Railroad Train Just to Have a Ride.

Little Mamie Green, the seven-year-old daughter of Larry Green, who opens clams and oysters at Sam Frazee's sea food market on Park avenue, took a trip all by herself Saturday afternoon, thereby causing much worry in the paternal home. About three o'clock Mamie was bundled up by her mother and sent from her West Third street home on an errand to her father. She did her duty all right, and, as was supposed, started to return home.

Whether or not Mamie had heard how Princess Euelia had traveled incog when she visited this country, is not known, but any rate she tried to emulate the royal personage. She went to the North Avenue station, and when the 3:45 train from New York rolled in she toddled up to a passenger coach just as though she was a veteran traveler, and boarded the car.

Before the train started Mamie had pre-empted a seat and by the time the conductor came to where she was, she was enjoying herself hugely by viewing the rapidly dissolving scenery as the train sped along. It did not take the conductor long to learn the ituation, and then he concluded to carry Mamie through to Bound Brook, and have her parents notified from there. This was done through the chiefs-of-police of Bound Brook and this city, and at 7:01 Mamie jumped off the train at the North Avenue station into her father's arms.

Mamie says she had an awful nice time, but she was glad to get back home.

TRIPPED AND FELL.

Mrs. J. C. VanDyke Quite Seriously Hurt Saturday Evening.

Mrs. J. C. VanDyke, of East Front street, met with a very painful accident Saturday evening after choir practice at Trinity Reformed church. She had left the church, but was obliged to return for something. On leaving the church a second time a large dog belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Fred Cutter sprang at her, causing her to trip and fall. In the descent she came down with such force as to severely sprain her right knee and ankle. A. J. Moore, of Westervelt avenue, happened to be near and at once rendered valuable assistance. Mrs. VanDyke, though suffering intensely, was unable to determine the extent of her injuries till she reached her home and medical aid summoned. It will probably be two months before she will be able to walk again without aid.

Hope Chapel Workers Entertained.

Last Saturday evening Mr. and Mrs. Peter Hansen, of West Second street, entertained about fifty members of Hope chapel at their home. The time was passed in social manner, during which there were vocal solos by Mrs. Radin, Mrs. Cox, Mrs. Bowman and a recitation by Miss Eva Higgins. Refreshments were served after the programme was rendered and all left for their homes well pleased with their evening's enjoyment.

The Gas Company Buys Land.

The property corner Fourth and Church streets, belonging to the estate of S. O. This will give the Gas Light Company possession of the entire block bounded by Church, Fourth and Washington streets, and the Central Railroad.

LAST TRIP OF SANTA CLAUS.

HE PAYS A VISIT TO THE EPISCOPAL SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

In the Church of the Holy Cross He Came in on an Uptodate Bicycle and Distributed Presents With Twinkling Eyes.

From The Press of Dec. 30.

"The Coming of the King," a beautiful cantata by Dudley Buck, was grandly rendered by the choir of the First Baptist church yesterday morning under the direction of C. W. McCutchen and organist E. J. Fitzhugh. The church was neatly decorated with Christmas greens, and especially around the organ were the decorations attractive. After the usual exercises the work of the cantata was taken up. The opening, "Prophecy," consisted of a solo by Miss F. May Grant, the chorus singing the "Advent," ending with a duet by Miss Grant and Miss Marie Draeger. In the "Annunciation," Miss Draeger sang the first solo, Mr. Smith the second, and the latter part was given by the chorus An impressive portion was "Across the Desert,"—"The Caravan of the Magi," by the tenors and bassos, during which there were solo parts by Messrs. Barnes and Smith and a trio by Messrs. Barnes, Smith and Holmes.

"The Plains of Bethelem" was given by the chorus, in which Mr. Smith rendered a tenor solo. "The Departure of the Shepherds" consisted of solo parts by Wm. Holmes, Miss Grant and a part for the tenors and bassos. A beautiful selection was "The Virgin's Lullaby," by Miss Draeger, her rich full alto voice bringing out all the finer details of the work. "The Magi," by the tenors, bassos and chorus, was finely rendered, as was also "The Adoration" by Miss Grant and Wm. Holmes. The cantata closed with "Adeste Fiddles," by the choir and congregation.

Rev. Dr. Yerkes then gave a short appropriate talk on the significance of Christmas.

The offertory "Nazareth," by Gounod, was rendered perfectly, Mr. Holmes and Miss Grand taking solo parts.

The entire production of the contata was a noteworthy achievement by the choir who have gained a substantial reputation for classical work. Those who sang were: Sopranos—Miss F. May Grant, Miss Swain, Miss Petrie, Miss Emma Case, Miss Bessie Blair, Mrs. Harold Serrell. Miss Spear altos—Miss Marie Draeger, Miss Nancy Randolph, Miss Bertha Needham, Miss Agnes Blair, Miss Grace Bonney, Miss Overton; tenors—C. W. McCutchen, E. J. Smith, Mr. Douglass, A. B. Ryder; bassos—B. T. Barnes, Wm. Holmes, Nelson Hull, Geo. Snediker.

In the afternoon at 3 o'clock the following programme was rendered: Prelude, "Song Without Words," organist, E. J. Fitzhugh; violinist, P. Ludwig Conde, pianist, Howard Case; carol, "The Day of all the Year," school; Invocation, Rev. D. J. Yerkes; carol, "Sweet Bells Ringing," primary class; Scripture selection, R. K. Case; carol, "The Winter Days Have Come Again," schools; prayer, Rev. P. S. Gibson; anthem, choir; recital, "The Star of the East," Miss Addie Parker Jackson; carol, "Jesus is His Name," schools; address, Prof. Rush Rhees; offertory, "Andante Religioso," violin, piano, and organ; Scripture selection, M. C. Dobbins; carol, "Christ is Born," schools; benediction; postlude, "Adagio," violin, piano and organ

The selections by E. J. Fitzhugh, organ, P. Ludwig Conde, violin, and Howard Case, pianist, were superbly rendered as was the entire programme. The recital by Miss Jackson received the highest commendation from all its perfection and finish, and the address by Prof. Rhees was not only appropriate but exceedingly interesting for the grand thoughts presented. Miss F. May Grant, Miss Nancy Randolph and Miss Bessie Blair assisted Miss Jackson by giving a vocal selection.

"The Virgin's Lullaby was rendered at the afternoon service by request. Beside the home Sunday-school, the East Third Street Mission and Mt. Olive Baptist church Sunday schools were present and took part in the services.

Christmas services were held morning, afternoon and evening in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church yesterday and all the services were largely attended. The regular choir, composed of Miss Annie P. Hardenbergh, E. M. Runyon and Charles L. Lewis, was assisted by a chorus choir of sixteen voices. Frank J. Smith occupied his usual position as organist and director. The music was very enjoyable and consisted of several anthems, the Magnificat and a contralto solo by Miss Hardenbergh. Rev. W. R. Richards, D.D., the pastor, preached from the text "Where," Matthew, 2:4. An offering was taken for the benefit of Muhlenberg hospital.

In the afternoon, the Sunday-school of the Crescent Avenue church and the Sunday-schools from Warren, Hope and Bethel chapels held their joint Christmas exercises. Owing to the large number of scholars who completely filled the church, the congregation was not invited. The service began at 3:30 o'clock. The instrumental music was furnished by Frank J. Smith, organist; Miss Caroline Dewey, piano; W. Frazee, cornet; Gilbert Lovell, Lindley Hillman and Charles Davis, violins; Walter Serrell, flute. The programme was as follows: Prelude by organ and orchestra; carol, "Rejoice! Rejoice!" prayer and Lord's praper led by Rev. W. A. Alexander; responsive reading led by Rev. J. O. McKelvey; carol, "Christmas Bells are Ringing," recitation, "Crippled Tim," by Dudley H. Barrows; carol, "Sweet Bells,"; responsive reading led by Rev. J. O. McKelvey; carol, 'Cradled in a Manger," by the primary department; recitation, "A Surprise," by Helen C. Moody; carol, "Brightest and Best,"; prayer by Rev. G. Kennedy Newell; carol, "Ring Merrily Bells,"; address by Rev. Wm. R. Richards, D. D.,; carol, "Jesus, Our Lord Will Ever Be,"; solo by Charles L. Lewis and chorus by schools; benediction by Rev. J. O. McKelvey, organ and orchestra.

To see jolly old Santa Claus riding a bicycle is a very novel sight, but that is just what happened when the children of Holy Cross Sunday-school had their Christmas celebration in the parish buildings on Saturday night. The good old saint was decidedly up to date, for he rode a wheel of the very latest pattern and, considering his portly size, he rode it very well. The traditional sleigh bells, with which his famous reindeers were wont to be bedecked, now jingled merrily on the handle-bars of the bicycle, and as the popular old gentleman rode into the room and dismounted near the large and beautifully decorated Christmas tree, he was greeted with shouts of delight from the many little ones present. Superintendent Benjamin R. Western greeted him cordially and then the old saint told the children how glad he was to see so many of them there and that their Christmas tree was the finest he had ever seen. He then proceeded to give a handsome present and a box of fine candy from the tree to each scholar who came forward as the names were called. There seemed no end to the gifts. There were sleds, skates, dolls, books, toys and games of all kinds, beside many other presents. Superintendent B. R. Western was not forgotten, and he in turn had remembered the teachers and officers of the Sunday-school, as each received a tastefully bound hymnal as his gift. Rev. T. Logan Murphy received a handsomely bound library of books, presented by the men of the congregation. Mrs. Murphy was presented with a beautiful onyx table, the gift of the Ladies Auxiliary.

Previous to the appearance of Santa Claus an appropriate service was rendered and Christmas carols sung by the Sunday school, and Rector Murphy made a short address. The room was tastefully decorated with evergreens and the building was so crowded with the parents and friends of the children that many were compelled to stand.

With music and singing Christmastide was duly celebrated at the Grace P. E. church on Saturday evening, while a large number of the friends and parents of the Sunday-school were there to attend their Christmas festival.

The order of service was as follows: Processional, "Ring, Ring, Ring the Bells"; general confession; absolution, the Lord's Prayer and versicles; carol, "Jesus, the Child is Born"; the lesson; carol, "Sing, O Sing. This Blessed Morn;" creed and prayers; carol, "'Tis the birthday of Our Saviour;" addresses by Rector Rev. E. M. Rodman and Superintendent H. C. Hooker; offertory; recessional, "Angels from the Realms of Glory."

The scholars and the audience adjourned to the chapel where a beautiful tree awaited them. The carol, "The Christmas Tree," was then sung, after which the gifts were distributed and the chimney of red bricks of candy tore down and passed among the scholars. The prizes, which consisted mainly of books, for the best attendance, behavior and knowledge of the lessons, were next awarded to the following: Emma Peterson, Grace Crane Clara Crane, Charles Peterson, Nelson Peterson, Oliver Hill, Florence Hill, Elsie Smith, Clara Armstrong, Josephine Lapsley, Ada Woodruff, Leona Carl and Juliet Hill.

While most of the churches held their Christmas exercises on the Sunday before Christmas, the Sunday-school of the Park Avenue Baptist church prepared theirs for yesterday afternoon. The classes assembled in their rooms and the services opened by the entrance of the primary department singing "Hear the Sound of the Church Going Voices," The programme given in the Christmas story "Story of the Christ" was then followed with a few changes. It was as follows: Singing, "Gloria Patre,"; prayer by Deacon Theodore Runyon; carol, "Merrily Ring;" remarks by Superintendent Skaden; carol, "Hear the Bells;" responsive reading; recitation, "Calm and Clear the Stars are Shining," by Lillian Richardson; hymn, "Joy to the World;" recitation, "The Beautiful Story," by Silvia Hale; carol, "Hail Blessed Tidings," address by pastor Rev. J. W. Richardson; carol, "Hark the Holy Angels;" scripture reading; recitation, "The Won derful Christmastide," by Harold Smalley; carol, "Beautiful Star;" duet by Miss May D. Thompson, Miss Adelia Thompson and chorus by school; song, "Merry Christmas," by primary department; primary department exercise, "Jesus is His Name," by fourteen little children; recitation by Marion Dickinson; song, "I Would Be," by four little girls; recitation, "A Christmas Story," by ten little girls; song, "The Little One of Bethlehem," by primary department; offertory; responsive reading; carol, "Sing Ye Praises;" benediction. The usual Christmas decorations of evergreens were in evidence while four large bells covered with evergreens and lined with silver tinsel hung about the centre of the ceiling. A number of visitors were present at the exercises.

A handsomely decorated Christmas tree was the first object that attracted the attention of those that entered St. Stephen's church Saturday afternoon for the Christmas festival. It began at five o'clock with the carol "Ring Out the Bells for Christmas," and was then followed by devotional services led by Rev. Mr. Simpson, during which were sung "Hark! A Burst of Heavenly Music" and "List! List to the Chimes." A letter was read from Bishop Scarborough thanking the Sunday-school for an offering sent him, and then Rev. Mr. Simpson made a few remarks on the meaning of a merry Christmas.

While the carol "The Christmas Tree" was being sung, the many candles on the tree were lighted and the electric lights turned out, leaving only the soft light from the candles to illuminate the room. The gifts and candy were next distributed to the scholars by Rev. Mr. Simpson, Superintendent S. S. Guion, and assisted by N. P. T. Finch. The festivities closed with the carol "Hark! the Angels Singing."

The Sunday-school is quite a flourishing one, with one hundred and six children and seven teachers. S. S. Guion is the superintendent, while E. J. Phillips is musical director. Percy V. Whalen is the efficient organist.

The church was very prettily trimmed with evergreens, which were festooned and draped around the sides and chancel in an artistic manner. The Christmas tree, which stood between the pews and the rail, was a very handsome one. It was furnished by W. A. Lord. The decorating of the church was done Monday evening while Friday evening was devoted to the tree. The following assisted in the decorating: Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Beal, Miss Florence B. Beale, William Beal, S. S. Guion, Mr. and Mrs. N. P. T. Finch, Miss Ethel Finch, Percy V. Wheeler, Mr. Davidson, Miss Simpson, Miss Ethel Fuhrmann, Miss Lydia Fuhrmann, Clement Morgan, Richard G. Simpson, Mr. Duck, Mr. Squires and Robert Toney.

The Sunday-school scholars of the Church of the Redeemer enjoyed their festivities Saturday evening in the church. As an additional pleasure to the event the children from the Children's Home were present and joined heartily in the exercis s which opened with a Christmas carol by the scholars. Rev. Joceiyn Johnstone made a very interesting address, in which he set forth the qualities that should be possessed by every boy and girl. After the address, presents consisting of candy, toys and books were given and those from the Children's Home received neckties and books, also oranges. A feature was the presentation of a small drum to H. R. Phillips, Jr., who is about four months old. While the offering was being made to the Children's Home a very pretty solo was rendered by Orville Waring. The programme closed with the singing of a carol. Those in charge of the affair were Superintendent H. R. Phillips Sr., Mrs. Perry, Miss Embury, Miss Wolfman and Miss Helen Phillips. A very handsome Christmas tree, lighted, added much to the enjoyment of the scholars.

A Big Christmas Gift.

The Christmas morning collection from the congregation of St. Mary's church amounted to $621.

PAINTING PAPOOSES.

VERY HARD TO GET LITTLE INDIAN BABIES TO POSE.

A California Woman Artist Describes Her Method—First She Catches the Baby, Then It Does Not Take a Part—The Indian's Superstitious Fear.

"And you want to know how I get Indian babies to pose for me, do you?"

Mrs. Grace Hudson, the young California artist who has made herself famous by painting papooses, wiped her brushes and dropped into a chair in the ivy covered verands of her studio at Ukiah.

"Now, I'll tell you all you want to know and more, too, perhaps. I have much to contend against, but with the exercise of a little ingenuity and a great deal of perseverance I am able to catch a snap shot of an Indian baby in any interesting attitude or occupation. There's the little fellow lying on his back, trying to get his little brown toes into his mouth," said the lady, pointing to a picture which hung on the wall. "That baby looks as if he never did anything but laugh, but I had to give him gumdrops to get the little rascal to look pleasant. I wanted to show the interesting white gum and coloring had to be done without the model.

"When I see a baby that I want to paint, I cannot borrow it for an indefinite period by telling its parents it's the sweetest thing on earth. I have to capture it first and then overcome the natural disagreement for life, or at the very least blindness. As all Digger Indians become blind in their old age from sitting all their lives over a fire, I don't see that the parents' superstition never lacks confirmation. Why, if these Indians here in Ukiah knew that I photographed and painted their babies they would be accused of a murderess and my studio would be shunned as a chamber of horrors. I once induced Captain Jim, a very old Indian whom I had known from my birth, to sit for me. He was so aged and infirm that he could not earn a livelihood and was in imminent danger of starvation.

"After a great deal of moaning and groaning he finally accepted a bribe of bread and boiled beef, but he insisted in eating it first, for fear he would not live to enjoy it. When he had devoured the last crumb, he took his seat and sat for hours staring at me stolidly and awaiting his impending fate like a stoic. Great beads of perspiration stood out on his face, and every few moments he would draw a long breath and brace himself for another effort. He must have suffered untold agony in the few hours he sat for me, for no bribe that I could offer would induce him to pass through the ordeal again. He said he would sooner starve. I have tried to induce him to bring his grandchildren to me, but he only shakes his head and says, 'Me no more. Them much ache.' Nothing will induce him to imperil their lives, for he is positive that he escaped death only because he was so old and tough.

"But about the babies. When I want a subject, I first have to find a squaw with a papoose. If the child's face suits me, I enter into negotiations with the mother to do some work, usually scrubbing or window cleaning. She leaves the baby strapped up in his basket and braced against the side of the house, where it will be under her eye. The next maneuver is to get possession of that papoose. I must make it cry, so that I may have some reasonable excuse for taking an interest in it. There is where Mascot 'does his turn,' as the theatrical people say. Here, Mascot, speak."

An orange and white St. Bernard, almost as big as a Shetland pony, bounced up out of the cool ivy and let out a roar that fairly shook the house.

"That will usually make an Indian baby cry," explained Mrs. Hudson. "It it doesn't frighten the baby, it does the mother, and I have to go to the rescue in any event. Mascot just loves to poke his cold nose into a baby's face when it is strapped up hand and foot and perfectly helpless. So the mother is glad enough to let me take the papoose inside, where it will be safe. I promise to take good care of it, to buy it a new dress, and to give it some beads. In a jiffy I have that baby propped up in the light against the front door of my studio. Then comes the task of getting a fleeting expression on the face of the baby indicative of interest in life. They are regular little stoics. They will sit and stare without blinking an eye or moving a muscle while I perform the most grotesque antics in order to provoke a laugh. I cast occasionally interest them by giving them something to eat, but there is always something about the way they accept food from me that reminds me of the caged animal.

"I worked three days on a baby before I could get a smile, and only then by putting on a feather headdress and dancing around like an Apache medicine man. I worried, interested, baffled and frightened one poor little fellow for two days trying to make him cry, but when I tried to pacify him with candy and beads he yelled lustily, and I got a splendid photograph of him."

"Have any of the babies you painted died?" was asked.

"Yes, one. It was my namesake too. Its mother promised to name it after me, but it chanced to be a boy. Had it been a girl its name would have been Grace Hudson Billy-Bowlegs—the family name is quite up to date, being hyphenated. The poor baby struggled along under the name of Dr. Hudson Billy-Bowlegs for nine or a year and then died. If its mother knew that I had ever painted and photographed it, she would hold me responsible for its death."—San Francisco Call.

His Hat.

It is a pleasant European custom to lift the hat to gentlemen as well as to ladies. Out of this practice arose the remark of a well known London hatter, who met an acquaintance who owed him for the hat he wore.

The hatter, who was accompanied by a friend, lifted his hat to his debtor, but the latter made no sign of recognition.

"He does not salute you!" said the hatter's friend.

"No," said the hatter. "I think he might at least touch my hat to me!"—Youth's Companion.

Short and Businesslike.

"Will you take this here woman for better or wuss and give me $2 for marryin of you?" was the unique manner in which a Georgia justice united two lives.—Atlanta Constitution.

THE ART OF CORRESPONDENCE.

To Write a Charming Letter an Accomplishment—Wax and Sealing.

The most delightfully worth while of all accomplishments, writes Mrs. Roger A. Pryor, is, to my mind, that of writing charming letters. However sweet a song may be, it is evanescent as a breath and survives as a divine memory only. Conversation requires the actual presence of those who engage in it, and the pleasure it gives depends upon many things—a melodious voice, an attractive appearance, graceful manner, special surroundings, freedom from the cares and interruptions of life. But it matters not how cold and bare a garret home may be, how forbidding the outlook upon the chimney pots under a wintry sky, or whether the lodge be in a wilderness or foreign land, the simple materials which invited to correspondency and a convenient postoffice, all the world may be ours. We may daily send forth on white wings our highest thought and most delicate sentiment, and a full need of appreciation will surely return to us.

Such a correspondence may be independent of the formalities of an introduction. Such a correspondence which I have had the congratulate an artist or author or express our gratitude to a philanthropist, philosopher or poet. These dwellers in the realms of thought are peculiarly susceptible to this delicate form of flattery. Momentous consequences have occasionally grown out of the interchange of sentiment this begun. I knew a happy marriage to result from such a correspondence with a poet, and we all have known friendships, the initial letters of which have been nourished as they were begun by letters only.

Of course, in the high thinking that must govern correspondence bordering about such results, formulas of expression and matters of stationery are quite swept into the background. And yet, I fancy, the initial letter which is meant to be immaculate—prim, trig little affairs, neat and trim as an epigram, producing something like the impression one receives from a perfectly gloved hand extended for its first greeting. The introductory letters must be happily worded—echo va sans dire —but I think they should also be neatly written. One should have an alcohol lamp or a roll of the wax tapers sold for the purpose and still air in the room to prevent the flame from blowing. Seal the envelope before you turn one end of the stick of wax rapidly over the flame, not near enough to ignite it, until it is creamy and ready to drop. Gently run it around and round over the point of the envelope flap until enough is deposited, when the stick of wax may be held a moment immediately over the flame. Then firmly press the seal into it. If a drop of the hot wax is first placed under the point of the flap, the seal will be less likely to break. A well cut seal will never stick and practice will insure a firm impression, with the wax molded neatly and evenly around the seal. In all this, pray be careful! Illegible wax in some hands is dangerous. Remember Mrs. Longfellow's sad fate from the face of her gown catching fire as she sealed her letters!—Delineator.

The Free Fights of the Koreans.

Remarkable features of the social life of the capital, Pan-gye, are the boxing guilds and their drum stone and stick fights. Neighboring towns and villages who are jealous of each other also settle their differences by pugilism. Every fifth moon, such period being universally set aside for fights, both public and private. Children are encouraged to fight by their parents, who hope to make them hardy men. Women agonize; sides are made up, and they fight till they are exhausted. The butchers and the mud plasterers had a fierce feud, and it was settled by a public fight in the little on a plain outside the south gate. On the day appointed some 1,800 men went down to fight, a stream dividing the two groups.

The battle began with volleys of stones as the belligerents neared each other, and when one party forced its way over the stream and came to close quarters the fighting was carried on with clubs and knives. It was a drawn battle, so the chiefs decided, and the forces removed a few days later, victory eventually resting with the plasterers. Very few were killed, says Mr. Landor, though none escaped without wounds. The fights are hardly as exciting like one of Lucian's grotesque battles. The court patronizes these extraordinary duels, and the king is kept informed of the progress of the fight, so that no one care that the bystanders do not come in for any hard knocks. After the fighting mania has waned for the year of the morning calm" sinks back into the usual stagnation.—London Spectator.

There Could Be No Mistake.

Some time ago an amorous young man sent a letter to a German lady, and this postcript was added:

"That my darling may make no mistake, remember that I will wear a light pair of trousers and a dark cutaway coat. In my right hand I will carry a small cane and in my left a cigar. Yours ever, Adolphe."

The father replied courteously, stating that his daughter had given him authority to represent her at the appointed place at the time agreed on. His postscript was as follows:

"Dot mine son may make no mistakes, I will be dressed in mine shabby clothes. I will vear in mine right hand a club; in mine left hand I will vear a six shooter. You will recognize me by de vay I bats you on de head. A couple times twice I did de club. Valt for me at de corner, as I have somethings important to inform you mit. Your frent, Heinrich Muller."—Philadelphia Record.

Capsicum.

The capsicum plant, from which the different varieties of cayenne are produced, is indigenous to the tropical regions of Europe, Asia, Africa and America. It grows wild almost as well as under cultivation in these countries, and in each is used by the natives as a seasoning for food. Its extensive employment has suggested to medical theorists the thought that it is not improbable that it is a natural tonic for the stomach in tropical countries.

Carbolic Acid.

Carbolic acid was discovered by Runge in 1834 as a constituent of common coal tar. Its properties were fully investigated by Laurent in 1841, who termed it hydrated oxide of phenyl. This name, however, never met with favor, for, out of respect for Runge, the discoverer, the name he gave it has always been retained.

By the rules of chivalry all persons, male and female, old and young, in a town taken by assault, were liable to be put to death, and the men and boys seldom escaped the brutality of the victors.

TO MANUFACTURE WHEELS.

CLIMAX STOPPER COMPANY'S SHOP TO BE MADE A BICYCLE FACTORY.

A New Wheel to be Called the "Jersey" Will be Manufactured—George H. Cobb, of New York, at the Head of the Scheme.

To Plainfield's many industries is to be added a high grade bicycle manufacturing establishment. The Climax Stopper Company's factory at the corner of East Fourth and Washington streets, will be the home of the new enterprise, but it is expected that greatly increased quarters will be needed in a short time. The preliminary work necessary in bringing out the new wheel will begin on January 1st.

The new company will be known as the "New Jersey Stamping Works," and is backed by George H. Cobb, chairman of the racing board of the Harlem Wheelmen, and several other wealthy New York men. The new enterprise will be under the management of Mr. Cobb, who is well and favorably known in the bicycle trade.

The wheel which is to be put on the market by this new concern will be called "The Jersey," and will embody many new and meritorious features. The mechanical department will be presided over by A. J. Doty, as superintendent, a skilled mechanical engineer of wide experience. The line of goods heretofore made by the Climax Stopper Co. in their factory will be continued, Mr. Cobb having taken a contract to manufacture them in connection with the new industry.

This new enterprise has been pending for sometime but definite action has now been taken. Mr. Cobb and his son, G. B. Cobb, Jr., well-known among the racing men of this district as one of the fast riders of the Harlem Wheelmen, have been in Plainfield some time making the necessary arrangements.

KIRMESS DANCERS ENTERTAINED.

The Juvenile Participants Enjoy a Visit From Santa Claus.

The children who took part in the Kirmess were enjoyably entertained at the residence of Percy F. Phillips, of Madison avenue, last evening, at a Christmas party. The house was charmingly decorated with greens, while an immense Christmas tree, bedecked with lighted candles and handsome ornaments, occupied one corner of the spacious parlors.

About sixty children were present and spent part of the evening in playing games. Toward the close Santa Claus appeared, after having made the other calls, and presented each of the children with a choice gift. Dancing added to the pleasure of the evening.

The excellent music was furnished by George E. Rogers, the musical director of the Kirmess. The party was a most successful one, and all were sorry when it was necessary to say good bye.

Bright Borough Boy.

Young Andrew Carney, of Emily street, who has been in the New York hospital in East Fifteenth street, for some time past and who was discharged from that institution on Sunday last, was present on Christmas Eve at the festivities held in the children's ward which was beautifully decorated with evergreen wreaths and holly, while a large revolving Christmas tree, lighted with incandescent lights, stood almost in the center of the room. As the tree revolved the lights changed from red to white, from white to blue, then to green, and many other har*monizing colors. To the right of the* tree was a revolving wheel, which formed kaleidoscopic pictures of various colors as it was turned. The youth was the recipient of many valuable presents.

Excellent Service.

The mysterious Christmas packages handled by the United States Express Company during the last few days were more numerous than usual, but despite the fact, every package that arrived on Christmas day was delivered that day. A few delayed packages are still arriving. Agent E. W. Mills has long been preparing for this occasion and was equipped when the rush came, by seven extra men and two extra wagons. His arrangements proved very successful. This Christmas was also noted on account of the small number of misdirected packages.

On Christmas Eve.

There was a narrow escape from a serious fire at the residence of W. L. Titsworth, of East Sixth street and LaGrande avenue, Tuesday evening at about half-past six. Smoke began to show itself and two ash barrels were discovered blazing in the cellar. Luckily the beams overhead had not yet caught and a pail of water extinguished the flames.

CHRISTMAS AT THE HOSPITAL

FIFTEEN AFFLICTED PATIENTS MADE HAPPY THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

A Christmas Tree One of the Features, While Words of Consolation for Their Unfortunate Position Gave Them Hope

"It is more blessed to give than to receive" is the divine injunction, and those who were present at Muhlenberg Hospital Thursday afternoon know the meaning of the above words. The hearts of all were delighted beyond measure to witness personally the joy and gladness brought to the hearts of the fifteen patients now at that institution. The large Christmas tree was beautifully decked and when illuminated at 3 o'clock, it presented a scene long to be remembered. Shortly afterward the following members of Grace P. E. church choir appeared in their robes: Kendall Mason, Harry Messerschmidt, Chas. Sheppard, Willard Martin, Harry Limbarger, Charles Bryan, Malcomb Barnes, Wm. Hockridge, W. R. Cock, F. J. Pope, and Charles Angleman. Under the direction of Mrs. W. A. Freeman, they rendered several appropriate selections. A delightful violin solo by Miss Nellie Whiton was grandly rendered.

E. B. Clark, for the Board of Gavernors, then made a few remarks to the guests and patients. He took his text from the fourth chapter of the First Epistle of Peter and ninth verse: "Use Hospitality." He spoke of the difference, generally speaking, in the hospitality of olden times and today, how willingly people used to be to assist and help those who were in want. He stated that the hospital was intended for the sick and needy who couldn't help themselves. Those in charge would take anything from a penny to a $1,000 if anyone felt disposed to give. It wanted to be done without grudging, though. He congratulated the patients on being able to have such good care, and the nurses for the profession they had adopted. Mr. Clark paid rich tribute to the Woman's Auxiliary, and said that if they dropped the hospital he would also drop it, for it could not get along.

After some more music by the choir the patients were handsomely remembered by the guests present, of which there were a large number, including the Women's Auxiliary and a number of the King's Daughters. The nurses and assistants also received substantial recognition, and thus a joyous Christmas afternoon was passed in making others happy and helping them to forget their suffering and pain.'

DIDN'T GO HOME TILL MORNING.

He Refused Officer Flanagan's Advice and Spent the Night in the Rookery.

He declared there was no policeman in the country that could arrest him on Christmas night, and he however, wandered up Liberty street singing and shouting, where he was met by Officer Flanagan who told him to go home, that the law was waiting for him, but the intoxicated man consigned his brother to a warm region, and called the officer unpleasant names. At last, at the corner of Fourth and Liberty streets, Flanagan took him in charge and had to drag him all the way to the lockup amid a shower of abusive language. The prisoner spent the night in the cell and appeared before Judge Coddington this morning, giving his name as Jacob Coddington.

"I don't know nothing at all about it," he told the Judge, and the latter gave him the choice of a fine of $15 or forty days in jail. He preferred the fine.

CHRISTMAS PRAYER MEETING.

Christian Endeavorers Held a Consecration Meeting Yesterday.

The Christian Endeavor societies of this city have this year inaugarated a new custom—that of holding a union prayer meeting Christmas morning. Such a service was held yesterday at 10 o'clock in the chapel of the Park Avenue Baptist church. The meeting was led by Miss Florence G. Hawkins, Secretary of the Local Union, whose helpful words added much to the interest of the service. There was a good attendance, and many earnest words were spoken, showing on the part of the Endeavorers a true consecration, and a deep desire to be used of God in the work of bringing others into the Kingdom of Christ.

Why This Faith?

The taxpayers of North Plainfield borough need not lose any sleep at present on account of the talk about consolidating with Plainfield. The mere fact that the next Legislature will be Republican in both branches is a sufficient reason for the faith that is in us concerning this matter.—Somerville Messenger.

A Revival For Scotch Plains.

Rev. Arthur Crane, of Carleton avenue, has returned from Friendship, New York, and will hold a series of revival meetings at Scotch Plains, during the next two weeks.

THE DEVIL'S CROWBAR.

Rev. J. W Richardson Thus Characterizes the Cigarette.

One of the last things done in the High School previous to the celebration of the Christmas festivities was the organization of an Anti-Cigarette League by Principal Travell. He recognizes the fact that the power to concentrate thought, so essential to the student, is always weakened by tobacco.

From Jay Seaver, College Physician of Yale, in University Magazine for June 10th, 1891, it is learned that according to carefully prepared data covering a period of four years, the men who were non-users of tobacco showed an increase of weight 10.4 per cent greater than that of the regular user and 6.6 per cent greater than the occasional user. In height the advantage was an increase of 24 per cent more than the occasional user. In growth of chest girth the non-user has an advantage of 26.6 per cent over the regular user and of 22 per cent over the occasional user. Last and most important of all, the lungs, especially of the non-user, showed an increase of 76.8 per cent above that of the regular smoker, and 49.6 per cent above that of the occasional smoker. The student who smokes never seems to excel in literary work or in athletic sports.

Rev. J. W. Richardson says: "The cigarette is the devil's crowbar to pry apart a boy's integrity."

Col. Hadley says of a murderer, for whom he was retained, that his salutation was, "Well, Colonel, it is almost over," and when asked what he meant, he replied: "The smoke that began in a cigar in disobedience to my mother will soon end in the smoke of hell."

There is no law in New Jersey to oppose the ravages of this widespread evil of smoking, but we have faith in the young men who take the pledge, not only of abstinence but of influence, that they will join in a crusade of extermination. The league is endorsed by the leading clergymen, physicians and the Board of Education.

A FAMILY AFFAIR.

Drama of Husband, Wife and Brother-in-Law Aired in City Court.

There was war on West Third street Thursday and in its wake came sorrow. Charles McCann lives there with his wife and his brother-in-law, Robert Wallace, boards with them. At least that was the state of affairs before Christmas. Yesterday morning, McCann drank more liquor than was necessary and began to make things lively at home. His wife left weeping for the home of her mother and, after turning things upside down, McCann stopped. Mrs. McCann persuading her brother to rest at their mother's home. Then he went after his clothes. What happened then is not exactly known, except that Wallace chided his brother-in-law for acting in such a disgraceful manner and a scrap resulted, which ended in Wallace assisting McCann from the house before he had entirely ruined it. The two men were arrested on the charge of fighting and appeared before Judge Coddington in the city court this morning. Wallace looked all right, but McCann had a terrible looking face. It was cut and scratched and both eyes were black. Wallace pleaded guilty, but McCann did not. Several witnesses were called and it was clearly shown that Wallace had not been to blame in the affair. Sentence was suspended on him, while McCann was sent to jail for sixty days.

MERRY WITH THE BOTTLE.

Christmas Was Unusually Prolific With Drunks For The City Court.

Merry Christmas was not an unmeaning term to some Plainfielder's yesterday and they did their best to make merry with the bottle. But the effects were not as pleasant as they might have been and quite a number had to spend the night in the jail to pay for their little spree, besides sundry fines.

James Smith, a vagrant, was arrested by Policeman Cooney. He was sent to jail for forty days.

"I was pretty happy," owned up Edmund Scott, a colored drunk who tried to own Liberty street, until officer Flanagan collared him. His sentence was a fine of $5 or a twenty days trip down the road.

Armstead Jackson, another colored offender, drank too much of the fiery liquid and did things which he ought not to have done on Liberty street last night. Officer Vanderweg gave him a night's lodging in the rookery and Judge Coddington gave him his choice of adding $5 to the city treasury or pay Sheriff Kyte a twenty days visit. He preferred the gift to the city.

Fair Dates Set.

Hope chapel has selected February 12th, 13th and 14th, as the days for holding a grand fair and loan exhibition in their chapel on West Fourth street. It promises to be a very successful affair.

RUM AND RAZORS WON'T MIX.

PAT STACK SLASHES WM. GILLES IN THE CHIN.

The Pair of Them Get Into a Quarrel and Stack Tries to Cut Gilles's Throat—Assailant Held for Grand Jury.

Two men celebrated Christmas with a bottle of rum, Wednesday and one is now in jail and the other just out of the hospital. Wm. Gilles, a native of Nova Scotia, is employed by Daniel McCarthy, the truckman, and boards at his house on East Second street. Yesterday morning, in company with Patrick Stack, of Somerville, he went visiting at a house on the corner of West Third street and Arlington avenue. The liquor that they had drank began to boil and soddle their temper. A quarrel arose on nothing in particular but everything in general, and the two men went out in the street to settle the scrap. Nature's weapons were used at first and then bricks and stones began to fly. Finally Stack drew his razor and began to make things lively for his opponent.

He swung the sharp weapon, striking Gilles in the hat and cutting his scalp slightly. Next time he aimed lower and would have caught the Nova Scotia man in the neck had he not lowered his head and caught the razor on the chin, making a long and deep wound. Tom Martin, ex-special policeman, lived opposite and appeared on the scene after the cutting was over and while the stones were still flying. He saw the blood, but thought it was caused by a bloody nose. He ordered Stack to refrain from heaving rocks, which the Somerville man finally did, and disappeared.

Martin took the wounded man to a hack, when he was conveyed to the hospital, where Dr. E. W. Hedges dressed the wound.

The police were notified at once and Sergeant Kiely and Officer Flanagan started after the man from Somerville. He fled to Grant avenue and then returned by the way of the railroad track to get his clothes. He was captured by the officers at the Madison avenue bridge and confined until this morning in the lockup. This morning he was taken before Justice Nash and held for the Grand Jury.

Collided With the Trolley Car.

Car No. 1 of the street railway, in charge of Motorman Wilbur Berrill and Conductor Nevins, ran into a hay wagon on West Front street, near Liberty street, Tuesday night about 9:30. The motorman claims he did not see the wagon till too close to it to stop, but shut off the power as soon as possible. The headlight on the car was wrecked, but the damage to the wagon was slight on account of the speed of the horses. It is thought the driver of the wagon was asleep. He was not known and turned off on a side street and disappeared.

Heaviest in Years.

Never before in the history of the Plainfield post office have the mails been so heavy during the holidays as they were this year. The regular force of carriers, assisted by two substitutes and two extra wagons, worked hard to decrease the ever-increasing influx of Christmas packages. Postmaster Hetfield and his staff deserve credit for the rapidity with which the great increase of mail was handled.

KRIS KRINGLE REIGNED.

NUMEROUS CHRISTMAS ENTERTAINMENTS IN VARIOUS CHURCHES.

Enjoyable Programmes Arranged for Sunday-School Scholars, Supplemented by Sweet Presents—Events in Detail.

From The Press of Dec. 27.

Success was accorded the Christmas entertainment given at Grace M. E. church last evening under the direction of Mrs. John H. Carney and Miss Margaret Schuck. The chapel was prettily decorated with evergreens. Every seat in the chapel was taken while the following programme was rendered in a faultless manner:

Singing, "Glory be to God Most High," School; Recitation, Tiny Yoeli; Recitation, Mabel Garey; Tableau, "Christmas Feast."—Turkey, Benjamin Schuck; Pumpkin, Fred Conroy; Potato, Herbert Simpson; Beau, J. Van Arsdale; Housekeeper, Ada Van Horn; Recitation, Alice DeMott; Tableau, "The Old Woman in the Shoe"—Old Woman, Nellie Valiant; Santa Claus, Charles Hummer; Children, Winnie Barroll, Addie Carney, Sadie Winckler, Grace Giddis, John Carney, John Valiant, Mary Woolston, Laura Woolston, Edward Krause, Edna Sebring, Fred Krause, May Fairchild, David Fairchild, Eva Higgins, Willie Higgins, Ethel Most, Harry Schuck, Charles Powell, Grace Powell. During the rendition of the above a pleasing solo was given by Addie Carney. The entire affair was delightful and those present appreciated the efforts put forth to please.

A pleasant feature of the evening was the presentation of gifts by Rev. Herbert Randolph. Beside the children receiving candy, dolls, and toys, the older ones were remembered handsomely. He presented on behalf of the teachers an elegant arm chair to Mr. Griffin, secretary of the Sunday-school. Queen Esther Band gave $15 toward the library fund. Mrs. Lutkin's class gave her a handsome framed picture, while she gave each one in her class her picture. A hand some book was given Miss Alice Carroll by her class, and Mr. Valiant presented each teacher with a pretty calendar.

A charming Christmas festival was held last night by the Sunday-school of the Congregational church, and, despite the threatening weather, there was a very large attendance. The programme was as follows:

Organ voluntary, Walter Raynolds; Prayer, Rev. C. L. Goodrich; Recitation, Ethel Lorton; Instrumental trio, Mrs. B. T. Barnes, organist, Mrs. M. E. Dwight, pianist, P. Ludwig Conde, violinist; Recitation, Amy Emmons; Vocal duet, "Santa Claus' Lament," Marion Dwight and Herbert Glaentzer; Whistling solo with banjo accompaniment, Miss M.E Meredith, Recitation, May Parmele, Violin solo, "Gavotte," Hollander, Miss Nella B. Whiton, accompanied by Miss Margaret Tracy; Christmas tree drill, Master Joseph Robinson, leader. Clarence Steiner, Herbert Glaentzer, Ray Fuller, Carl Steiner, Roland Rockfellow, Vrecland VanAistyne, Frank Emmons, Arthur Robinson; Vocal solo, "Bobolink," Miss M. E. Meredith; Recitation, Katharine Dwight; Song "Rock-a-bye," Marion Dwight, Mildred Day, Ethel Weseman, Ethel VanZandt Marguerite VanZandt, Ethel Lorton, Edith Glaentzer, Edna Scheud, Laura Baker. This song was sung by the little girls while seated on the stage in rocking chairs, with their dolls in their arms. Reading, "Annie Laurie," Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward. Miss Addie Parker Jackson; Whistling solo, Miss M. E. Meredith. Each number on the programme was excellently rendered, and thoroughly enjoyed. Specially pleasing were the charming "Rock-a-bye song," sung by nine sweet-faced and daintily dressed little girls, and the absorbing story of brave, true "Annie Laurie," told so graphically by Miss Addie Parker Jackson.

At the close of the programme gifts, candy and oranges were distributed among the members of the Sunday-school.

The profuse decorations of ever greens and flowers at the East Third Street Mission presented a cheery sight yesterday afternoon and evening when the Christmas festivities were held. In the afternoon the primary department, under the direction of Miss Alice Woodlan, enjoyed the following programme: Piano solo, Clifford Braider; remarks, L. W. Randolph; recitations, Lucy Heyburn, Robert Runyon, Carl Ulmer, Walter Ulmer, Lucy Scott, May Ford, Josie Emmons, Marion Hurst and Edna Kelly; duett, Misses Freeman; soprano solo, Miss Jomini.

At the conclusion, Santa Claus, in the person of C. E. Hepburn, presented the scholars with candy, fruit, dolls, knives, etc.

A large number of persons, including the older scholars, assembled in the evening and listened to the following excellent programme: Piano solo, Clifford Braider; carol, school; Scripture selection and remarks, Rev. Dr. Yerkes; soprano solo, "Lovers Song," Mrs. B. R Drake; alto solo, "Good Bye Sweet Day" and "The Small Boy With His Toot," Mrs Force; reading, Miss Grace Cooley; recitation, C. E. Hepburn; duett, "Kind Words," Mrs. B. R. Drake and Mrs. Force; singing, school.

William N. Runyon then appeared as Santa Claus and amused all by his witty remarks. He also generously bestowed presents on the scholars, giving to each appropriate gifts.

Those in charge were as follows: Superintendent, L. W Randolph, R. E. Pease, Mrs. L. W. Randolph, Miss Mary Thorn, Miss Alice Woodland, Miss Thompson, Miss Martin, R. W. Barnes, Clifford Braider and Irving Brady.

An interesting entertainment for the children of Warren chapel was enjoyed yesterday afternoon. The scholars sang Christmas carols, Frank Whitely gave a pleasing recitation, and a dialogue, "The Christ Child," by members of the school, was a feature. After a song by Frank Whitely, a fan drill was given. The little ones dressed in white and wearing red snakes and caps presented a beautiful picture. A recitation by Alex Galloway closed the programme.

The scholars were then given candy and fruit, the boys receiving games while the girls were presented with dishes, toilet sets, etc. Those who arranged the entertainment were Mrs. A. D. V. Honeyman, Mrs. Yaeger, Miss Stella Place and Miss Mabelle Gillies.

Warren chapel was filled with scholars and friends of the Sunday-school last evening when a short, but interesting, Christmas programme was rendered. The exercises opened with singing by the school, after which a dialogue by ten girls was given by the following girls: Viola Maire, Clara Southard, Edith Squires, Jennie Stites, Lizzie Davenport, Lena Wickser, Anna Wickser, Maud Sharkey, Edith Demarest, Flossie Demarest, Tillie Coddington, Minnie Bach, Bessie Fraley, May Coddington, Lillie Conover, and Mamie Davenport.

A very pretty selection, "Brightest and Best," was rendered by the Misses Ida Dunham, Lottie Coriell, Essie Smith, Minnie Smith and Maggie Sheppard, and the audience joined in the chorus. All were then provided with refreshments, the large room back of the platform having been arranged to accomodate those present.

Superintendent, L. N Lovell was in charge. Edward Ryder led the singing, and Miss Stella Place was the pianist. Mrs. A. V. D. Honeyman deserves praise for having such an excellent entertainment, as does also Miss Yaeger for her untiring zeal and efforts in training the children.

Miss Randolph, Miss Maire and Miss Gillies assisted in the evening at the tables, and in the distribution of gifts.

The Christmas entertainment at the Mt. Olive Baptist church last night was a great success, inasmuch as it provided an evening of pleasure to all. Superintendent M. C. Dobbins was in charge, and the following programme was rendered: Reading of Scripture, superintendent; singing, Joy to the World, school; prayer, Rev. P. S. Gibson; stereopticon exhibition, C. E. Hepburn; singing, The Child Jesus primary department selections, Miss Nolin and Prof. M. C. Dobbins and Wesley Brokaw. This was followed by a visit from Santa Claus, which was successfully impersonated by R. Walker, who pleased the little ones greatly by describing his trip from his winter home. He then presented the children with candy dolls, after which cake and ice cream were served in abundance. All were much pleased with the illustrated pictures taken from various parts of the world. This school is growing rapidly and is one of the most successful in the city.

Christmas with all its attendant festivities invaded the Seventh-Day Baptist church last evening and was duly celebrated by the young people. The progamme consisted of a cantata entitled "The Court of King Winter."

The cantata introduced the following characters: King Winter, Arthur Titsworth; November, Miss Edith Titsworth; December, Miss Ethel Titsworth; Flowers, Dandelion, Violet and White Clover, the Misses Bessie Dunham, Grace Weeks, and Marie Rogers; Jack Frost, Charles Titsworth; Heralds, Bryant Randolph, Harry Rogers, Wendell Mosher. Charles Naegle, George Babcock and Fred Gorton; Elves, the Misses Etna Rogers, Isadora Randolph, Eva Rogers, Ethel Morris, Nettie Stillman, Nellie Williams, Florence Scriven, and Phillip Mosher and Boardman Mosher; Winds, the Misses Grace Van Sickle, Lizzie Naegle, Bertha Mitchel and Edna Randolph; Dame Nature, Miss Louise Lewis; Christmas Day, Miss Merdie Randolph.

The cantata opened by Dame Nature saying good bye to November and welcoming December. Then followed recitations and songs, while King Winter received his visitors one by one until they were all gathered, and the Heralds brought in large packages of presents which were distributed among the primary department.

The committee in charge of the entertainment consisted of Miss Grace Lewis, chairman, Mrs. H. M. Maxson, Mrs. J. P., Mosher, Mrs. George Stillman and Miss Ernestine Smith. The refreshment committee was composed of Mrs. Charles Dunham, chairman, Mrs. Will Rogers, Mrs. Will Mosher and Mrs. Amanda Maxson. The decorating was in charge of the following committee, Miss Louise Lewis, chairman, and Miss Mineola Tomlinson.

A large altar of fir was suspended over the platform, while holly was tastefully bunched over the doors and windows and along the edge of the gallery.

Ice cream, candy, cake, fruits, nuts and other delicacies were arranged on tables and everybody was invited to help himself or herself, as the case might be.

The Christmas day services at the Church of the Redeemer called out a very large congregation, who listened attentively to a powerful sermon by Dr. Johnstone on the text: "Unto us a Child is Given; Unto us a Son is Born." At the early celebration and the later one, about one hundred persons partook of the Holy Communion. After services Dr. Johnstone was presented with a valuable gold watch, the gift of his parishioners. The vestry have been compelled to utilize the annext to the church, and have placed therein a number of additional pews, to accommodate the rapidly increasing congregation.

Christmas was celebrated in Vincent chapel last evening by the Sunday-school of the First M. E. church in a very pleasing manner. The programme consisted of an appropriate cantata entitled 'Santa Claus and the Fairies." The characters and those who took them were as follows:

Fairies, the Misses Carrie Meyer, Grace Webster, Mabel Smith, Nettie Bauersachs, Edna Moore, Lucy Jennings, Lucy Goeller, Florence McDonald, Martha Codlington, Cora Harris, Mabel Vail and Mabel Jenkins; Busy Bees, the Misses Carrie Mulford, Mamie Divine, Nellie Apgar, Grace Ulrich and Lillie Sutton; Miss Margaret, their teacher, Miss Eva Jennings; Miss Jack Frost, Miss Edna Harris; Santa Claus, Robert Davis; newsboys, Henry Band, Irving Harned and Fred Lynn; waifs, Miss Louise Norrie and Harry Vail; little children, the Misses Edna Kennedy and Gertie Geyer.

The Busy Bees were a Sunday-school class and were packing a box for the poor and needy, while at the other end of the stage Santa Claus, Miss Jack Frost and the fairies prepared presents for them. After many pretty songs, solos and choruses, in which the newsboys, waifs and little children were introduced, they all finally gathered around Santa Claus and received their presents. Miss Raybert gave a pleasing recitation. Then boxes of candy and gifts were distributed among the members of the Sunday-school.

There was a large attendance of parents and friends who greatly enjoyed the delightful entertainment. The committee in charge consisted of James R Joy, chairman, J. McNaughton, N. Y. Hull, John Lewis, George R. Cornwell, Miss Ida Anglemann, Miss Sarah Douglass, Miss Elsie Horne. Miss Etta Raybert, Miss Laura Mulford and Mrs. N. Y. Hull. The cantata was arranged by the following committee: Mrs. N. Y. Hull, chairman, Miss Etta Raybert, and Miss Gertrude Sharp. The decorations were looked after by J. McNaughton, John Lewis, Miss Anglemann, Miss Douglass and Miss Mulford. The primary department will have their Christmas entertainment and spread this afternoon. It will be in charge of Mrs. L. M. French, Mrs. J. R. Joy, Mrs. S. W. Clarke, Miss Bertha Whitney and the Misses Edna and Maud French.

At Trinity Reformed church there was a large attendance and a pleasant evening was spent in a visit and description of a tour through the principal cities and lakes of Ireland, by use of the stereopticon. The views were very successfully thrown on a large canvas by Messrs. J. Hervey Doane and Harry H. Cook, members of the Camera Club. Rev.T. Logan Murphy was present and kindly read a description of the pictures, and caused considerable amusement by relating bits of clever Irish wit and repartee. At the conclusion of the lecture the Sun*day-school retired to the lecture room,* where every scholar and teacher was presented with a box of candy.

The primary department of Trinity Reformed church Sunday-school held their Christmas festival in the Parish house on Clinton avenue. The children of the infant class and one or two invited guests of the same age, entertained all present with their songs and recitations.

Santa Claus made his appearance covered with snow on his high peaked cap, and to the accompaniment of his bells, made a good speech and sang a good song; and then helped to give out the oranges, candy boxes, books, cards and little calendars, which the mission had provided, with the kind help of outside friends to whom they wish to return many thanks. All had a good time.

THEATRICAL.

All the play-going paths now verge toward the Herald Square Theatre, New York, where David Belasco's newest triumph continues to sustain a furore not approached by any drama of the past half century. A brilliant playmaker before this achievement, "The Heart of Maryland," stamps Belasco a Sardou. A wonderously stirring tale is this Maryland idyl. Words quail before its recital. Stage reflection only can realize it. It opens in the green heart of the southern State. Its period is Gen. Lee's second invasion. It is a love tale told under apple blooms in old orchards pungent with battle haze. A mountain stream threads its way down a yel ow hillside and dimples under an old wooden bridge. "The Lilacs," an old colonial mansion, faces your right. Maryland Calvert, a southern girl, and a fervid rebel, lives there. Her lover, also a southerner, Alvan Kendrick, a rebel before espousing the Union cause. This estranges them. Mrs. Leslie Carter appears as Maryland, Maurice Barrymore is Alvan.

WINDOW DECORATIONS ABLAZE.

Small Fire in the Shoe Store of Josephs Brothers Yesterday.

While Wm. Jaffery, a clerk at the shoe store of Josephs Brothers, was lighting the gas in one of the windows last evening about 4:45, the head of the match dropped into some cotton used for decorations, and immediately a flame shot upward to where some lace curtains were hanging. In an instant the whole window was ablaze. T. U. Smith, of Doane's shoe store, saw the fire and sent in an alarm from Box 12. The department responded very quickly, but when they arrived the fire was out. Mr. Josephs exercised good judgment by pulling the inflammable material out of the window where the flames could be extinguished by water without damage. The loss was $72.74.

THE SPICE OF LIFE.

Variety as It Is Seen In the Customs of Various Countries.

One of the most enjoyable things in travel is to notice how etiquette varies from land to land. In America, when a steamer leaves, the men shake hands and the women kiss each other and sometimes cry. In France and Italy especially the women weep, kiss and hug and hug each other almost as vigorously as if they were in a wrestling match. An American woman shakes hands with a man of her acquaintance, while in Spain she always gives her hand to be kissed. It makes the same sensation in Madrid for a man to shake a woman's hand and shake it as it does in New York for a foreigner to salute a New York woman's hand and kiss it.

In America it is rare for wine or beer to be served at table at a woman's luncheon or dinner party. In Europe not to have these would be considered the height of discourtesy. Among the western nations it is customary for men and ladies to invite him to prolong his visit. Among the eastern nations it is the conventional intimation that it is time for him to go. An American man removes his hat while talking to a woman, while the "end" keeps it carefully perched upon his ear. In Spain the men never uncover their heads head than be seen without his hat on when in company, while the ruffian takes is off as a mark of disrespect.

We pay no heed to what shoes when our friends call or when we call upon our friends. In Japan a woman takes off her shoes at the threshold, and if there is a hole in her stocking feet upon her hostess, who is similarly attired.

Among the Anglo-Saxons the most cordial invitation to help yourself to be at home." This, in the tropical lands, is very bad form. You express the same pleasant thought there by saying, "My servants are at your service." (picking out the best one) "is your boy when ever you are here."

In western lands every guest has his or her own knife. In eastern lands to give a guest a knife is an insult, etiquette demanding that the labor of cutting be done by the cook and not by the guest. In America a woman will not expose her ankles to view, while an Arabian woman never thinks of her lower extremities, but regards the appearance of the face as a positive crime.—New York Mail and Express.

A LITTLE PROBLEM.

And Why the Man Who Tried to Solve It Waxed Angry.

"Are you good at figures?" asked Mr. Bentley of Mr. Groves, who occupied the next desk at the right.

"I used to be," replied Mr. Groves. "Why do you ask?"

"I have a little problem here. Take it down and see what you can do with it: 'A man has $100 with which to buy 100 head of stock. He pays $10 a head for cattle, $3 a head for calves and 50 cents a head for sheep. How many of each does he buy?'"

"Do you know the answer?"

"Yes; it's very simple when you get it."

"I think it can be worked by algebra. I'm a little rusty, but I'll see what I can do."

Bentley turned to his routine of desk work, and Groves started in to solve the problem. In a few minutes, after having covered several pages of paper with x, y and z calculations, he asked suddenly, "Is there any way to make it come out even?"

"Why, you come out even!" replied Bentley, who had forgotten all about the problem. "So you're still working at that, are you? I've got mine."

"No, not yet; but it can be worked."

All morning Groves struggled with the five stock and at noon he was mad and discouraged.

"What's the answer anyway?" he asked.

"I'll show you," said Bentley, and he marked down:

5 cattle at $10	$50
1 hog at $3	3
94 sheep at 50 cents	47
	$100

"How did you work it?" asked Groves.

"I didn't work it. A fellow told me the answer."

"What made you give it to me, then?"

"I thought you might be able to guess it."

"Well," said Mr. Groves, "you keep your fool problems to yourself."—Chicago Record.

The Small Boy's Interest.

"You should put your nickels and dimes into a savings bank and let them draw interest," said an indulgent father to his little boy out northeast who was continually asking for nickels and pennies to buy soda water and candy along in the early summer.

"What's interest?" questioned the little fellow.

The subject was fully explained to him by the father, and the boy was made to understand that the interest would be due in time buy all the sweetmeats he wanted. His mother bought him a toy savings bank, and he commenced business, depositing the coin received from his father every night on his return from his office. Last Sunday, out of curiosity, the father examined into the little one's financial affairs and found that it ran:

"Why, George, where's all the money I gave you?" he asked the youngster.

"Been drawing interest," replied the young hopeful.—Washington Star.

The "Cop" Is Rather Impatient.

"Here's something that may save your life when a bull gets after you: When a bull charges, just before the final lurch he shuts his eyes, and if you have the presence of mind to step aside you will be in about two or three feet from you all you have to do is to step aside, and he will pass you. It requires a sufficient presence of mind to do this call let a bull charge all day with perfect safety. This is not a new thing, as it is one of the secrets of the bull fighter in the corrida where the sport is practiced. The bull fighters say that a cow does not do this, and they would never try any such trick on a cow. I have never seen it known that what is said about the bull's habit is true. —Philadelphia Record.

She Knew.

"You've heard of rounding the cape?" said Mr. Smuggins to his wife, who had asked him to explain politics when he read, "No, dear," answered Mrs. Smuggins cheerfully, "I should say I have. Why, they've done that ever since socks went out of fashion."—Chicago Tribune.

The Playwright's View.

Small Auditor (at a farce comedy)—Papa, what makes that man down there twist up his face in that queer way?

Papa (the author)—I presume he is one of the newspaper critics and is trying not to laugh.—New York Weekly.

THE MAN YOUR DAUGHTER KNOWS

How If You Can Recognize His Portrait In This Picture.

His appearance is so eminently respectable that you feel the same satisfaction on finding him around the house as you experience on seeing a choice bit of Chelsea on your wall or a well bred horse in your stable. His eyes are sleepy, honest eyes spaced, his head rather rangy. In your presence expose anything more than vacant indifference you don't much care.

His hair is always beautifully smoothed, with a soothing, good natured, lazy parting, indelibly in the exact center, has evidently grown there and is not, as are other partings, the result of artifice. An impious few have dared to refer to his aspirations, and if you sometimes wish the ends were not so stiffly starched you never hurt his feelings by mentioning it. His attire is always faultless, immaculate, and his shoes especially win your warm and envious admiration. They are never spotted, crooked nor out at the toes or over.

Personally your are not well acquainted with him. Your wife mentions his name sometimes, and your daughter is no averse to his society, you understand. Quite often you meet him on the doorstep when you return home from the office. Immediately he will remember a pressing engagement and will depart in a somewhat high handed fashion, and you strive to recollect his name with indifferent success, usually calling him by the appellation of his predecessor in the good graces of your daughter. Sometimes you run across him at your club, and you remember that he was late in dinner, and you sit over the coffee with him afterward, while he smokes your cigars a trifle condescendingly and kindly spares a portion of your wine until the conversation dies away for the twentieth time in ten minutes and he excuses himself and returns to the ladies. His "adieu" in the evening runs your daughter, who, during the last half of the ten minutes, has been beckoning to him from behind the portieres, and when she has gained herself unseen by you. You do not beg him to stay. Somehow it is very difficult to make conversation with the man your daughter knows.

And so you keep on meeting him at short intervals, until one day your daughter announces that he is absolutely necessary to her future happiness, and you purchase him for her at a figure which you consider quite modest, when you come to think of his shoes and hat. Thereupon your wife assures you that you have done well, and you experience a slight glow of pride as a result of her commendations, and you feel rather thankful that you don't have to talk to him again for at least a month.—Richard Stillman Powell in Life.

Harmonious Prose, but Not Verse.

The greatest danger which attends the would be writer of harmonious prose is the pitfall into which he inadvertently steps by accidents of verse. It can hardly be said of any other modern writer of English whose pages are as musical as Stevenson's that they are not also quite pitfall. But in Stevenson's we never come upon the smallest fragment of pseudo verse—a too prettily rounded paragraph, or one too accurately cadenced, or too evident balancing of phrases, a too regular arrangement of words or repetition of sounds. We are never seduced by the vulgar charms of the rhetorical, the grandiloquent or the sentimental cadence, and it is almost an insult to take pains to say that he never descends to "cheap English," is never caught by the prompt appeal of trite verbal formulas, by the attractiveness of capitalized terms or of words which do not precisely reproduce the thought, or by those terrible bromagem devices, like loud alliteration, which have been the curse of modern verse when they aspire to style at all and so generally accepted by the public as proofs of technical mastery. Perfect accord between sense and sound, perfect beauty of sound and a perfect avoidance of palpable artifice—these, with frankness and a very great simplicity, are the qualities of Stevenson's prose style.—"Robert Louis Stevenson and His Writing," by Mrs. M. G. Van Rensselaer, in Century.

Rough on the Sentry.

One of the most amusing stories of the day trents of mistaken philanthropy. At a certain hour each three hours the sentry on duty near the hospital. The surgeon was preparing to go to bed inside, when he was annoyed and alarmed at the sentry's wailings. His experienced ear told him that the man had a severe bronchial affliction, needing a strong remedy.

He dressed himself in his slippers, and then, going into the dispensing room, compounded a powerful mixture. This he took outside to the sentry with instructions as to when he should take it. The man obeyed. The surgeon insisted and finally commanded the soldier to take the medicine, which he did with wry faces and wails. Then the worthy surgeon went to bed, pleased to hear no more coughing.

Next morning, to his surprise, the commanding officer sent for him and said that the sentry had complained, declaring that the surgeon had forced him to swallow something which had nearly killed him. An investigation followed and revealed the fact that while the surgeon was mixing the medicine the coughing sentry had been relieved and a fresh man had consequently had been given to the wrong man.—London Tit-Bits.

Chest Pains.

Chest pains usually cause great discomfort to a patient and are sometimes most distressing symptoms. Dr. Hughlings Jackson Dr. J. K. Crook relates a series of cases as illustrating the diagnostic value of chest pains. In some cases these pains are referred from an affection of the discomfited stomach, in some cases it is neuralgia, and in exceptional cases the lungs themselves are at fault. Sane people with pains in the chest think they have some lung or heart disease. Pneumonia causes pain, but the other symptoms make the diagnosis easy. Consumption is not often accompanied by pain, and when it does occur it is from continual coughing.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Youthful Ambition.

Mr. Howell (of the firm of Gettup & Howell)—Well, little girl, what do you want?

Six-year-old Waif (tired of selling papers on the street)—Say, mister, don't you want to dress a little girl all up in fine clothes an put her in yr front window to look purty an draw a crowd?—Chicago Tribune.

There is something on earth grander than arbitrary power. The thunder, the lightning and the earthquake are terrible, but the judgment of the people is more.—Daniel Webster.

The wise prove and the foolish confess by their conduct that a life of employment is the only life worth leading.—Paley.

A SOCIALISTIC EXPERIMENT.

Life and Rules of Work at Lane's Labor Settlement In Paraguay.

Cosme is the name of Lane's labor settlement in Paraguay, an outcome of the abortive socialistic settlement of New Australia. The Cosme Monthly gives some account of life at Cosme. Labor is roughly divided into outdoor and indoor departments. Bosses, none so named, are in charge of various subdepartments of each kind of labor. Workmen are hauled in clearing, farming, gardening, dairying and several mechanical trades. The cooking is done by men in a common kitchen, only two families maintaining kitchens of their own. Two cooks are on duty in the common kitchen, and there are three relays of cooks for the service. Married persons have their meals served at home, but single men eat in the large dining hall at tables seating four persons each. The women attend co-operatively to the washing and mending of the single men. Other such work in the colony is done in the family.

The colony works eight hours a day five days a week. No work is done on Sunday, and there is one other weekly holiday. Most persons take a half holiday on Saturday and the day of the other half holiday at some other time. There is a midday summer siesta of three hours and two quarters from 11 o'clock a.m. Breakfast is at 5:30 o'clock in summer and 6:30 in winter. The cook's horn regulates everything in the settlement. Every adult receives an allowance of three Paraguayan dollars weekly, and children have 1½ Paraguayan dollars. Men must pay $2.76, women $2.50 and children 90 cents weekly for board. What is left may be spent at the settlement store. The women had for a time an extra allowance of $1 a week for the purchase of luxuries, chiefly flour, sugar and coffee. The stock of these luxuries gave out, and the allowance was discontinued. Men may use the value of their holiday time in the purchase of articles made in holiday labor. No price is yet charged for boots. Men buy home grown tobacco at 20 cents a pound, petroleum, monthly magazines and soap. There are books and piles of newspapers in the dining hall, and these are free to every one.

Every night at dusk the colonists gather in the dining hall, which is also an assembly room, to hear "evening notes" read. These are articles prepared for publication in the press of the outside world, letters from friends and newspaper clippings. The dining hall is lit up at night, and the colonists read and play chess or checkers. There is a Spanish class every twice a week, and a dancing class has been formed. Every gathering now ends in a dance, though women, and especially single women, are scarce. There is a glee club, and the singing class meets twice a week. Saturday night is a social night, and the Literary and Social union takes charge and provides entertainment.—New York Sun.

An African Cook.

Darin Ali was our swarthy chef, a little wizened up old fellow, much given to complaining of and quarreling with the other members of the outfit, but, on the other hand, a first class jungle cook. He had seen a good deal of the world, having visited Melbourne and other places in Australia. Not finding them to his liking, however, he had returned to his native jungle. His wardrobe was, like Sam Weller's knowledge of London, extensive and peculiar. On one day he would appear wearing a turbouch, two yards of collar and a spoon; the next day very tight trousers and an old military overcoat; some other day an assorted and gaudy neckcloth, of which he said, "Him cost me £5 at Melbourne."

On the march his duty was to drive the sheep—two white, fat tailed things. They got so used to marching that after a few days they needed no driving and would follow of their own accord. Those killed off day by day till they were all gone, and a fresh lot had to be bought to fill their places. It was necessary to take sheep with us in order to keep the pot supplied when our time was devoted exclusively to the pursuit of lions. On such occasions it would have been fatal to spare to discharge a rifle in order to supply ourselves with food. One sheep marched with us for about 240 miles, his day of execution having been postponed to the very last because we had become so mutually attached. When he was killed, he was barely eatable.—Nineteenth Century.

Patriotic and Diplomatic.

In Sir Walter Scott's journal he speaks repeatedly of the superior appearance of English youths over those of Scotland. He theorizes that their manners ripened earlier and more thoroughly in a sunnier climate. We are accustomed to think of England as something other than a hot house, but there may be a germ of truth in the idea. Every one acknowledges the grace and ease of even the most ignorant peasant in southern countries. In this connection may be cited a speech made to an American who attended some convention in Europe a few years ago. He had pinned to the lapel of her coat a tiny badge which bore the Italian flag. While on a water excursion she noticed a vessel which flouted the same ensign. A thrill of helm-wish shook her voice as she said impulsively to her boatman, "Did you ever see anything more beautiful than that banner?" With a courteous bow he answered, "Never, madam, except that which you honor by wearing over your heart."—New York Times.

English Churches.

The English people have a deep seated love for their old churches and cathedrals, and they spend money lavishly for their preservation. In the last 20 years not less than £10,000,000 has been expended in the restoration of these edifices, and this does not include any sums below £500.

In London alone £800,000 has been thus spent. In addition £2,000,000 has been devoted in the country at large to the erection of new churches. Another notable fact is that most of the money raised for these purposes has been derived from private gifts.—London Letter.

With Emphasis.

Neighbor—Bertie, your mother is calling you.

Bertie—Yes'um, I know it, but I fancy she don't want me very bad.

Neighbor—She has called you seven times already.

Bertie—Yes, I know, but she hasn't called "Albert" yet.—American Hebrew.

To criticise was originally to pass an opinion upon, whether favorable or otherwise, and the fact that most opinions are unfavorable is indicated in the present signification of the word.

We have more power than will, and it is often by way of excuse to ourselves that we fancy things are impossible.—Rochefoucauld.

JUSTICE TO THE PUPPY.

It Is Time That His Name Should Be Cleared of Contumely.

It is high time that a word should be spoken in apology to the much abused puppy, who has for years been made to stand as an emblem of the most despicable member of the human family.

When a man discovers traits of meanness, when he betrays a meddlesome, prying, unskilful curiosity, we are too prone to characterize him as a "puppy" without stopping to think of the contumely thereby heaped upon the canine animal of immature years.

Instead of being a term of reproach, "puppy," properly considered, is a high and undeserved compliment bestowed upon the object of contempt, but while we thus unintentionally honor the end, we do a distinct and unwarranted injustice to the puppy, for in his sort of instinct that he is no better than the man to whom he is likened, inasmuch as by calling a cad a puppy we as much as say that the puppy is a mere bumbling upstart of a creature, which he is not.

The puppy is frank, free and frolicsome, always in the best of humor, with nothing of meddlesome curiosity about him. He never sulks in his kennel nor complains because things do not go just as he wants them to go. He makes friends with everybody he meets and the dog, from high and the low, the good looking and the ugly, and he is no respecter of silk, satin and broadcloth above cotton or fustian or rags.

He is not squeamish as to his diet, and takes what is given to him gladly, and as much more as he can get hold of.

He may and does rend your doormat and demolish stray rubbers and make ravelings of your raiment, but he does all this joyously and without malice. It is his safety valve, the instinct given him whereby he may blow off some part of his exuberant liveliness.

The puppy is the very quintessence of animated good nature. His is the genial temperament, his the merry making disposition that would have all nature, animate and inanimate, come in his ways.

Therefore, to call a mean spirited fellow a puppy is a gratuitous and unwarranted libel upon the four footed ingenue, and it is time that justice was done to the puppy by no longer making him the emblem and the analogue of the man we call by his name.

A puppy does not put on airs, nor turn up his nose at people whom he fancies are below him—if, indeed, he ever considers anybody below him—but he does love to indulge in liquids more potent than milk, nor make himself odorous with cigarette smoke.

The puppy is mischievous, but never malicious. He tries to be everybody's friend and was never known to speak ill of any one.

Then why has he been maligned all these years? Come, let us no longer degrade a good fellow, and a merry, by employing him as a simile of all that is mean and despicable in human nature.—Boston Transcript.

Prices Two Centuries Ago.

The question of prices in the first quarter of the seventeenth century is full of interest to every one, and it is satisfactory to find that the cost of living is not behind in the days of our forefathers as we are often led to believe. Mary Verney writes to Ralph at Blois complaining bitterly of the dearness of provisions in London. Beef is fourpence, veal and mutton eightpence, while Pen Verney reckons a shillings a week too much for her diet, which is all reckoned fixed at £6 a year. Twelve pounds a year seems a great deal for willful little Betty, aged 13, to spend on her dress, but country food is one thing and London another, Mary writes, to wear anything but silk. The sum of £50 claimed by Nancy Denton, who was a spoiled child and rich maun's daughter, is far more appropriate to her position. In fact, the fees earned by physicians in those days were far in excess of what we should give now, in spite of the exceeding simplicity of—not to say remarkable unpleasantness—of their pharmacopoeia and treatment.

Dr. Theodore Mayence, the fashionable doctor, left £140,000 (equivalent to over $500,000) behind him, and Sir Ralph is miserable because he cannot afford to pay Dr. Denton the £50 which is the ordinary fee for a confinement. A Venetian mirror costs £40, a portrait by Vandyke £50. A maid's wages come to £3, but the pair of "thrimed gloves," with which it is the fashion to reward any extra services on her part, comes to £1 5s.—an absurdly disproportionate payment. The price of Sir Edmund's Covent Garden house is £1,000, and many horses fetch as much, while £200 a year is the usual price for a boy's board and teaching in a good French family.—Longman's Magazine.

He Took the Case.

Somebody—perhaps it was Postmaster Willett—told a good story about Campbell Carrington the other day. Carrington, it seems, had a client who was almost absolutely sure to be sent to the penitentiary. The facts were dead against him. But the lawyer talked with him awhile, impressed upon him the narrowness of his chances for acquittal and finally asked him this question:

"Would you rather plead guilty and take the sentence which the court will impose, or would you prefer to go upon the stand and give your own version to the jury?"

"Nyther," said the man coolly.

Carrington looked at the accused with astonishment.

"My friend," said he, "any man who can stand here and say 'nyther' when the shadow of the penitentiary is upon him gets my services for nothing. You will be acquitted yet."

The result proved the prediction. Carrington went in, fought the case, and the man was acquitted.—Washington Post.

Mermaids.

All the world over there are legends about mermaids. The Chinese tell stories not unlike others about the sea woman of their southern seas. Mankind is taught in the most excellent evidence that a mermaid was caught in a net, dragged to the shores of the Belfast Lough, in the sixth century, while another caught at Edam, in 1403, was carried to Haarlem and kept there for many years.

Gay Jackets of Pisakaks.

The Eskimos of Alaska make jackets of the skins of the red spotted trout of that region, known as the Dolly Varden, which they tan for this purpose. The Dolly Varden is a handsome fish of a peculiar polish gray color; it attains a length of 2½ feet and a weight of 10 to 12 pounds. The skin is waterproof, and with its bright red spots it makes a very showy jacket.—New York Sun.

The word preposterous originally meant a process of reversing the natural order of things, such as indicated by the common expression "putting the cart before the horse," an easy gradation it has come to be used in its present significance.

Liberal Response.

Last Sunday evening a week ago at the Christmas service of the Sunday school of the Trinity Reformed church, Superintendent E. E. Anthony made made an appeal for toys, games, etc., that had been laid aside by the children of the school, stating that Mrs. W. A. Woodruff, of East Second street, knew of many homes where they would brighten the hearts of children too poor to buy toys. As a result of the appeal enough were sent to Mrs. Woodruff to supply forty-four different children.

THE

New York Times.

THE TIMES is a newspaper for intelligent men and women who want to read all the news of the world every day. The paper has distinguished itself during the year by its comprehensive and impartial presentation of the great political issues.

It is not frivolous or visionary. It sees plenty of good in the world and tells about it. It tells of the bad when it must, but not unwholesomely. It prints with fullness the record of human endeavor in many fields outside of business, politics and war—in literature, religion, science, art, sports, and household matters. No paper in the country prints so many book reviews and so much book news. No paper has so complete a financial page—a daily manual for investors and officers of financial institutions. Its market reports—wool, cotton, breadstuffs, farm products, etc.—are the best in the country.

The Semi-weekly TIMES is of the old-fashioned sort—as old as Thomas Jefferson: majority rule, no Socialism, no machine tyranny, the divorce of politics from private money-making, no interference, individual emancipation, and every-day honesty. To promote the advance of the Democratic Party along these lines it labors with heart and conscience and all its might.

NEW YORK TRIBUNE.

Leader of the Republican Party.

1896.

Are You Willing to Listen to a Suggestion?

The New York Tribune's broad columns and large print make it the easiest paper in the country to read, whether by cars or at home.

Henry Romaike, proprietor of the largest newspaper clipping bureau in the world, testifies in a published card, that his clippings for over 4,000 dailies show that The Tribune contains, "day by day and week by week, far more original matter than any daily newspaper in New York City." He proves the fact by figures. The Weekly ranks the same.

Business men find its market reports of The Tribune absolutely without an equal. The Tribune is the only newspaper in New York City whose reporters actually visit all the different markets in person.

The Tribune now prints the best and freshest humorous pictures of the day from the comic papers of Paris, Berlin, London and supplies plenty of other entertainment.

By its special correspondents and correspondence, its able editorials and high literary character, The Tribune maintains the foremost position in the regard of Republicans and lovers of music, art, and good books.

The Tribune's society news is known everywhere for excellence. Its Fashions have always been reliable, and its descriptions of styles are, as a rule, foretold in The Tribune sooner than in other publications.

The New York Tribune is recognized, officially as the leading newspaper of the Republican party.

Farming and Labor. The Tribune has for 50 years demanded, and yet demands, that every possible dollar's worth of food and comfort for the consumer of American products shall be produced by the American people. The Tribune's farm page, edited by one of the various editions six days in every year.

A man is judged by the newspaper he takes. He who reads The Tribune is wide-awake, well-posted, respectable and capable, worthy of the confidence of employers and friends. If you are a young man, you will live in an all round way, by reading The Tribune to that which is best; if you feed your mind upon newspapers which are vulgar, trashy and insanity. Think for a moment of the people who read newspapers of that kind, on the other hand. The Tribune has probably the largest clientele of the very people who can help to increase your business. It is the best paper in the United States. Associate yourself with them.

Mr. Horr continues to write for The Tribune.

OFFERING OF THE LIBRARY.

BENEFITS THAT BOROUGH PEOPLE WOULD GET FROM CONSOLIDATION.

A Total of 13,560 Books Are Now Accessible to Its Patrons—Increasing 1,000 a Year—All Departments Covered.

As in the arguments for the consolidation of Plainfield and North Plainfield advanced by ex-Mayor Saunders and others, the Free Public Library has been spoken of as an additional reason for such consolidation, I present to the North Plainfield readers of The Daily Press a few facts regarding it that they may better realize the advantages that would thus accrue to them in this direction.

What then has the library to offer in return for the tax which would be levied? This tax, by the way, is but five cents on $100 on the tax valuation.

The library now has 13,560 books, all, but a comparatively few, of which are for circulation. These have been carefully selected and comprise books on practically all subjects. Its stock is being added to at the rate of from 900 to 1,000 volumes yearly. It has a scientific department, liberally endowed by the late George H. Babcock, which will enable it to spend $10,000 for scientific books, and to add from 300 to 400 volumes yearly to that department alone. The library is so catalogued and arranged, both in printed form and by card catalogue, that its contents can readily be ascertained. Through the courtesy of The Daily Press it publishes a monthly bulletin of additions.

All residents, over twelve years of age, and all public school children, although under that age, are entitled to draw books for home use. Each borrower is entitled to two books at a time, which, with a few exceptions, may be retained for two weeks and renewed at the end of that time if desired. The library circulates books every afternoon and one evening (Saturday). During the last library year it issued over 30,000 books; these figures, as well as the fact that applications for its use have been received from Dunellen, South Plainfield, Scotch Plains and Fanwood, serve to show its appreciation by the people. The public have free access to its shelves, and to the credit of the Plainfield people be it said, that although all ages, classes and conditions borrow freely among its shelves, the loss to the library from this cause has been too slight to be seriously considered.

Its reading room, well lighted and heated, is open every week day from 9 a. m. until 10 p. m., with the exception of the two closing hours at noon and one at night. It receives regularly 107 periodicals and newspapers, including the popular illustrated magazines, which are all accessible to the public. Over 40,000 people last year visited the library.

The reference work, i. e., the work of assisting all inquirers to find the information of which they are in search, is very large. All are invited to make known their wants, and every effort is made on the part of the library staff to assist the inquirer. In this way, the library is constantly being called upon to supply information on subjects of the widest range. This is mentioned as an indicator of its great educational value, apart from its work of circulation. Another educational feature is its co-operation with literary and debating societies and especially with schools. The natural ally of the public school is the equally American institution, the public library, and between the schools, public and parochial, there exists a hearty co-operation. This is shown by the fact that in the last year 2,471 books were issued to teachers for use in the classrooms. Modern educational methods require the use of many books other than text books, and this demand is beyond the power of the public school library to supply. There is no doubt that, had the North Plainfield teachers the same privileges, the efficiency of the North Plainfield school would be greatly increased.

The library makes a point of its work with children, and for them is a liberal supply of the best juvenile literature. This will be appreciated by those parents who are aware of the mass of literature constantly coming from the press, unhealthy and even impure as it too often is, which children, having nothing better to turn to, are so apt to get hold of.

In closing, I would call the attention of North Plainfielders to the fact, that if the two places were made one, they, without participating in the almost invariable struggle of a young library for support, would enter into the full privileges of a library which has passed through this stage and whose success is assured.

A MODEL DRUG STORE.

J. Howard Leggett's New Pharmacy in the Y. M. C. A. Building.

When Watchung avenue is cut through and united with the corresponding street in the Borough, the vicinity of Watchung avenue and Front street promises to be one of the most important trade centres in the city. One of the first of Plainfield's merchants to realize that fact is J. Howard Leggett, the druggist, who has rented the stores on the ground floor of the Y. M. C. A. building. Only the corner store will be occupied at present. The drug store will be one of the handsomest and best fitted up in the city. Admission to it is gained through the double doors at the corner and those on the Watchung avenue side. To the right and left of the corner entrance are two large windows. Then on the right comes the tiled soda water fountain with its pink Tennessee marble counter, and a counter devoted to confectionery and cigars.

The left of the room is partitioned by a handsome solid quartered oak partition. The rear of the main room is devoted to the retail department and a multitude of drawers contain the various articles. A set of shelves, with sliding glass doors in front, occupy the front of the partition, while close by the front street show window is a novel case for perfumes, toilet articles and sponges, one above the other. Back of the partition, on top of which are a series of arches, elaborately carved, with the monogram of J. H. L. on the centre arch, the office is on the left and the prescription department on the right, each fitted out with the latest improvements, and shut off from the rest windows of chipped glass.

The store is finished throughout in quartered oak with nickel trimmings.

Five sides of the show cases are made of double thickness French plate glass, while the front of the perfumery cabinet is beveled plate glass.

The room is lighted by electricity while gas, with Welchbach burners, is to be added. Warm water is used in heating the store.

The cellar is a commodious one with a special bottle closet, while a closet for poisons is located at the left of the store room.

The store was fitted up by Fisher Bros., of the New York Store Fixture Company, and the handsome green shades were arranged by Frank G. Wyckoff.

GIVEN A PAST MASTER'S JEWEL.

Masons Make a Presentation to Calvin H. Rugg Last Night.

Previous to the installation of the officers-elect of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. and A. M., last Monday, W. H. Siebring in a neat little speech presented Calvin H. Rugg with a handsome Past Master's jewel. Mr Rugg was so completely surprised that he could make no reply, except to thank the givers.

B. Frank Coriell and W. H. Siebring installed the officers as follows: D. C. Adams, W. M.; S. Beeching, S. W.; W. F. Bartlett, J. W.; Alex Titsworth, treasurer; Charles Yaeger, secretary; J. M. Lewis, chaplain; M. L. Connelly, S. D.; S. Van Horn, J. D.; L. S. Pocock, S. M. of C.; F. W. Hand, J. M. of C.; L. B. Woolston and J. W. De Witt's Little Early Risers for biliousness, indigestion, constipation. A small pill, a prompt cure. L. W. Randolph, 143 W. Front St.

Many merchants are well aware that their customers are their best friends and take pleasure in supplying them with the best goods obtainable. As an instance we mention Perry & Cameron, prominent druggists of Flushing, Michigan. They say: "We have no hesitation in recommending Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to our customers, as it is the best cough medicine we have ever sold, and always gives satisfaction." For sale at 25 and 50 per bottle at Reynold's pharmacy, Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, manager.

Wife—Here's an account of a man who shot himself rather than suffer the pangs of indigestion. Husband—The fool! Why didn't he take De-Witt's Little Early Risers? I used to suffer as bad as he did before I commenced taking these little pills. L. W. Randolph, 143 W. Front st.

AFTER THE SCHOOLS NOW.

STEPHEN A. KROM ADVOCATES INDIVIDUAL CUPS FOR SCHOLARS.

Says the Plan Should Be Adopted Now and Not Wait For Any Disease to Start Among the Pupils—Church Battle Won.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—I see by your report of the meeting of the Board of Education published in last night's issue of your paper, that my communication to the Board of Health in regard to the adoption of individual drinking cups has been misunderstood by both Boards.

In the first place I requested that the rules I suggested should be added to the Sanitary Code of the Board of Health, which code I think is the proper place for them, as the Board of Health is supposed to be composed of individuals who best understand the value of them, and hence are in the best position to pass judgement upon them.

In the rule referring to the individual drinking cup, I stated that covered pitchers should be used, as I am well aware that to use uncovered ones would be dangerous to health. The rule is as follows: "Places for drinking water on the ground floor of the school building shall be discontinued and a covered pitcher provided for each classroom, in which fresh water shall be placed before each session. A numbered cup to be kept in the classroom shall be issued to each pupil, and no interchange of cups shall be allowed."

I followed the lead of the New York City Board of Health in the text of the above rule as I knew that the conditions were about the same in our schools, namely that there is no water on tap in the school room, and to allow the pupils to use the water on the ground floor or in the yard would defeat the object of the rule, for they would borrow a cup of any one of their number who happened to bring his from the class room.

The battle for the adoption of the individual cup in our churches has been fought and won. We are waiting now for the churches to make the necessary business transactions to complete the change. It will take some time to make these transactions, for in such organizations each member waits for some one else to do the work.

The same guns that won that battle can be used in this matter. So we need not prolong the discussion. Everyone knows how effective they were.

To adopt the individual cup in the churches, and not in the schools, would only be another example of the painful inconsistency of human nature.

Had the Newark Board of Health had such a rule as the above, they would have avoided the outbreak and spread of diphtheria that recently started in one of the schools.

I think that we do too much running around with pails of sulphur after some one is dead, and that we do not take enough preventive measures. If an epidemic should break out in one of our schools, one of the first steps we would take to suppress it, would be to adopt individual drinking cups. Why not have them before such an outbreak occurs? They would go a long way towards preventing it.

Aside from the hygenic advantages, the individual cup is the only decent way to take a drink, and I think that we should train the young to realize that fact. Stephen A. Krom.

SENATOR SMITH PLEDGES HIS HELP.

He Receives the Resolution Regarding the Armenian Outrages.

The committee in charge of the meeting in aid of the Armenians held at the Crescent Avenue church on the 2nd inst., are glad to be able to state that about $200 was raised on that occasion and that some contributions to the fund have since been received. There is, however, pressing need of a much larger sum to relieve the urgent claims of the homeless Armenians. Other cities have taken the matter in hand and it is hoped that Plainfield will be sustained in this instance. Contributions may be sent to Dr. Rodman, Mayor Gilbert or Isaac L. Miller. Mr. Miller has received a letter from Senator Smith of this State in which, after acknowledging the receipt of a copy of the resolutions passed at the meeting in question, he says: "I am in full accord with the views set forth by the resolutions which you enclosed relative to the Armenian troubles. I shall have the resolutions presented in the Senate and use every means in my power in the manner requested."

IDENTIFICATION NOT SURE.

PROSECUTION OF JACOB S. JOHNSON FOR MURDER CLOSED.

Witnesses Say They Saw a Man and Woman But Don't Identify Them—The Defence Now Making Their Plea.

The evidence of the prosecution in the trial of Jacob S. Johnson, the evangelist, for the murder of Sarah Ann Rogers, near Somerville several months ago, was completed in the Somerset County Courts at Somerville Tuesday, and the defense was outlined by Counselor James J. Meehan. None of the witnesses positively identified Johnson as the man seen with the woman. Landlord S. J. Treat, of the Commercial Hotel, said he recognized Johnson as the man who came to his house Saturday night with a woman and asked for drinks. Three or four young men testified to seeing the couple at Cawley's saloon. Joseph Gorman, a switchman, said he saw a colored man and woman cross the tracks the night of the murder. The woman of had on a gray dress. He also noticed that the man carried a bag. He could not positively identify Ann Rogers's clothing, nor was he sure the man was Johnson. Garret VanArsdale thought he saw the couple leave the Commercial Hotel.

James J. Meehan opened for the defense. He said they would prove that after the pair were at Cawley's Johnson was left by the woman, who was subsequently seen in stores about town with another man.

APPRECIATED HIS SERVICES

The Plainfield Catholic Club Remembers Its Old President.

It is often said that an efficient officer is never appreciated until he is missing, but John J. Lynch who has occupied the presidential chair of the Plainfield Catholic Club since its organization, until a short time ago, is not one of that number. Last Monday Mr. Lynch was reminded of that fact.

A special meeting of the Plainfield Catholic Club was called for last evening, but the object was not stated. The meeting was called to order by Mr. Ginna who asked Father Murphy to state the object of the call. Father Murphy made a neat little speech, filled with sentiment and humor, and ended by presenting Mr. Lynch with a handsome ebony cane with a carved gold head on which was the inscription: "Presented to J. J. Lynch by the members of the Plainfield Catholic Club, January, 1896."

To Observe Defender's Day.

It was unanimously decided at the meeting of John Hand Camp, 28, S. of V., last evening, to join with Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., and the Women's Relief Corps in a public installation to be held Tuesday evening, January 14th. The question of joining the Death Benefit Association was discussed and the Camp will probably join in a few weeks. The members decided to appropriately observe Union Defender's day, February 12th, by giving an entertainment to consist of a patriotic address, musical selections and recitations, to be followed by a full dress dance. Charles Stephens, Willard C. Sutton and L. Eaton have the entertainment in charge.

A prize of $10 was offered to the members to be awarded to the one who brings in six or more members during 1896.

Want a Fence Built.

A petition is in circulation among the residents of Evona asking the Central railroad to build a fence on each side of the Clinton avenue bridge. This is the structure that John Johnson walked off Saturday and died from the injuries he received. Three other persons have also been hurt by walking off the bridge.

A Foreign Tour.

Rev. C. E. Herring, of the First Presbyterian church, expects to spend his vacation next summer in Europe.

Not a few who read what Mr. Robert Rowls, of Hollands, Va., has to say below will remember their own experience under like circumstances: "Last winter I had la grippe which left me in a low state of health. I tried numerous remedies, none of which did me any good, until I was induced to try a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The first bottle of it so far relieved me that I was enabled to attend to my work, and the second bottle cured me entirely." For sale at 25 and 50 cents per bottle at Reynold's pharmacy, Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, manager.

No excuse for sleepless nights when you can procure One Minute Cough Cure. This will relieve all annoyances, cure the most severe cough and give you rest and health. Can you afford to do without it. L. W. Randolph, 143 W. Front st.

In the Criminal Court there will be several important cases, including the trial of Nicoli Orchetti, the Italian, for the killing of his fellow-countryman at Westfield, and young Theopilus Henderson, for manslaughter, in the killing of Farmer John Miller, at Union, on the occasion of the picnic of the Minnehaha Club.

DRANK HARNESS DRESSING.

A Coachman Made a Serious Mistake in Taking Medicine.

A coachman in the employ of W. J. Buttfield, of 161 Grove street, made a very serious mistake a few nights ago, which might have cost him his life. He had been down town during the evening and when he returned home, which was rather late, he did not feel very well. Before retiring he thought he would take some medicine which he had in a bottle in the barn. Trusting to his knowledge of knowing just where it was, he did not use a light. As a result he drank a considerable quanity of harness dressing by mistake. He went to bed and easly in the morning was taken violently ill. Dr. Rushmore was sent for and gave the proper treatment.

It is now thought that he is out of danger, though he is still unable to leave his bed.

A BRILLIANT EVENT.

Largely Attended Reception Given by Mrs. Israel C. Pierson.

A very pleasant reception and tea was given by Mrs. I. C. Pierson, of Watchung avenue, Tuesday afternoon from 4 to 7 o'clock. The rooms were tastefully decorated with holly and greens, while red and green were the favorite colors. A large number of people were present and enjoyed the social affair exceedingly. Mrs. Pierson was assisted in receiving by the Misses Corbit, Cochran, Hunter, Bowen and VanBoskerck.

During the serving of supper the Marest, of New York, a trio consisting of P. Ludwig Conlie, violin; Clarence Eick, piano and Mr. Sierer, flute, rendered a choice selection of classical music. It was a brilliant affair throughout.

Cutting the Butcher's Credit.

A new system of weekly payments has just been adopted by the Plainfield and Union Beef Companies. The local butchers are now compelled to pay their bills each week for meat purchased the succeeding week before they can get any more. After long consideration of the subject the companies came to the conclusion that this was imperative, in order to keep their accounts up to date. The system will require more carefulness on the part of the local butchers, and will result in less credit being given.

Officers Elected.

At a meeting of the Union County Branch of the State Aid Association, of New Jersey, held in the chapel of Trinity church, Elizabeth, on Monday evening, Jan. 6th, the following officers were elected for 1896: Henry B. Newhall, Plainfield, President; Rev. E. Kimpshall, D. D., Elizabeth, Vice President; Rev. Hobart Clark, Plainfield, Secretary.

Contract Awarded.

The contract for carpenter work on Messrs. French & Vail's hotel on Johnston's Drive has been awarded to Herman Hansen, a resident of the borough, and he will prosecute the work as rapidly as the weather will permit.

For a pain in the chest a piece of flannel dampened with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of the pain, and another on the back between the shoulders, will afford prompt relief. This is specially valuable in cases where the pain is caused by a cold and there is a tendency toward pneumonia. For sale at Reynold's pharmacy, Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, manager.

JOHNSON WON'T GET OUT.

HE REFUSES TO GIVE UP THE COLLECTORSHIP TO E. H. BIRD.

Says He Will Not Vacate the Office Unless the Courts So Declare—Richard V. Lindabury is His Advisor.

"Good morning?"

"Good morning!"

Thus begins the story which promises to end in a battle in the courts between the City of Plainfield and a private individual, who, though serving the city in the capacity of an official, will be made the defendant in a suit seeking to vacate his office and place another man in possession. The time was shortly after the hour of noon Monday. The scene the City Collector's office. The first salutation was spoken by Mr. Bird, which was replied to by Mr. Johnson in a calm voice, but it was like the stillness of the sea before the tempest.

"I have come to take possession of the office of City Collector and the books and papers thereof," said Mr. Bird.

"My term of office has not yet expired," was the declaration of war on the part of Mr. Johnson. He didn't say he wouldn't get out in so many words, but Mr. Bird grasped the situation immediately and said:

"Then do I understand you to say that you refuse to vacate the office?"

"I do," said Mr. Johnson. "I have it on the best of legal authority that my term of office does not expire yet for another year."

Mr. Bird then retired, leaving Mr. Johnson in possession of the office.

Mr Bird would have nothing to say.

Mr. Bird will undoubtedly retain counsel and bring suit to test the question of who is entitled to the office. It will be remembered that in advising an election in December, to avoid the possibility of a vacancy in the office, the Corporation Counsel stated in his opinion, on file, that it was a close question whether Mr. Johnson's term expired at noon of the first Monday in January, 1896, or 1897. The course taken by the city makes it sure that one or the other of the claimants is in office. Had there been no election, and the law hereafter should be decided the other way in some similar case, there would have been a vacancy.

In the Beginning

Of a new year, when the winter season of close confinement is only half gone, many find that their health begins to break down, that the least exposure threatens sickness. It is then as well as at all other times, and with people even in good health, that the following facts should be remembered, namely: that Hood's Sarsaparilla leads everything in the way of medicines; that it accomplishes the greatest cures in the world; has the largest sale in the world, and requires the largest building in the world devoted exclusively to the preparation of the proprietary medicine. Does not this conclusively prove, if you are sick, that Hood's Sarsaparilla is the medicine for you to take?

An Artist.

The Gatcomb Musical Gazette in speaking of Farland's performance, says:

We thought that with the performance of Messrs. Brooks and Denton, the climax of banjo playing had been reached, but we felt much curiosity over the next number on the programme which announced Chopin's Grande Valse Brilliant op 18, and Mendelssohn's Concerto op 64. It is almost superfluous to mention the roloist's name for there is no man in the world, as yet, whose technique can be compared to Mr. Farland's. It was reserved for him to show us the truly marvelous in banjo playing."

Will appear at the Y. M. C. A. Hall next Tuesday evening.

Library Directors Meet.

A meeting of the executive committee of the Board of Directors of the Plainfield Public Library was held at the library Tuesday evening, Dec. 7th. There were present M. W. Tyler, J. Evarts Tracy, Wm. L. Stillman, and John B. Dumont. A number of bills were audited.

The minutes of the meeting of December 3d were read and approved.

The Librarians report for December, 1895, was on motion received and ordered on file.

Supper Arranged For.

At a meeting of Warren Engine Company, No. 1, held last evening, the members decided to give a supper Tuesday evening, February 4th. It will probably be held in the parlors of the engine house.

ENTRE NOUS.

Two souls there are upon this earth
Whose daily lives touch mine,
The one is windy, full of mirth,
With thoughts almost divine.

The other is a rogue perchance,
A villain, yet so bright
He like a meteor seems to dance
And dazzle all in sight.

The one has kind and genial ways;
The other's full of ire.
The one gives me long, happy days;
The other consumes mine.

To one I talk of many things,
Birds, books and flowers and rhymes!
His comrade gives ill tempered flings
And cares not for my crimes.

These two are quite as far apart
As Ghibelline or Guelph,
Yet here's a secret—in my heart,
I think I love both myself.

WAITED ON JOHN WILKES BOOTH.

Recollections of Lincoln's Assassin, by One of Mrs. Surratt's Slaves.

Nathaniel Gibson, who is the ripe old age of sixty-six, was Mrs. Mary E. Surratt's colored waiter boy, lives north of Oxford, Pa. He is a native of Prince George's county, Md. Gibson is now 14 years old when he was bound out to Mrs. Surratt, there being seven other colored boys on the place. He tells in the Philadelphia Inquirer the following respecting his mistress:

"The maids lived at Surrattsville, about seven miles from Washington, and being a lady of wealth owned considerable of the village. Her disposition was fostered and temperament that was excitable. Her favorite hobby was riding horseback. I have seen her put one hand on the saddle horn and vault up into it as easy without assistance. Mrs. Surratt was fond of wine. She could wield a rawhide with vigor, and it always came upon the backs of us boys impartially.

"She entertained frequently. John Wilkes Booth was a frequent visitor at the house, he being very intimate with my mistress' son, John Surratt. Booth, a kind of a helpless fellow, required a good deal of waiting on, and from him I received the first lessons in the art of waiting on. About two months before the taking off of President Lincoln Booth was at the Surratt mansion steady. A few days before the assassination Booth and Mrs. Surratt and I went into Washington, and she bought 9 or 12 pistols at a gunsmith's. They were put in a little coffin, which the undersigned helped in his wagon across the eastern branch bridge. The guards supposed it was a funeral and made no attempts at examination. Mrs. Surratt, after reaching home, hung the pistols around on the walls of her room.

"On the night of the assassination Booth and Mrs. Surratt ate supper together and left the house. About midnight Booth returned, and I heard Mrs. Surratt clap her hands and exclaim, 'I'm glad that one of the d—d tyrants is gone, our noble Lincoln.' That same night I helped Booth into the saddle, and he shot down the pike as if the demons were after him. On opening the front door next day I was surprised to see the piazza and yard full of soldiers. One of them asked if Booth had been at the house during the night, and I replied that he had. In a short time my mistress and all hands about the place were taken into Washington."

Catching Your Shadow.

"You go out," said the Malay lady, "on the night before the full moon and stand with your back against a wall where the sun to an ant hill, so that your shadow falls on the ant hill. Then you recite certain jamp (incantations), and bending forward try to embrace your shadow. If you fail, try again several times, repeating more incantations. If not successful, try the next night and make a further effort, and the night after, if necessary—three nights in all. If you cannot then catch your shadow, wait till the same day in the following month and renew the attempt.

"Should you succeed you will stand as you stand there in the brilliance of the moonlight you will see that you have drawn your shadow into your yourself, and your body will never again cast a shade. Go home, and in the night, whether sleeping or waking, the form of a child will appear before you and put out its tongue that seize, and it will remain, while the rest of the child disappears. In a little while the tongue will turn into something that breathes, a centipede, a lizard or insect, and when you see that the creature has life put it in a bottle, and the pellets is yours." —Sweetenham's "Malay Sketches."

How They Telegraph In Persia.

Telegraphic communication in Persia is said to work fairly well in dry weather, but in times of rain and damp it is unfortunately far otherwise. This arises from the fact that the insulators are not placed on poles of wood or iron, as with us, but are driven into trees that have branches growing round the bole and touch the wire, thus intercepting the current.

When a large tree is not available, a small one is resorted to, which often breaks, or the damp of the slender tree by the wind dislodges the insulator or hook on which it is fixed, and the wire trails on the ground.

It is no uncommon thing for the wires to be seen lying right across the highroad.

Every Housewife Should Know This.

"William," she said gently, and yet in accents of reproof, "you remember that I gave you several letters to mail last week, don't you?"

"I—you—I remember it."

"But this is the first time you have remembered it since I gave them to you, isn't it?"

"I—I must confess that it is. How do you know?"

"I put a postal card addressed to myself among the lot, and it hasn't yet reached me. In only one case have I found that it is a very effective way of keeping check on the rest of my mail. Now, dear, if you will hand me the letters I'll run out and post them myself."—Washington Star.

CALIFORNIA YELLOWS.

Some Reasons Why California Should Be Called the "Golden State."

California might be called the Golden State as much because of the gold of its flowers as that of its mines. No one will dispute its claim to this title who has seen its roadside gay with orange hued poppies, its meadows radiant with yellow daisies and wild mustard, and its hillsides glowing with masses of yellow bloom.

While nature here supplied the richest soil and the most favorable skies, she withheld a sufficient rainfall, so that the California valleys lay, until 20 years ago, parched and arid during six months of the year. The consequence of the difference of the line between poverty and riches before irrigation reclaimed this country was found in the massacre of horses in 1809 and 1870.

There was in the state about that time an enormous number of broncbos. This fine species of horse has hardly an equal for grace, speed and endurance, but thousands then ran wild over the country. They lived on alfalfa, a kind of grass which thrives grown abundantly. When the crop dried up in the drought succeeding the rainy season, the horses were not worth the cost of their living. Their owners shot them by thousands.

One clear sighted man saw a golden opportunity in the situation. He sold his ranch and bought 6,000 horses at $2 each. He conditioned the value was that he should take them out of the state within a week.

He started with them for Denver, and for six months braved the perils of a journey over mountains and deserts and temperament that was excitable. Her favorite hobby was riding horseback. I have seen her put one hand on the saddle horn and vault up into it as easy without assistance. Mrs. Surratt was fond of wine. She could wield a rawhide with vigor, and it always came upon the backs of us boys impartially.

"But this is the first time you have remembered it since I gave them to you, isn't it?"

"I—I must confess that it is. How do you know?"

"I put a postal card addressed to myself among the lot, and it hasn't yet reached me. In only one case have I found that it is a very effective way of keeping check on the rest of my mail. Now, dear, if you will hand me the letters I'll run out and post them myself."—Washington Star.

Thought It Was a House.

Some small boys of the East End, in search of amusement, found a large chestnut tree in a yard. They dragged it to East Fifth street where they set fire to it. Several of the passersby saw the flames and started to give an alarm of fire before they discovered the cause of the fire.

Philadelphia is keeping up its reputation. The snail-like rapidity with which it settles the street car strike must be tough on those involved.

SEEING THE OLD YEAR OUT.

Largely Attended Watch Meeting in the First M. E. Church.

The very novelty of it brought out many to the watch meeting held in Vincent chapel Tuesday evening. An invitation had been extended to all the Christian Endeavor societies and Epworth leagues in the city, and a large number accepted it, filling every vacant seat on the main floor of the chapel. Unlike the usual meeting, the refreshments preceded instead of followed the services, and from ten o'clock until after half-past ten the young people of the First M. E. church were busy passing tea, coffee, crullers and a variety of crackers. The refreshments were served under the charge of the following committee: Miss S E. Jackson, Mrs. Winter, Mrs. N. Y. Hull and Miss Sharp.

Rev. C. R. Barnes, D. D., acted as leader and spoke on "The Past." "The Present" was the topic of a short address by Rev. C. E. Herring, and Rev. J. W. Richardson concluded the series by speaking on "The Future." Ira W. Travell gave a five-minute talk on the work of the visitation committee preparing for the coming revival. A short service of prayer and testimony was led by E. E. Anthony, president of the Christian Endeavor Local Union. After several hymns and prayers the meeting came to an end while the deep sonorous tones of the big bell in the church belfry proclaimed that '95 had run its course and '96 had begun.

Much credit is due George R. Cornwell who arranged the meeting and had more to do with making it the great success that it was. The meeting was the first of its kind ever held in Plainfield but it will not be the last.

A BIG CATCH.

Eighty Fresh Water Terrapins Caught in a Few Hours.

On New Year's day three "Old Hunterdon" County Democrats went hunting fresh water rough-back terrapin along the mountain streams of Warren township, just back of this city. The trio was composed of G. W. Bourne and Martin Johnson, of Cranford, and D. F. Godown, of Somerset street, Plainfield. They left this city promptly at 8 o'clock and covered a distance of probably eighteen miles and returned home at 5 o'clock with eighty-eight fine rough back fresh water terrapins that will average over two pounds each in weight. The writer saw, last evening, sixty of them at Mr. Godown's residence in water barrels.

This is one of the largest finds of this species that was ever picked in so short a time in this section of the State. These beauties are soon to be served at a private supper.

The Janitor Stays With Them.

Stevenson R. Hope, janitor at the Bryant school building, called at The Press office this morning and stated that the letter signed by Taxpayer was slightly inaccurate with reference to the statement that he goes home and locks the children who carry their dinners in a room by themselves where they are obliged to stay until released. They are locked in the room to prevent them from meddling with the steam pipes, but Mr. Hope remains with them till some of the teachers return.

SOCIETY AT THE ASSEMBLY.

MOST SUCCESSFUL SOCIAL FUNCTION OF THE SEASON.

The Casino Beautifully Decorated With Pretty Effects—List of Patronesses and the Guests Who Attended the Event.

The New Year's Assembly was held Wednesday at the Casino and was, probably, the most successful one ever held in Plainfield. The attendance was large. The music, furnished by Elliott of New York, was delightful and Max Wiertz provided the excellent refreshments. The ball room itself presented a beautiful picture. Rugs, portieres and greens artistically festooned about the wall, made a charming background for the ever changing panorama of beautiful women, beautiful gowns and the more soberly dressed escorts. Pink shades over the electric lights threw a pleasing pink glow over the scene, while on the stage the musicians kept up an almost increasing melody of music.

The patronesses were Mrs. Robert L. Burnett, Mrs. Joseph W. Reinhart, Mrs. William L. Saunders, Mrs. Louis G. Timpson, Mrs. Marion S. Ackerman, Mrs. Frederick H. Wills, Mrs. Orville T. Waring, Mrs. James T. Scott, Mrs. William J. Roome and Mrs. Albert H. Atterbury.

PARK CLUB STARTS GOOD.

Sociability Was the Element That Ushered in the New Year.

Ninety-five was danced out and ninety-six was danced in at the Park Club Tuesday evening by about one hundred and fifty guests from this city and the borough. The ball room was filled throughout the evening with the gay dancers, the men in their conventional evening suits and their partners in their beautiful evening gowns. In the gallery sat those who preferred to watch rather than participate, while those who cared for a quiet chat could be found in the reading or in the game rooms. Billiards, pool and bowling offered a change to those who cared for them and the click of the balls and the crash of the pins showed that their devotees were plentiful. Coffee and sandwiches awaited those who cared for them in the dining room.

The evening passed off most successfully, and the house committee had made every arrangement possible for the comfort of their guests, and that fact was properly appreciated by all. The house committee is composed of the following: Elston M. French, Samuel Townsend and William N. Runyon. The inspiring music that kept the many feet moving about the brilliantly lighted room in rhymatic measures, was furnished by P. Ludwig Conde.

Another Cadet Company.

There is considerable talk among the boys of the North Plainfield public school about the formation of a cadet corps very much on the plan of the High School Cadet Corps of this city. The boys will be uniformed and an effort will be made to secure guns from the state. About thirty boys are interested in the new company.

Big Water Supply Pipe.

President Frank Bergen, of the Water Supply Company, is the authority for the statement that a 24-inch pipe will be laid between Elizabeth and the South Plainfield ponds next spring to furnish water to the former place. This will relieve the demands on the Netherwood wells to a considerable amount.

HAPPY SURPRISE PARTY.

Friends of Mrs. Charles Conover Give Her an Unexpected Call.

An enjoyable and complete surprise was given Mrs. Charles Conover, of Elmwood place, last evening, the occasion being the anniversary of her birthday. It was arranged by her husband and only those invited were let into the secret.

At 7:30 o'clock the party met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Dobbins and at once proceeded to arrange for surprising Mrs. Conover. When they entered the house, she was completely taken back and words failed her. It was fully five minutes before she could speak. Of course she welcomed them all heartily, and the jolly crowd made themselves very much at home.

The evening was spent in playing interesting games and about 10 o'clock refreshments were served, after which the guests departed. They all extended hearty congratulations to both Mr. and Mrs. Conover and wished them many years of happiness and prosperity.

There were about twenty-five intimate friends present.

A VICTIM OF CIRCUMSTANCES

DR. RIGGS THUS CHARACTERIZES THE SULTAN OF TURKEY.

Foreigners Cry Out for Him to Concede Certain Things, and His Own People Say He Has Conceded Too Much Already.

A large meeting in the interest of the Armenian sufferers was held last Thursday in Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church. Mayor Gilbert presided, and spoke briefly at the beginning

'Doubtless you are all aware," he said, "of the terrible tidings which have been coming to us from the East during the past few months. It is estimated that over ten thousand people have been massacred in cold blood. The Turks think that they are divinely appointed to exterminate the Christians. Something ought to be done for the relief of these unfortunate people. But the war ships of Europe are lying quietly at anchor tonight in the harbor of Constantinople. However, a peaceful movement for their relief has been organized, and tonight we shall have an opportunity to help along this good work."

Mr. Gilbert then announced that Dr. James P. Riggs, in whose lectures on the Eastern Question Plainfield is so much interested, would address the meeting.

Dr. Riggs began by stating some important facts about the Armenians. They are of our own blood; of Aryan or Indo Germanic race, not of the Semitic, the race of which Mohammed came. They have a highly cultivated language and literature of their own; they have one of the finest versions of the Bible in existance. Their number has been estimated as from two and a half to four million; probably the latter figures are more correct. About one million of them are in Russia; most of the remainder live in the Turkish Empire, but they have a different language and religion, and come of a different race, and there has been no amalgamation.

There is no such country as Armenia; the name is commonly given to that part of the Turkish Empire chiefly inhabited be the Armenians, a region of Asia Minor. They were once a powerful, independent people with kings of their own, but were obliged to yield to one power after another. They were the first people to acknowledge the Christian religion, as a nation. They were greatly influenced by the preaching of St. Gregory, whom they called "The Illuminator." Their church is Episcopal in form, and they are governed by bishops.

They have been for a long time under the rule of the Turk, and this rule has been steadily growing worse and worse from the beginning. The Turks think that they have nothing to fear from Europe; that if anyone interferes with them, England will step in and prevent them from suffering at their hands.

"Why not reform the Turk?" has often been asked. Why not teach him what is considered right and wrong in European governments?

Just as soon as the Moslem ceases to believe in his own system, he ceases to be a Moslem. It is not the bad Moslem who persecutes the Christians; it is the good Moslem; the more a Moslem believes, the more he persecutes.

What is meant by Turkish atrocities? It is what happens when there is removed from the inhabitants all restraint upon doing whatever they please to their Christian neighbors. They come down upon a village and demand all their cattle; next day they demand them over again, and because there are none left, perhaps, they will carry off a hundred of their choicest young women to the mountains, there to suffer a fate that only the imagination can picture. Perhaps there is resistance; then the regular troops are sent against the village. The people are rebels, and must be exterminated.

Men and women and children are mutilated and tortured; the skin torn from their bodies, chopped to pieces alive, with axes, or burned out half-dead into the snow to die, old women stripped of their clothing, babies bayonetted in their cradles.

The men at the head of the Turkish Government are the off-scouring of the earth, morally. The Sultan is the poor victim of circumstances. On one side, the foreigners, with their iron-clads in his harbor, cry out to him to concede certain things; on the other side, the Moslem population cry out that he has already conceded too much.

Dr. Riggs closed by speaking of the relief movement under the control of the Red Cross Society, saying that he was sure all present would desire to take part in this plan of help, which seemed to have been divinely opened up to them.

Dean Boldman then read a copy of resolutions, which are to be sent to Congress and printed in the newspapers, and they were heartily approved. Dr. Richards announced that an offering would then be received; he had already received one hundred dollars towards it, and hoped that it would be a very generous one

The resolutions set forth the atrocities that have taken place and called the attention of Congress to them. They protested against these outrages and asked that Congress take some action at once in the matter.

During the collection, Dr. Rodman suggested that a committee be appointed by the chairman to collect from the citizens of Plainfield an additional offering. This suggestion was approved, and, announcing that this committee would be appointed later, Mr. Gilbert dismissed the meeting.

The amount of the collection was $170.

UTILIZES ALL COMBUSTION.

Seymour G. Smith Has Perfected a Device for Saving Fuel.

Seymour G. Smith, of this city, has invented and applied for patents for a new device for setting horisontal boilers. He states that it is an established fact that only 27 per cent of the combustible properties of coal are actually utilized, the remaining 73 per cent going up the stack in the form of gas and carbon. He claims that by his invention a large percentage of the waste combustion can be utilized so as to maintain the required pressure on a large boiler with the consumption of only about one-half the usual amount of coal now used. He has made long and thorough study and expensive experiments on the problem of combustion, and now claims that he has it as near perfection as can be obtained, as demonstrated in his crematories for garbage and all other city refuse and his patent deodorizer, smoke condenser and consumer that is now successfully working on a plant in New York city that had previously been condemned by the Board of Health. He also claims that he can burn soft coal without emitting black smoke, soot or cinders from the chimney.

If You Doubt the Popularity of the "Clyde Line" from New York to Jacksonville, Fla.,

Without change, just call at their Pier 29, East River, New York any sailing day—Monday, Wednesday or Friday—at 3 p. m., and see for yourself the number of passengers on board. There are many reasons for this, a few of which are because there is no change between New York and Jacksonville, Fla., they make the run in about two and a half days, including half a day's stop in Charleston, and because their officers are such courteous gentlemen fellows they make you feel right at home as soon as you get aboard. Their rates are the lowest, and it will pay you to write "Clyde Line," New York, for descriptive matter, if you anticipate going to Charleston, Jacksonville, Fla., or any interior points in the South or Southwest.

ESCAPED FROM THE ASYLUM.

Then Learned That He Was Heir to a Large Fortune.

William Appleton, of Cranford, escaped from the State Asylum for the Insane at Morris Plains about two months ago. He managed to borrow money enough to reach his old home in England. There he learned that his mother had recently died, leaving him a fortune of several thousand dollars. As soon as he could get the estate settled and secure his money, Appleton sailed again for this country and landed in New York several days ago. He has now secured counsel and intends to spend all of his fortune, if necessary, in order to secure the punishment of all those who, he claims, were instrumental in illegally having him placed in the asylum.

A BOY'S MAD LOVE.

Benjamin Redfield Gives Vent to His Jealousy.

Benjamin Redfield, fourteen years old, Wednesday evening attempted to murder Emma Langleh, eighteen years old, and her sister Eve, who is fifteen. The girls were out driving near Piscataway, and as they passed Redfield's house the youth ran from the house armed with his father's shotgun and fired one shot, striking the elder girl. It is said that Redfield is in love with the younger sister, and became angry when she ignored him. A warrant was issued yesterday morning charging the boy with atrocious assault with intent to kill.

Rang Out the Old Year.

The Schubert Club, of Plainfield, Dunellen and New Market, gave a dance New Year's Eve at Friendship Hall, New Market. The dance was a great social success and all those who attended spent a very pleasant evening. A large bell was hung from the centre of the ceiling, hidden from sight by greens. At 12 o'clock the guests were startled to hear the bell ring out loud and clear.

Governor Morton, of New York, is said to be an out-an-out candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination. If he gets it he will have had a most remarkable career, from the very fact that he served four years as Vice-president and was afterwards heard of in public life.

NO FEAR OF INJUNCTIONS.

DUNELLEN PEOPLE WILL NOT APPEAL TO THE COURTS.

The Dunellen Call Says They Realize That They Have No Grounds to Go Before a Court and Have the Sewage Beds Closed.

Last Tuesday The News published an article to the effect that the Dunellen officials were going to immediately endeavor to secure an injunction to prevent the city from using the sewage beds. The Dunellen Call yesterday says the statement is utterly untruthful. The Call says:

No member of the borough commissioners made the statements referred to and we challenge the writer of this article to mention the name of this prominent official.

The citizens of this place are not "Up in Arms," and they have no large sum of money at their disposal. Even if they had they have got something more important to squander in trying to obtain an injunction without the shadow of success.

We have quietly and unsuccessfully entered our protests in the most friendly manner to the officials of Plainfield, and knowing the nature of the soil from practical experience, tried to convince them that in making a mistake, but were informed that we were totally ignorant on sewage matters and they knew the business from a to z.

Since the beds have been in preparation we have complacently watched the operations and are more than ever convinced that they will prove a total failure and therefore the people of Plainfield will be the greatest sufferers.

We are perfectly well aware that we have no ground for an injunction, until the nuisance becomes a nuisance, and no large sum of money would then be needed to get redress from the State Board of Health. There is much more nuisance to emanate from their own citizens than from us.

It is not the wish of the citizens of Dunellen to put any obstacles in the way of the disposal of Plainfield's sewage, and have been for the publication of such items as the above, without any foundation in fact, is infinitely more injurious to us than the sewage farm, and can only be the product of a brain that has no regard for truth or others. "Give a calf rope enough and it will hang itself."

PROCLAMATION ANNIVERSARY

Interesting Service Held at Bethel Chapel Last Evening.

The thirty-third anniversary of the emancipation proclamation was celebrated last evening at the Bethel chapel by appropriate services, which were attended by a large number of survivors of the memorial public paper, and also many other people. The programme was opened by prayer by Rev. P. S. Gibson, followed by instrumental selections by Otis Bush and a vocal solo by Miss Cully. A feature of the evening was the reading of a history of Bethel chapel which was written in Biblical language and in which the names of those who first started the society were alluded to in a complimentary manner. The paper was prepared by Mrs. W. A. Alexander. The emancipation proclamation was read by Miss Edith Sohnson.

Rev. W. A. Alexander delivered the address of the evening on "The Progress of the Race." He told of the conditions that surrounded the colored people thirty years ago and how hard it was for them to make much advancement in the world, but how different it was now when every facility was afforded to educate themselves and go out to grapple with the world. The address was enthusiastically received by those in attendance at the meeting. Those who took part in the exercises were among the first attendants at the chapel. At the close of the exercises refreshments were served.

The large residence of Mr. Bunn was beautifully decorated and the one hundred guests who attended were treated in the most hospitable manner. FORTY YEARS OF BLISS.

Two Score Years Have Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Karner Lived Together.

The fortieth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Aaron B. Karner was celebrated at their home on Bradford avenue, Evona, Wednesday, in a manner suitable for the occasion. Refreshments were served both afternoon and evening. The presents were many and various. On one table were arranged forty different articles from their two daughters, while on the wall over the table were placed the figures 1856 and 1896 in silver letters; also their portraits taken before their marriage and others recently. Among the presents were forty new pennies from each of their four grandchildren. There were many other articles both useful and ornamental. The rooms were appropriately decorated with evergreens and ferns. There were four generations represented at the gathering. About fifty guests took part in the celebration, some of them coming a long distance to show their kind regards for the couple who had lived so many years together, and whose friendship they esteem very highly. Among the guests invited but not able to be present, was a brother of Mr. Karner, living in Massachusetts who is eighty-seven years of age.

A WONDERFUL REPAST.

A Great Grown Enthusiastic Over Asbestos Club Hospitality.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:

I wish to call your attention to the great magnanimity of the Asbestos Limited Club for the bountiful repast given at their rooms on New Year's day, consisting of twenty five courses prepared by a caterer of New York city.

The members of said club on Christmas day decided to keep open house on the coming New Year's day, 1895, and, therefore, put the wheels in motion to make it a perfect success and make it a day of happiness and rejoicing for all of its members. No pains were spared to entertain their friends in the most hospitable manner. Committees were appointed to wait upon the incoming guests and escort them to the over loaded supply of substantials and nic nacs, which their sideboards possessed. One thing I must say, they laid no intoxicating beverages before their members or visitors beyond sweet cider. And there was no discrimination made between poverty and wealth. All were attended alike in such a hospitable manner. You would see the bankers, brokers, retired merchants, men of leisure, Government officials, farmers, mechanics and laborers, who earn their living by the sweat of their brows, all comingling as one of accord, showing that the American people believe in the unity of strength when danger of foreign wars stares them in the face.

Since writing the above I have had pleasure of seeing the caterer's bill for the layout which was only $221, being remarkably low for such a grand display. I will say the bill was receipted in full; so the public need not feel sorry for the caterer.

One Who Was Entertained.

The Gun Was Evidence of Guilt.

The Misses Arrowsmith, of Elm place, were very much frightened yesterday afternoon between 4 and 5 o'clock. They were quietly reading in their dining room, which is in the front part of the house, when they heard the report of a gun and two bullets came flying through a front window. One bullet just missed striking one of the ladies. Looking out doors they saw John Burns, a neighbor, with a gun. He was slightly intoxicated, and in that state denied having shot the gun, but others saw him. They will probably enter a complaint before the proper authorities, and have the man dealt with according to law.

Sons of Temperance Officers.

The following officers were elected at the meeting of Howell Division, Sons of Temperance, last evening: Worthy patriarch, Mrs. Anna Angleman; worthy associate, Miss Alice Seribner; recording scribe, Sylvester Seribner; financial secretary, Mrs. Emma Cox; treasurer, Mrs. S. A. Mattox; chaplain, Mrs. Corwin; conductor, Mrs. Sarah Koyer; assistant conductor, Mrs. M. E. Clum; inside sentinel, Harry Mattox; outside sentinel, Wm. Koyer; past worthy patriarch, Miss Try Mattox. They will be installed Tuesday evening, January 14th.

A New Year's Eve Surprise.

A very pleasant New Year's Eve party was given by Mrs. Harry Lavell, of Putnam avenue, Tuesday evening in honor of her sisters, the Misses Lydia and Ethel Fuhrmann, of Albany. Games and dancing made the hour of midnight come only too soon. Among those present were the Misses Finch, Ethel Finch, May Simpson, Florence R. Beal and Messrs John Chandor, Richard G. Simpson, Edward S. Simpson, Percy V. Wheeler, Edward Finch and Albert P. Simmonds.

LIGHTHOUSE LIBRARIES.

Uncle Sam Furnishes the Watchers by the Sea With Free Reading Matter.

The popular impression concerning the lighthouse keepers is that they spend their leisure time in resting their hands on their hands and gazing far out to sea, watching for shipwrecked mariners, sea serpents and other things. As a matter of fact, however, they don't spend any more time in this manner than they can help. They have their domestic operations just the same as people on shore. In favored locations they are even able to cultivate a little ground and raise their own vegetables. But they are really very often lonesome, and were more so until recently, when it occurred to some philanthropic government official that it would be a good idea to provide these watchers by the sea with something in the way of reading matter. The idea took shape in the construction of portable libraries, to be filled by the government, sent to one lighthouse station, and at regular intervals to be called for by hand and sent out to the next one on the list.

The library furnished to light stations is about 2 feet high, 2 feet wide and 8 inches deep, of mahogany or white pine, strengthened with heavy brass trimmings. It has two shelves. Its two doors are secured, the one with an inside bolt and the other with a padlock. The sides are hinged handles. When locked, the library cases can stand rough handling.

The cases of lighthouse are so constructed that they make a neat appearance when set upright on a table; when closed and locked, they are ready for transportation. Each station has about an average about 140 volumes of a proper admixture of historical and scientific works, besides poetry and good novels. An exchange of libraries takes place once in about three months, usually at the time when the lighthouse inspector makes his quarterly inspection. Each station in which a library is furnished thus has the use of about 140 different books each year. There are now about 700 of these libraries in circulation, and more are in process. Preference is given in their distribution to those lighthouse stations most distant from towns and villages.—New York World.

THE TOPICAL SONG.

Tony Pastor Thinks It Has a Power to Mold Public Opinion.

Tony Pastor, in the New York Mirror, has this to say of the topical song:

"It is a favorite word of the newspapers. I believe not only in the public press, but in its utility. It is the most valuable agent the vocalist has ever had for securing subjects for popular songs. The comic vocalist must be quick to perceive the peculiar topic or phrase of human life which is liable to interest the amusement going public and use it in the form of time. Having selected my subject for a song, I jot down a few ideas about it as they come to me and then commit them into shape.

"The fads and the ultra fashions of both women and men are always fair game for the comic singer. Songs on some of the leading questions of the day often entertain an audience, such as a fellow's best girl, the old man's boot, the mother-in-law and the new woman, so forth.

"It has been found that the comic song exerts an influence in political contests and in bringing about social reforms. The American vocalist of the variety theater may claim with the journalist and the statesman the ability to mold public opinion. His shafts of satire are ridiculed so much to reform flagrant abuses and cause the general public to laugh to scorn the foolish fads of the day."

The First Notice of a Steamer.

Among the curiosities of advertising may surely be placed the first advertisement of the first steamer that plied for hire in Great Britain—namely, Henry Bell's Comet. Thus ran the advertisement in the Glasgow Courier of 1812:

"Steam passage by the new Comet, between Glasgow, Greenock and Helensburg. For the present season. The subscriber having at much expense fitted up a handsome vessel to ply upon the river Clyde between Glasgow and Greenock—to sail by the power of wind, air and steam—he intends that the vessel shall leave the Broomielaw on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays about midday, or at such time thereafter as may answer from the state of the tide, and to leave Greenock on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays in the morning to suit the tide. The elegance, comfort, safety and speed of this packet require only to be proved to meet the approbation of the public, and the proprietor is determined to do everything in his power to merit public encouragement. The terms are for the present 4 shillings for the best cabin and 3 shillings for the second, but beyond these rates nothing is to be allowed to servants or any other person employed about the vessel."

What would poor neglected Henry Bell have said could he have seen his humble little Comet, of whose elegance, comfort and speed he was so proud, alongside a modern ocean racer or one of the latest steel river steamers of the Clyde or Thames, all so well advertised!—Chambers' Journal.

The Difficulty of Saving Money.

"Talking about saving money," said a veteran millionaire, "it is 100 times harder now to keep cash than it was when I was a young fellow and didn't spend a cent. I tell you it's hard for them to save in these times. Every mother's daughter and her dog and it's mighty hard to stand on the street and see your friends spinning by on wheels and not invest yourself. Again, it's a great privilege for a young fellow now to be well dressed. The distinction between good clothes and poor is so sharp nowadays that it is galling to be conspicuous by cheap attire. Again, there are the theater, the excursion boat, the races and a score of other inducements to spend money which hardly existed in my day. I am glad they didn't, for if they had I honestly think I would have been a poor man now."—Buffalo Enquirer.

Perplexed.

Talking of the unconscious arrogance of the writing tribe and the fictitious importance it gives to youthful minds to the claims of that class and the pedagogical class, a Boston mother of much knowledge of the world said lately:

"I'm puzzled what to do with my boys. I wish them to be educated—but how to do it without submitting them to association with literary and schoolmasters!"—Boston Transcript.

No Stoves In Mexico.

"In old Mexico we have no stoves," said Antonio Estrado. "Most of the houses are built of adobe bricks, without floors, and the fires are built on the ground, where all cooking is done. In the more aristocratic families the American pattern of cooking stoves has been introduced, but only a few of them are in use."—New York Journal.

BEYOND THE SEA.

What dreams are born, what sweet eyes softly shine,
What golden lyres make happy melody,
What thrilling lips break forth in song divine,
Beyond the gleaming gateways of the sea!

If I but step into the silvering wave,
And launch my soul upon the ebbing tide,
What hand shall be outstretched from thence to save,
And clasp me swift unto the other side?

O love, this is the way thy fact have passed,
And still the foam crests glow with rosy light!
O love, herein death found thy lips at last,
And where ye twain embraced the sea is bright!

And I will follow thee! 'Tis not so hard,
But Lo! soon behold the radiant eyes
Lighting the world where blest immortals are,
As dawn illumes the dark and sunless skies
—Mr. James Budget.

NOT DISORDERLY CONDUCT.

A Man May Kiss and Embrace His Wife in Public if She Doesn't Object.

It has been established by a legal principle that a man can kiss his wife on the street with impunity, without fear of the law or without interfering with public peace and good order. And he may not only kiss his wife, but he may hug her to his heart's content. The decision was rendered in the case of Corporal Martin, a United States soldier of Fort McPherson, who was arrested by Patrolman Phillips on a charge of disorderly conduct.

It seems that Martin and his wife met on West Peters street, and upon sight fell into each other's arms and wept tears of joy and sorrow, the cause of which seems to have been that the wife was about to go on a visit to her grandmother for a stay of some time—at least, that was the reason given by Martin for the disturbance himself and wife. Martin said that he met his wife, and as she was then going away to visit her grandmother he kissed her, not thinking it was against the law for a man to kiss his wife. The evidence in the case showed that he did more than kiss his wife, however. Two young men testified that Martin warmly embraced his wife on divers sections of Peters street for a distance of several blocks, and that the performance caused a disturbance and the order in the locality of Peters and Pair streets, so sensational did it become. The couple fairly reveled in the performance of bidding each other a long farewell, the festivities being prolonged for such a length of time that a policeman arrived on the scene and arrested the affectionate husband, complaint having been made to him by W. F. Westley, a storekeeper, and others of the conduct of the man and woman.

Officer Phillips said that in his case he reported to him that the man and woman had been hugging and kissing each other in a store, and that they were made to get out by the proprietor, and that is how he didn't want any such conduct at his place of business.

After hearing the evidence the court said that the disorderly conduct charged had not exactly been established in his mind, the court not being able to see anything out of the way in a husband kissing his wife on the street or elsewhere, although it might not be exactly "Peachtree etiquette." The court thinks there was anything disorderly or immoral in a man kissing and hugging his wife, and he dismissed the case.

Martin and his happy consort left the courtroom beaming with satisfaction. The woman occupied a seat in the rear of the courtroom during the trial and was an interested observer of the case. When last seen, they were going up Decatur street hand in hand, congratulating each other on having been the means of establishing a principle of law that may be hailed with delight and joy by every affectionately disposed husband and wife.—Atlanta Constitution.

A Brain In Your Throat.

Did you know that the throat has a brain of its own? I suppose few people are aware of it, but it's a fact. There is a small ganglion which exercises direct control of the muscles of the throat and acts as its "brain." This ganglion is subservient to the genuine brain, but, at the same time, does a good deal of independent thinking for itself. It is very timid and suspicious of any strange objects that pounce near the throat.

For this reason it is very difficult for a physician to operate on the throat. Before anything can be done in this direction it is necessary for the operator to gain the confidence of the little brain that dominates it. In frequent cases hours and days of confidence can be secured, and until it is secured it is impossible to perform any operation.

Woe to the man who attempts rough treatment to the throat before gaining the little brain's confidence! His operations will be resisted with obstinate persistence first of the throat, then of the diaphragm, and, if the operator still persists, the patient will be thrown into convulsions. Still more curious is the fact that the little brain has a memory, and if once frightened in this way it is almost impossible to ever gain its confidence, no matter how gentle the operator may be.—Pearson's Weekly.

Watch Was a Sunwinder.

A tough fish story is related which may or may not be true, and as it relates to an Atlanta man we print it. The story goes that one spring, while a party of Atlantans were fishing at the dead lakes, in Florida, a well known Atlanta lawyer lost his gold watch from the boat in which he was sitting. The next spring he made another visit to the lakes and during the first day's sport caught a large trout. Much to his astonishment could be imagined when he found his watch lodged in the mouth of the trout. The watch was running and the time could be easily distinguished, the supposition is that in masticating his food the fish wound up the watch daily.—Atlanta Constitution.

The Evil Eye.

Antiquitie hath held that certaine women of bigothie, being provoked and vexed against some men, had the power to kill them only with their looks. The Tortoises and Kerrigos have their eyes with their looks only, a signe that they have some ejaculative vertue. And concerning witches, they are said to have offensive and harmeworking Eies.—Montaigne.

A Clear Case.

Hatterson—Great Scots! I don't go to revivals.

Catterson—Neither do I, but my wife does.—New York Herald.

The New York Times says that Assemblyman-elect Codington will be one of the leaders in the lower house of the Legislature this winter.

New Brunswick papers are getting a wonderful hustle on them nowadays. The Fredonian appeared Saturday printed on a web perfecting press.

It is a creditable thing for the Common Council to so manage the affairs of the city as to have the balance on the right side of the ledger at the end of the year.

The potato is the latest thing that the Jersey capitalist is endeavoring to get a corner on. But he will never succeed. The potato is too good an American to become a thing of monopoly.

The New York Press says that not since the days of Cleveland's first administration has there been so many candidates for office in New Jersey as is now the case at Trenton with the Republicans.

A Kansas district has written a contract with a woman teacher to teach the school, chop the wood, make the fire, sweep, and find the matches for $35 a month. This must be a case of woman suffering.

Some people think that too much money is spent on the fire department. A glance at the small fire loses for the year, as reported by Chief Doane to the Common Council Saturday night, shows that it is money well spent.

There should be no hesitancy about establishing the proposed pump station in Cedar brook valley for the purpose of disposing of the sewage of residents south of Ninth street. If no such action is taken the property holders in that section will be taxed for benefits which they do not receive, and at the same time be put on an unequal footing with the rest of the city in the matter of desirable residence places. This would be a manifest injustice.

It is not often that The Daily Press editorially credits itself with accomplishing this or that. But in in the matter of closing up the cider joints in this city, whose Sunday traffic has been carried on in the most open manner under a hypocritical observance of a Seventh-day law, The Press has been the only newspaper that has called the attention of the Plainfield people to the deplorable condition of affairs, and it was doubtless the constant allusions in The Press to this matter that forcibly brought to the minds of city officials the needs of legislation to remedy the evil.

Like the astute business man that he is, Mayor Gilbert's observation of the work of the past and suggestions as to the future, as expressed in his annual message to the Common Council, are wonderfully practical. He puts the matter of a tax rate in an entirely new light from what it has ever been considered in the past, and shows that with the modern improvements which the progressive people—and they constitute a large proportion of the city's population—are continually demanding the city to acquire, a low tax rate cannot be maintained. His application of the point that we have a territory to maintain which can easily accommodate a population of 150,000, and yet have to maintain it from the taxation of one-twelfth that number of people, is a piece of logical reasoning that shows the tax rate not to be proportionately as large as it first seems.

The cider joints must go.

England is getting in trouble all around.

There is an independence about Kaiser Wilhelm that is really admirable.

The next important business of the city solons will be the granting of licenses to liquor dealers.

Mayor Gilbert's recommendation that a police station better than the present rookery be provided, is in the right line. The present station is a disgrace to the city.

Plainfield lovers of sports enjoy contests at almost every thing save skating. There is no more healthy, invigorating and exciting pastime than a spin across a glassy surface of congealed water. Where are the experts on the blades of steel?

Either New York actors are getting too realistic or else press agents are not regarding the truth the way they ought to. Only a day or two ago an actor was said to have been stabbed close to the heart, and now another thespian drinks real poison when he ought to have only drank burnt sugar and water to make the audience believe it was wine.

Senator Thompson was on hand yesterday and is greatly improved in health. He expressed entire satisfaction with the outlook for winning the President's chair. Senator Voorhees was again conspicuous by his absence, but Senator Stokes, who is watching his fight, was not at all disheartened with the situation. During the day he telephoned to Senator Voorhees to ascertain his ideas in reference to the conference suggested by the Thompson forces. Senator Voorhees favored the proposition, and as a result the Republicans of the Senate will come to Trenton next Friday evening and confer together at the Hotel Windsor. If Senator Thompson is successful in his fight, Charles H. Bateman, formerly of Trenton, and now of Somerville, will be his private secretary.—Trenton True American.

Editor Runyon's memory is beginning to fail him. In his editorial, Tuesday, on the Mayor's message, he stated that he does not remember that any such reason as the Mayor gives why the sewer bonds could not be sold for less than four per cent, was made public at the time the discussion was going on last summer. He wonders why this is so. There is no need of Editor Runyon taxing his compound intellect about this. If he will consult the files of the Daily Press he will see that there is no occasion for his wonderment or worry. At the time Editor Runyon was making his lying attacks on the city administration over the negotiation for the issuance of sewer bonds, the Daily Press explicitly stated the extraordinary unfavorable footing on which Plainfield was placed in going into an open market to dispose of its bonds—practically the same facts which Editor Runyon now thinks Mayor Gilbert's words satisfactorily explains. By the sense of his own words, Editor Runyon now admits that he was entirely ignorant of what he essayed to know all about last summer, and that the insinuations which he cast upon the honorable characters of city officials was conceived in an entirely illiterate and mendacious attempt to get even with men against whom he had a personal grievance.

Cold Weather Stops Work.

The cold weather has compelled the contractors to stop work on the sewage beds for the present, though it will be resumed again as soon as the weather moderates sufficiently. Manager Smith will remain and look after the work already done, which is enough to accommodate those now using the system.

Stay Home and Freeze.

You can, of course. But a charming trip over the Union Pacific will in a few hours land you in California, the loveliest state in winter for strong men or invalids there is this country. R. Ten Broeck, General Eastern Agent, 287 Broadway, N. Y.

A NOBLE LIFE

SPENT FOR AND WITH SUFFERING WOMEN.

A Life's Work Perpetuated through a Faithful Daughter, and Records of Priceless Value.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

What a vast amount of misery and suffering has been prevented by the clear-headed foresight of one noble woman!

She had struggled, labored, and sacrificed for the welfare of her sex.

The eyes of the woman of the world were upon her.

As she recalled the past, and tried to penetrate the future, a smile of supreme satisfaction passed over her honest face as she remembered that her life's work would be perpetuated.

The room in which she sat contained hundreds of volumes of records; and, turning to her daughter, she said,—

"My daughter, this room, as you well know, contains the records of my life's work, in which for many years you have so diligently assisted me.

"By earnest application you have compassed my methods; and it is a happiness to think that when I leave, the glorious work will, through you, go on.

"The mission is a noble one. Do as I have done; never refuse a woman's appeal to go unheeded.

"These records tell of every case ever submitted to me; and it is my wish that the facts they contain shall in time prove a much-needed addition to the women of the world."

Thus did Lydia E. Pinkham hand over to her daughter, Mrs. Charles H. Pinkham, what may be termed the salvation of her sex; and that wonderful remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which all druggists consider as standard as flour, goes on redeeming hundreds of women from the fearful consequences of female diseases.

ALBRO LYONS DEAD.

Prominent Colored Man, Once of Plainfield, Passes Away.

Albro Lyons, for many years prominent as a leader of the negro race in this country, died on Thursday at his home at No 51 St. Felix street, Brooklyn. He was born eighty-three years ago. His mother was a Montauk Indian. He was one of the two surviving members of the first committee appointed to work for the education of colored children, and was active in assisting slaves to escape from the southern States to Canada. At the time of the draft riots he was compelled to leave New York. He lost all his property. He moved to Plainfield, where he became prominent in politics. At one time he was a candidate for Councilman in the Fourth ward and was defeated by only four votes. In 1888 he was a Commissioner to the New Orleans Exposition. He leaves one son, who is a tea merchant, and a daughter, who is a teacher in the public schools.

Realty Transfers.

The following transfers of property have been recorded in the County Clerk's office of Union county from Dec. 26th to Jan. 3d, inclusive, as reported in New Jersey Contractor:

Andrew Schlick, et ux., Plainfield, to Henry Haurand, lot, Third street, $300; Andrew Schlick, et ux., to Harry Werner, Plainfield, lot, Third street, $300; Wm. H. Moore, et ux., Plainfield, to Jeremiah Manning, lot, West Front street, $1; Juliette A. Raymond, Peterboro, Canada, to John E. Keeley, Plainfield, lots, Kensington avenue, $3,500; John D. Runyon, et ux., Plainfield, to Wm. H. Bohl, lot, Astor place, Plainfield, $350 Julia Hattiras, New York, to Albert Hattiras, two lots, Netherwood, $1.

Almost Went up in Smoke.

A large barn belonging to Mrs. Geiser on South avenue, above Berckman street, came very near being burned to the ground during the high wind on Saturday afternoon, caused by a spark from a locomotive setting fire to the grass near it. Ernest A. Barrett, the plumber, fortunately, was driving past the premises at the time and put out the fire with shovelsful of dirt, just as the barn was about to take fire.

An Icy Plunge.

The new ice on Berkeley pond came very near proving to be a death trap for a twelve-year-old lad living near Berkeley Heights Saturday afternoon. Will Burgmiller broke through the ice in the middle of the pond while skating there. He was finally pulled out by his older brother, Walter, completely exhausted and almost frozen. Prompt treatment saved his life.

Last Meeting of the Old Members of the Common Council.

REPORTS OF OFFICERS RECEIVED.

The Sewer Committee Recommend That a Pumping Station Be Established Along Cedar Brook to Drain All Property South of Ninth Street, as the Sewer Level is Too High for That Section—The Street Appropriation is Fixed at $25,000—A Balance is Left With the Treasurer Over the Expenses of the City—Final Reports of the Other Officials.

Its to be hoped that this year's Common Council will try if possible to meet promptly at 8 o'clock. Last Saturday night it was nearly 9 o'clock when President See called the members to order. All were present except Councilmen Stockton, Erickson, Westphal and Frazee. Closing up the city's affairs for the past year was the chief business and a considerable amount of preliminary work was done previous to the call of the meeting.

After the reading of the minutes of the last two meetings which were approved, an opinion from Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh in the Michael Watson case was read. It was a review of the latter's trouble with the city, and he advised that the proposition of Mr. Watson be accepted. It was so adopted by the council.

The reports of the city treasurer Alex. Titsworth, and chief of police, Geo. W. Grant was presented. The former will be found in another part of the paper. The latter report showed the following number of cases dealt with and the causes:—

Disorderly, 150; drunk and disorderly, 119; drunkenness, 59; stealing, 12; assault, 14; forgery, 1; fast driving, 8; trespassing on Central railroad property, 47; larceny, 3; receiving stolen goods, 1; disorderly houses, 3; gambling, 9; non-support, 3; insanity, 1; peddler's license, 9; violations bicycle ordinance, 61; hack ordinance, 8; truckman's ordinance, 1; liquor ordinance, 4; school ordinance, 1; health ordinance, 1. Both reports were received and filed and the treasurer's report was ordered printed according to law.

The report of Overseer of Poor A. Vanderbeck was presented as follows: Present cost of provisions, $736.45; fuel, $176.25; milk, $72.66; rents, $1,094.75; board and care, $704.35; burials, $105.00; city physicians and medical service, $206.55; salaries and rent of offices, $191 67; miscellaneous, $44.44; total $3,792.22.

The City Clerk's report showed that he had received from licenses, $435.00; $77.00 advertising fees from applicants for liquor licenses, and $704.00 from registry of dogs, making a total of $918.04.

In Chief Doane's report he recommended that all hose and the old truck be sent to the West End and that a fire alarm box be placed on West Front street between Grove and Somerset streets. His report gave the following synopsis of fires during the past year, showing cause and amount of losses:—

Loss on buildings, $1,768.90; insurances on buildings, $49,300.00; loss on contents, $1,826.55; insurance on contents, $33,350.00; total insurance involved, $82 650.00; total insurance collected, $3,195.35. The following causes are given: Ash barrell, 1; unknown, 2; defective flues, 8; overheated stoves, 3; out of city, 1; lamp exploded, 2; false alarms, 1; children playing with matches, 1; boxes burning, 1; gasoline stoves, 4; back drafts, 3; drapery, 1; spontaneous combustion, 2; candle sparks, 2; coal ear, 1; spark from chimney, 1; spark from match, 1; sparks from locomotives, 2. These reports were also received and filed. Mr. Ginna, of the Alms Committee, was not able to report, but he would do so later. He recommended that buildings for the city poor be erected as soon as possible.

Mr. Dumont, of the Finance Committee stated that it would be unwise to appropriate $20,000 for streets the coming year, and offered a resolution that $15,000 be appropriated. It was so ordered. He stated that the city's balance a year ago was $11,500. This year it is $13,000, leaving the balance about $3,000 more for 1895. This together with the money received from the Board of Education would bring the total amount within $200 or $300 of what it was last year after the chemical engine was paid for. This would leave the city still ahead on finances. The report was received and filed.

Another resolution was offered by Mr. Dumont providing for the drawing of a note for $4,000 for sewer work. It was so ordered. As was also the resolution that the two notes of $2,000 and $5,000 which will soon be due, be renewed for a short time. He said that there would be arrangements made for more safe room for the city's needs. A communication be received in regard to street numbering was referred to the City Clerk.

Chairman Frost, of the Sewer Committee, made a report which was substantially as follows:

Actual construction on the sewer system was commenced October 1st, 1894, and on December 1st, 1895, there were 22.65 miles completed and ready for use.

Almost the entire area bounded by Grant avenue, Berckman street, Ninth street and Front street, together with the area adjoining Watchung avenue, Putnam avenue and Woodland avenue, are now sewered and ready for house connections.

Early in the season of 1895 negotiations for the purchase of land in the southwestern part of the city, to be used as sewage disposal beds, were commenced and after careful examination of the titles by the Corporation Counsel, as well as expert examination of the property to determine its physical value for the purpose intended, the purchase was concluded of two parcels of land, one formerly owned by the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of New York, containing thirty-three and a half acres, and the other owned by Mrs. Letitia Penfield, of Plainfield, containing about seventeen acres, making fifty and a half acres in all, situated on both sides of Rock avenue, from Front street to Green brook, and being also traversed parallel to Front street, by Dunellen avenue. Three dwelling houses and as many stables are located on these properties. The price paid for both properties was $25,500, and we think that the city has acquired therefore a very valuable asset.

Possession of the Mutual Life Insurance tract was obtained in September, and surveys and levels were at once commenced preliminary to the completion of plans and estimates for the proposed disposal area. Allen Hazen, formerly chemist at the experiment station of the Massachusetts State Board of Health, and recognized as a leading expert in all matters pertaining to water purification and sewage disposal, was engaged as consulting engineer in the planning and construction of the disposal area, so as to insure to the people of Plainfield the very best results attainable under the present knowledge of sewage purification and disposal.

The contract for the construction of the sewage disposal beds was let to Washburn & Washburn, of New York city, and work was commenced about October 10th, and is being prosecuted throughout the winter. The contract called for the completion of six beds and appurtenances and also the receiving basin and connecting pipes by December 15th, but the weather prevented the completion until the present time. The cost of preparing the beds is estimated to reach about $80,000.

Possession of the Penfield tract was not obtained until after the contract for the beds was awarded. This prevented certain items of the proposed work from being included in the estimated cost.

The house and barn on the Penfield property are rented to Messrs. Washburn & Washburn. The two dwelling houses on the Mutual Life tract are in very good condition, and can be occupied with a good-paying tenant.

For the territory in the southeastern portion of the city drained by Cedar brook, plans and estimates for a main sewer have been prepared, and are included in the engineer's report hereto attached. This territory is rapidly being built up with a superior class of residences, and the construction of the proposed system should go together with the necessary laterals cannot long be delayed.

We report our remarks in last year's report as to the exceptionally favorable contracts made with the sewer contractors, and we have every reason to believe that the city has secured the very best of work and of materials throughout. The inspection has been severe and persistent; at the same time there has not been a conspicuous desire on the part of any contractor to evade the requirements of the specifications.

The engineering organization has remained as in 1894, viz: F. W. Farquhar, consulting engineer; Andrew J. Gavett, engineer of construction; H. C. Hulsizer and H. C. VanEmburgh, assistant engineers; Allen Hazen, of Boston, Mass., was engaged as special consulting engineer on the planning and construction of the sewage disposal beds.

Inspectors and assistants have been engaged only as needed, the greatest number employed at any one time being nine; there is now only one at the beds—who also acts as assistant to the engineer in charge. A great deal of valuable work has been accomplished by the engineering department which will be of use to the city hereafter; at present, besides the regular field work on construction, work on the maps for assessment purposes is being diligently pushed, and will take several months to complete.

We are advised by Mr. Hazen that the disposal beds can be safely used throughout the winter without fear of any nuisance being created, especially as the capacity of the beds which are ready for use is of such excellent quality for the purpose intended. The sewer system was, therefore, on December 30th, declared ready for use by the Common Council, and house connections are now being made as rapidly as possible under the supervision of the committee on sewers and the Board of Health, as transmitted through their representative engineer. An ordinance should be passed regulating such connections, and imposing a sufficient penalty to secure its proper observance. The total expenditures on account of sewers to December 31st, 1895, amount to $128,790.13.

In Engineer Gavett's report he stated that for the information of the Council a plan had been prepared for a main sewer to accommodate that portion of Cedar Brook Valley lying too low to drain into the gravity system already constructed. Following this Consulting Engineer F. W. Farquar communicated with Council in regard to the above, which is substantially as follows:

The estimated cost of Cedar Brook Valley main sewer and pumping plant will be about $3,000 per mile. It will begin at Kensington avenue near Watchung avenue and discharge into a pump well at Plainfield and Pember ton avenues. The sewage will be raised by an electric pump located in a chamber under the street adjoining the pump well. The pumps are controlled by a float in the well and work automatically. The sewage is pumped from the well and discharged through a cast iron force main into the sewer at the corner of Grant and Sherman avenues, and from there will flow through gravity mains to the beds. Two-and-a-half horse power will do the work, but five horse power would be better. The cost will be about $600 per year. Arrangements should be made to pay for the actual power used, at an agreed rate, which can be arranged after the first year, when the amount of sewage floating can be ascertained. A low power should be used such as is used for trolley roads and incandescent lighting. The reports and communication was received and placed on file.

A recess was then taken for ten minutes to allow the City Clerk time to write up the proceedings of the meeting, so they could be read and approved. After this was done the Council adjourned.

They will make many extensive changes in the department, adding many new lines, and will make it a perfect department in every way.

Catarrh starts in the nasal passages, affecting eyes, ears and throat, and is in fact, the great enemy of the mucous membrane. Neglected colds in the head almost invariably precede catarrh, causing an excessive flow of mucus, and if the mucus discharge becomes interrupted the disagreeable results of catarrh will follow, such as bad breath, severe pain across forehead and about the eyes, a roaring and buzzing sound in the ears, and oftentimes a very offensive discharge. Ely's Cream Balm is the acknowledged cure of these troubles.

THE MAYOR'S MESSAGE.

Practical Observations and Suggestions About City Work.

LOGICALLY REVIEWS THE TAX RATE.

He Says That People Demand the Improvements of a Big City and Yet Express Surprise at the Rate Being Higher Than Some of the Larger Cities—Recommends the Codification of the City Ordinances—Plainfield is Now Second Class.

The following is the full text of Mayor Gilbert's message read to the Common Council last Monday:

To the Honorable Common Council of the City of Plainfield:

Since my last annual message to your Honorable Body Plainfield has been enrolled among the second-class cities of the State. This is time will work an important change in the powers of the Common Council, and in the internal structure of our municipal government. Under the law as it now stands, after the expiration of ninety days from the time of the passage of the State Census, Plainfield will be classified as a second-class city, and will be subject to all future legislation affecting second-class cities. Past legislation will not apply until the Common Council, by resolution or by ordinance, shall so determine.

Would it not be well to refer this matter to your Committee on Laws and Ordinances, with instructions to prepare and report what laws already on the statute books affecting second-class cities it would be advantageous to the city to adopt?

CODIFICATION OF ORDINANCES.

A matter that merits early attention is the codification of the Ordinances of the city. The last Code was prepared in 1888, since which time many new ordinances have been adopted and many old ones amended. I would suggest a thorough revision this year, and that hereafter a supplement be printed every two or three years in order that the ordinances may be kept in shape for ready reference.

It is provided in a State law passed in 1895, "that the Common Council may codify the ordinances of the City, and the said ordinances when printed in book form and codified as true ordinances of the city by the City Counsel or Attorney and approved by the Mayor, shall be received by all courts as evidence."

TAXES.

No better reply can be made to the criticism that the increase in the tax rate during the past few years has been unnecessarily high than to furnish an abstract of the Treasurer's Statement for 1895, showing the amount expended by the several departments. It must be born in mind that there has been a marked suburban development during the part few years. New streets have been opened and old ones have been improved. New buildings have been erected and occupied in the newly improved section. The development of the fourth ward alone has been phenomenal. This new growth calls for an increase of public expenditure,—for street improvements, for lights, and for police and fire protection. Our people enjoy all the conveniences of the larger cities, and express surprise if the tax rate proves be higher than in larger cities. It is manifestly unfair to compare the rate in Plainfield with that of New York or Brooklyn. If Plainfield was a thickly settled city, it would accommodate a population of one hundred and fifty thousand people, and with such a population, while it will have no greater mileage of streets to improve, or to patrol, or to light, or to supply with fire hydrants it would have fully ten times the present population and a proportionately larger property valuation to tax. Would it not be surprising under such a condition if the tax rate should not be proportionately lower.

The following summary from Treasurer's report will show expenditures of the several departments for 1895, to which I invite the most careful consideration and the freest criticism on the part of tax payers:

Expended on Street	$12,688 05
Steam Road Roller	2,500 00
Street Lights	10,263 21
Police Department	10,262 22
Salaries and Commissions	3,850 61
Fire Department	10,159 22
Fire Hydrants	3,310 00
City Poor	3,276 16
Public Library	3,297 99
Miscellaneous	3,307 99
Total City Expenditure	$72,411 16
State and County Tax	56,836 43
Public Schools	53,000 00

The Public School expenditure does not form a part of the Treasurer's report, but I take the figures given in school report for 1895 as a fair estimate for 1895.

SEWERS.

The people are to be congratulated that our sewerage system will soon be in full, and I trust successful operation. So much care has been taken with every detail of the work that I feel confident we shall not be disappointed with the result.

The system embracing 28 miles of streets will cost from 150,000 to $160,000. The original estimate of cost was $100,000, but the estimate covered but 15 miles of sewers, the id is originally being to lay pipes only where they were deemed necessary at that time. In view, however, of the rapid growth of the city, and the fact that the entire city would have to be covered in a few years, it was thought wise to embrace in our present contract every street that could be connected with the system. The saving effected by this is considerable, as it is not likely that we should be able again in a long time to make contracts so favorable to the city as our present contracts.

SEWERS.

The successful negotiation of the sewer bonds on a four per cent basis is also a matter for congratulation, and the wise action of the Common Council in taking advantage of an easy money market to sell them, has been fully and quickly vindicated.

In view of the present disturbed financial condition of the country, it is not at all likely that we should be able at any time during the next year or two, to negotiate our bonds at better than a five or six per cent basis.

In the recent discussion with regard to the price at which our bonds were sold, it was claimed by those who were disposed to criticise adversely the action of the council—that many four per cent municipal bonds issued by cities of close credit would not compare favorably with our own, had been sold at a high premium, and that the failure to obtain a premium for our own gilt edge bonds fully justified the adverse criticism. For the information of those who do not fully understand what it is that fixes the market value of the various issues of municipal bonds, I will state that the price at which they can be sold, depends entirely upon the size of the market in which it is possible to sell them. Bonds that are a legal investment for the Savings Institutions of New York and New England have a large market, and because of the active demand for this class of securities will readily sell at a premium when financial conditions are normal. Bonds that do not belong to this class, have a very limited market and are not readily sold on a four per cent basis. Unfortunately, Plainfield bonds are not a legal investment for the Savings Institutions of any State but our own, and as four per cent interest is not considered a very tempting investment in New Jersey, our bonds found but few bidders.

STREETS.

With the opening of Spring, you will doubtless proceed as rapidly as possible to put our streets in good condition. The importance of this to the growth and prosperity of our city cannot be overestimated. The report of the Street Commissioner shows that he has given thought and study to the subject, and that he appreciates the necessity of economy in his aim to secure the best results.

It seems to me experience has demonstrated that outside of the business section of the city, the macadam pavement is better adapted to our needs than any other: it is cheap and properly made, furnishes a hard, smooth pavement, and can easily and cheaply be kept in repair. In the business section something more durable than macadam ought to be required: it would be a great improvement if Front street from Watchung avenue to Grant avenue, Park avenue from Front to Fourth street, Watchung avenue from Front to North avenue and North avenue could be paved with Asphalt. This pavement seems to give greater satisfaction in large cities than any other and is less expensive than other durable pavements. It will cost at least fifty thousand dollars per mile, and of course could not be undertaken at the present expense. Should the abutting property owners on either side of the above named streets be willing to bear the cost of such an improvement, doubtless the Council would find a authority to issue Certificates of Indebtedness to pay for the improvement, such certificates to be paid from the assessments when collected. Otherwise, I fear it shall be left to continue the use of macadam for the present.

REMOVAL OF ASHES.

Your attention is called to the importance of stricter regulations regarding the removal of ashes. Under the present system, the wagons employed for this purpose are old and dilapidated and it frequently happens that the contents are spilled along the streets, or blown about by the wind in a most annoying manner. The parties who are licensed to attend to this business should be compelled to use wagons or carts suitable for the purpose, and also to cover their loads so as to prevent the spilling or blowing about of the contents.

This is of importance to the health of the city, and should receive early consideration.

POLICE.

1 Captain	salary	$1,000 00
2 Night Patrolmen	" $720 each,	1,440 00
1 Day	" 720 "	1,320 00

This force is inadequate to properly watch every exposed portion of the city, and in my judgment, we should have, at least, three more men on duty. The men now composing the force are intelligent, temperate and attentive to duty, and in this respect will compare favorably with the police of any other city. If more and better disorder prevails or crime is committed it is only what occurs in cities where the most efficient police condition exists. I think it can be truly said that Plainfield is as nearly free from crime as it can flourish here to any great extent. Of course, in any community of fourteen thousand people there will be more or less disorder, and violation of law, but when compared with other cities of the same size it must be admitted that we are to a remarkable degree exempt from crime and disorder. I will not claim for this the credit due to the vigilance of the police, but I do think that it speaks well for the police that such a condition prevails.

It seems necessary that some action should be taken to provide a new police station, either through purchase or lease. Our present quarters are no longer adapted to our needs. While it is my judgment that the city should own such a building, I cannot recommend at this time any expenditure that will materially increase the tax rate. The sewer tax will make the rate pretty high for a few years, and until this is pretty well collected it should be our aim not to impose additional burdens upon taxpayers.

It has been suggested to me that a certain party has expressed a willingness to build a police station and lease it to the city at a reasonable rental. If such an arrangement can be made, I think it would be wise to consider it. I would also suggest that the police committee be instructed to investigate the Gamewell Police System with a view to its introduction at some future time if deemed desirable. Also to consider the wisdom of appointing a roundsman and providing him with a bicycle for night service.

SUNDAY SELLING.

The Sunday ordinance should be thoroughly revised. The number of places that close on Saturday for the purpose of doing business on Sunday is on the increase, and unless some action is taken to arrest this growing evil, there is danger that Sunday will lose much of its quiet and orderly character. The principal business of these places is the sale of cigars and owing to the fact that the saloons are closed, Sunday is a more profitable day for this business than Saturday. If, under pretense of religiously observing the Seventh Day, one man can thus violate the law, why may not everybody? At my suggestion the Corporation Counsel has prepared an ordinance to prohibit the sale of cider on Sunday, the passage of which I think will tend to check this evil. I bespeak for it your thoughtful consideration.

The people have committed to you the government of the city for 1896. You have accepted the trust. As Mayor of the city, I shall cheerfully co-operate with you in your efforts to evolve an orderly system of government. In view of the fact that this is the last annual message that I shall submit to your Honorable Body, it may not be out of place for me to refer to a matter which appears to me to be of importance to taxpayers at the present time. There is evidently a growing sentiment in the community in favor of a more rapid development in the improvements than has taken place in the past. This sentiment favors the erection of a City Hall, the laying out of public parks, with such other improvements as are needed to put Plainfield in the front ranks of cities of her class, so far as public improvements are concerned.

Under such conditions, I would sympathize with this sentiment. I would have Plainfield an ideal city, but we must not lose sight of the fact that with a population of only 14,000, and a taxable valuation of $7,000,000, there is a limit of expenditure beyond which we can not go without putting burdens upon our people too heavy for the majority to bear. Our growth has been substantial and enduring. We are gradually acquiring the essentials of municipal life. With the completion of our sewerage system, the extension of our railway system, the rehabilitation of our necessarily disordered streets, with better police accommodations, and provision for the future, we shall have all that is essentially necessary at the present time to promote the health and convenience of our people. Other things will come in due time. Let us be wise and not permit our impatience to acquire them to involve us too heavily in debt, and thus swell our tax rate to the detriment of our future growth. A City Hall, and station house, and beautiful parks, and asphalt pavements, would greatly add to the attractiveness of our city, but they can not be had without a further issue of bonds, and this I would not recommend without the consent of the people, which I am quite sure could not be obtained at the present time.

Respectfully submitted,

A. Gilbert.

ALFRED F. H. STREULI TAKES A MONTCLAIR BELLE FOR A WIFE.

The Young Lady is Miss Elizabeth Ogilvie Barker,—Large Number of Guests From Plainfield—Will Reside Here

St. Luke's P. E. church at Montclair was the scene of one of the prettiest weddings ever witnessed, Saturday afternoon at 3:30, when Miss Elizabeth Ogilvie Barker, daughter of David Sanford Barker, was united in marriage to Alfred Francis Hooper Streuli, of this city. The ceremony was performed by the rector, Rev. Dr. Carter.

Edward Bloodgood, of New York, was the best man.

The bride was exquisitely gowned in white satin trimmed with chiffon and point lace. A tulle veil, orange blossoms and a diamond wreath, the gift of the groom, completed her costume. She also carried bridal roses.

The maid of honor, Miss Marion Atkins, of Montclair, wore a gown of white satin, also a large white hat trimmed with plumes. She carried white lilacs.

The bridemaids were Mrs. Sydney Page Whaton, of Pittsburg; Miss Mary E. Wilson, of Plainfield; Miss Elizabeth Price, of Philadelphia, and Miss Burr, of Montclair. They were charmingly gowned in Marie Antoinette coats, pink satin petticoats, and were large black velvet hats trimmed with plumes. After the ceremony a reception was given at the home of the bride's parents, 134 Park street. Mrs. Barber was assisted by Mrs. Evarts Tracy, of Plainfield, and Mrs. Atkins, of Montclair, in receiving.

Mr. and Mrs. Streuli left after the reception for a month's tour through the South, and on their return will reside at 828 Arlington avenue, this city.

The ushers at the church were as follows: Howard Beebe, W. C. Baker, Percy Stewart, of Plainfield; Robert Tracy, E. L. Walz, of New York, and J. Harding Page Whaton, of Pittsburg.

A CLASS RECEPTION.

The Misses Stevens Entertain the Graduating Class of the N. P. School.

A delightful time was spent at the home of the Misses Emma and Bertha Stevens, of Grandview avenue, on Friday evening, by their classmates in the class of '96 of the North Plainfield Public School. Games, music and conversation made the hours pass by unheeded, and all were sorry when the time came for them to depart. Dainty refreshments were served near the close of the evening. Those who were present besides the hostesses were: The Misses S. M. Cutler, Adel Kerby, Nellie Martin, Libbie Joseph; James Arnold, John H. VanWinkle, Clifford Braider, Charles Barlow and Roland Western.

If suffering with piles, it will interest you to know that DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve will cure them. This medicine is a specific for all complaints of this character, and if instructions (which are simple) are carried out, a cure will result. We have tested this in numerous cases, and always with like results. It never fails. L. W. Randolph, 143 W. Front st.

Marble and Granite Works,

30

Somerset st., North Plainfield.

If you have not engaged your work I should be pleased to call for it.

I buy only first-class Marble and Granite and do work all unless at prices that will enable me to put up the work with credit to myself and justice to the purchaser. I employ no agents and therefore am enabled to make a reduction in the price of my work to the customer, of the commission generally paid to agents.

I am under no small expense in running my shop, myself and my son doing the larger portion of the work, and we personally attend to the setting of all work, and look upon business in this light, that Good Work and Good Material, at Fair Prices, is a standing advertise for my business, which will tend to build up trade, and I feel safe in warrant that no dealer can sell you the same work and same stone any cheaper than I can.

Hoping to be favored with your patronage, I am yours respectfully,

THE SEA SHELL.

From out this pink fantastic shell,
Very throated ocean seem to swell,
And in long buried music tell
The hymn of the chanting sea.

The crested breakers on the shore
Roll grandly up with unuttered roar,
And so they roll forevermore,
With mighty melody.

The soft winds in this spiral sing;
From out the caves they bring and bring
A sound of bells which faintly ring
And chime melodiously.

And now they whisper soft and low;
And now they cease, and now they sob
They are where'er the breezes blow,
Those echoes of the sea.

With plaintive voice they sadly weep;
And now they slowly die to sleep;
But still the voices of the deep
Are chanting hymns of thee.

"THE RULES OF CIVILITY."

Good Breeding as It Was Taught in the Old Days.

The author of a quaint little book published in England in the year 1685, though manifestly of French origin, defines civility as "a science that teaches us to esteem of our words and actions in their proper and just places." With this definition, based, as he honestly confesses it to be upon the counsel of the ancients, no one will feel disposed to quarrel. It is only when we come to examine the fruits of this philosophy that we feel tempted to enter a mild protest. How, for instance, the funny way in which the author of "The Rules of Civility" warns his contemporaries against making too abrupt an entry into the presence of a great person. Rule 19 says: "As the door of his chamber or closet it would be rude to knock. We are only to scratch, and when in a kingly or princely lodgment not even so is demanded by any of the officers we must give him our surnames only without the addition of master."

Apropos of ladies, the author of "The Rules of Civility" tells us that "it is not becoming of a person of quality, when in the company of ladies, to handle them roughly, to kiss them by surprise, to pull off their hoods, to snatch away their handkerchiefs, to rob them of their ribbands and put them into his hat, to force their letters or books from them or to look into their papers," etc.

With regard to the subject of "what we are to observe at table" our author has many amusing things to say. "If a person of quality," says he, "desires you help him with anything that is to carved with a spoon you must by no means make use of your own spoon, if you have eaten anything with it; but call for another, which he sends his own spoon along with his plate, where there will be no occasion for yours." "If we eat out of the dish, we must have a care of putting the hand that is to carry it before us," or eating out of any other part of the dish than that which is directly before us." "Having served yourself with your spoon, you must by no means to wipe it, and indeed as often as you use it, for none are so nice that they will not eat pottage or anything of that nature but will put your spoon in twice after you have put it into your mouth."—St. James Gazette.

"The Roaring Girl."

"Enter Moll in a frieze jerkin and a black scarf." Thus runs the old comedy Moll Cutpurse comes upon the stage, and I truly it was by her clothes that she was first notorious. By accident a woman, by habit a man, she must needs invent a costume proper to her pursuits. But she was no shrieking reformer, no fanatic spying reprehension in a pair of breeches. Only in her attire she showed her wit, and she went to a bull baiting in such a dress as well became her favorite sport. She was not of those "who speak as they list, but never ride." The jerkin, the doublet, the galligaskins were put on to serve the practical purposes of life, not to attract the policeman or the simpleton; and when a petticoat spread its ample folds beneath the doublet not only was her array handsome, but a symbol of the universal one who was neither man nor woman and yet both.

After awhile, however, the petticoat seemed to tame the wearer. She was tamer, and she exchanged it for the great Dutch slop, imbibed in which unseemly garment she is pictured in the ancient prints. Up and down the city she went, not only scolding, earning the names which Middleton gave her in her green girdhood. "She has the spirit of four parishes," says the wit in the comedy, "and a voice that will drown all the city."—Macmillan's Magazine.

What Becomes of the Lead Pencils.

"I don't know that anybody ever gave a satisfactory answer to the question. What becomes of all the pencil dust I think," said a father, "that if anybody should ask what becomes of all the lead pencils I would tell 'em. My two younger children have reached that age when they begin to school and carry pencil boxes. A part of the equipment of the pencil box is a pencil sharpener, which can be bought now for the marvelously low price of 1 cent. Armed with this pencil sharpener the temptation to sharpen the pencil is, of course, irresistible. They first use the sharpeners, the children used to turn off little saucers full of the fragrant cedar shavings; but they soon got sand, and now at the least blunting or breaking of the point the pencil is carefully turned down again. And that's what becomes of the pencils the children turn 'em into shavings."—New York Sun.

Shelley's Glasses.

Mr. Stanley tells a New York reporter how he came to wear glasses. "That very pair of spectacles," he said, "I took from the table of the missionary, Bishop Parker, in Central Africa, when I went on carelessly to look at a manuscript and discovered that my sight was no longer in its normal state—for reading, at least." He uses the bishop's glasses still.

MILITARY PUNISHMENTS.

The Terrible Tortures That Were Inflicted in Eighteenth Century.

The military punishments in 1746 were terrible. The Duke of Cumberland's general orders contain on three consecutive days sentences of 800, 500 and 800 lashes for "mutinous expressions" and "insolent behavior." Three days afterward a sentence of "1,000 lashes" is recorded. In fairness to the man decreed to die, but death would have been a merciful punishment. A martinet of that day might be and was a terrible tyrant to his men. Strangers out of the way punishments were inflicted for trifling offenses without adding one lota to the efficiency of the army. The soldier might either be "picketed" or made to ride the "wooden horse." In "picketing" the culprit's naked heel rested on a sharpened stake driven into the ground, his right wrist and right leg being drawn up as high as they could be to a hook fixed in an adjoining post. The whole weight of the body rested on the sharpened stake, which, though it did not break the skin, inflicted exquisite torture. The only means of alleviation was to rest the weight on the wrist, the pain of which soon became undurable. Soldiers were frequently sentenced to stand on the "picket" for a quarter of an hour, and in the cavalry it was often done by order of the colonel without authority of court martial.

The back of the "horse" was formed of planks so arranged as to form a sharp ridge 9 inches high. The legs, 4 or 5 feet in length, rested on a stand moving upon wheels. To complete the resemblance a rough wooden head and tail were added. The offender was placed on the ridge with his hands tied behind him, and to increase the punishment a heavy musket was not infrequently tied to his legs. This punishment, which might be inflicted by sentence of court martial or by order of the colonel of a regiment, wrought so much injury to those subjected to its discipline that it had to be discontinued. Francis Grose tells us that so late as 1760 the remains of a wooden horse were standing on the parade at Portsmouth.—Chambers' Journal.

IT WAS A GOOD JOKE.

But the Obtuse Barber Could Not Get a Line on Nicks.

As he took his seat in a Brooklyn barber's establishment the fat, jolly looking customer turned to the knight of the shears and said:

"Dot was a bretty goote joke on Hans, vas'nt it, the barber shop around the corner. Don't it?"

"Vat vas it? I guess I don't already know of Hans?" replied the elongated German barber as he stropped a razor before beginning work on his customer.

"You don't have heard dot joke?" said the latter. "Vell, you vas de first I vas tell myself all over efery time I think of it. It vas like this: A man come into Hans' place, und Hans shave him. He says to Hans, 'I vant something for manner mit dot razor,' und Hans he say, 'Nix!' Then the man laugh like the divil nearly out of his chair and say, 'Yes; dots it—nicks it, ha, ha!' Bretty goote joke, vas'nt it?"

"I don't see where dot joke comes out," replied the barber as he daubed the lather in the customer's left eye.

"You don't see dot eye—nicks?" asked the customer impatiently.

"Nix; I see no joke mit nix, und I think you vas crazy," replied the barber emphatically.

"Vell, if you don't see some joke mit nicks, you vas bretty thick headed," answered the customer in an angry tone of voice.

"You vas foolish or drunk—maype sunstruck," unconsciously replied the barber.

"Vat you mean by sunstruck?" asked the customer, "but I find me a barber who vasn't so thick headed he sees no joke mit nicks." To which that parting shot he went out of the shop, slamming the door after him.

"Next!" called out the barber, and as the new victim took his seat in the chair he said, "Dot feller vat goes out vas a flam flimmer or a crazy lunticks."—New York Tribune.

Stevenson's Sustained Power.

Much splendor in treatment, much richness in the elements employed, may be perfectly managed in little pieces of work for may make a large one so distinctly gorgeous, that only a trained eye will perceive discrepancy between its parts. But when discrepancy must exist. The limitations of the small are fearful that a colossal shall be elaborated, chiseled and jeweled all over like a small shrine for the bones of a saint, and a failure. The task done the laws of art would forbid its looking well. No one could write a book from end to end as Ruskin has written his most splendid passages, and if he could it would weary and distress the reader. But "The Pilgrim's Progress" is homogeneous from end to end. Its beauty is complete and sustained, while the elaborately "precious" or the perfervid, luscious and luxuriant writers of our day approaches Stevenson in his power to be always at his best. Yet in saying that his work is beautiful I have affirmed, of course, that its simplicity is never monotonous, dull or hard. It is like the work of a Greek sculptor, which is obviously defective because were it besprinkled with East Indian jewels.—"Robert Louis Stevenson and His Writings," by Mrs. M. G. Van Rensselaer, in Century.

Develope or Develop.

Whether this word should or should not be spelled with the final "e" seems to be a puzzle of modern orthographers. "Develope" was undoubtedly used at one time—Burke and others are quoted as illustrations—but now a writer who so carelessly to look at a manuscript and discovered that my sight was no longer in its normal state—for reading, at least." He uses the bishop's glasses still.

CHINA'S GREAT BELL.

It Is the Largest and Most Perfect One In the World.

For the last 400 years—that is, ever since the discovery of the new world—China's bell of liberty, the largest and most finished on the globe, has failed its tongue of peace and prayer in Peking. The famous bells at Moscow and Mandalay are both unhung, the former being fractured and otherwise defective, but the Peking bell is ringing on, suspended by its wooden beam and sheltered beneath the eaves of an open fan, still as bright and sound as when it left its matrix.

China's bell of liberty is in many respects the finest work of art in China, a product of native skill, which could probably not be duplicated by the highest ability or resources of western foundries. It weighs 120,000 pounds, stands 14 feet high, with a diameter of 24 feet and nearly a foot in thickness. Without a flaw or defect, it is completely covered in relief, both inside and outside, with myriads of Chinese characters, each one an inch in size. They form prayerful extracts from Buddhistic classics.

It is one of the vagaries of Buddhism that its prayers of the faithful may be infinitely and acceptably repeated by mechanical helps, as, for instance, by revolving wheels. Hence the huge slips of this mighty and eloquent bell are moved by flitting tongue, they breathe forth in deep, sweet, prolonged and wonderful vibratory tones those prayers of Buddha and call as well all devotees to worship.

One of the chroniclers of the fifteenth century states that it was a period of supreme devotion in Buddhism, during all forms of art and religion, from emperor down to humble craftsman, as the day and hour approached for pouring the molten metal from that myriad lettered matrix, and for producing Ta Chung, the noblest bell in all the world, and no doubt an almost equal interval has passed when it rung out the advent of peace with Japan and the restored liberty of the empire.

The artists who successfully accomplished the molding and casting of this great bell were not only congratulated by Buddhistic ecclesiastics and their followers, but they were ennobled by the emperor, while their work itself, amid changing creeds and dynasties, is imperishable, being as clear cut and perfect today as when it first came forth from the crumbling mold of sand.—Baltimore Sun.

Laurence Sutton's Dog.

Mop was the first person who was told of my engagement. He was the first to greet the wife when she came home, a bride, to his own house. He had been made to understand from the beginning that she did not like dogs—in general—and he set himself out to please and to overcome the unspoken antagonism. He had a dozen parts to play, and he played it with a delicacy and a tact which rarely have been equaled. He did not assert himself. He kept himself in the background. He was friendly in approaches at first were slight and almost imperceptible, but he was always ready to do or to help in an unaggressive way. He followed his mistress from room to room and down stairs, and he looked and waited. Then he began to sit on the trail of her gown; to stand at close fit her or his heels and whimper once in awhile to jump upon the sofa beside her, or into the easy chair behind her, winking at me from time to time in his dog fashion.

And at last he was successful. One dreary winter, when he suffered terribly from inflammatory rheumatism, he found his hitherto unknown forte. He lay by the kitchen fire, getting up in the middle of the night to go down to look after him, when he uttered in pain the cries he could not help, and Mop "knew better." One rare old brandy, kept by me for some extraordinary occasion of festivity, was missing. It was called for in the bill rendered in ruling Mop!—"Three Dogs," by Laurence Hutton, in St. Nicholas.

Humanity Always Seeking Equality.

Perhaps it is because we know society to be merely a make believe in its equality that so many society people regard a real equality as impossible and are content to remain in the shadow. Even when the pretense of equality is precious, and it has more honesty in it than the pretense of inequality. There is nothing so essentially false as the claim of the man who says he takes thought, is so distinctly aware of the fact as the inferior. Humanity is always seeking equality. The patrician wishes to be with his equals because his inferiors make him uneasy; the plebeian wishes to be with his equals because his superiors embarrass him. The fact thus accounts for inequality itself, for classes. Inferiority and superiority were intolerable to men, and so they formed themselves into classes, that they might be equals. Classes they might have the peace, the comfort, of equality, and each kept himself to his own class for that reason.—"From Equality as I Saw Him," by Mrs. M. G. Van Rensselaer, in Century.

"Clock of the Dead Kings."

The most peculiar clock in the world is that in a tower in the courtyard of the palace of Versailles. It has but a single hand and is known as "L'Horloge de la Mort" (Clock of Death), or "Clock of the Dead Kings." It has no "works," but consists merely of a single hand and a dial, the latter in imitation of the sun. Upon the death of a king in any portion of Europe the hand is set to the number of his demise and remains in that position until another king passes away. This curious custom is said to have originated in the time of Louis XIV, who is fond of "state," and it is about the only relic of royalty in Versailles that escaped the furious mobs of the time of the French revolution.—St. Louis Republic.

Custom of Saying Grace Not Falling Off.

The old fashioned habit of saying grace before meals is not dying out. In some families the custom of saying a silent grace is observed, but, to my mind, the old fashioned method of asking God's blessing on the food we are about to receive, while all stand reverently, is the most proper way in which to observe the custom.—Ladies' Home Journal.

An Artist's Enthusiasm.

"There is only one thing," she said to her dearest girl friends, "that makes me doubt Herbert's affection for me."

"What is that?"

"He thinks that some of the snap shot photographs he has taken of me are good likenesses."—Washington Star.

PROHIBITS SUNDAY WORK.

EXCEPT TO THOSE WHO HABITUALLY OBSERVE THE SEVENTH DAY.

Borough Council Will Pass an Ordinance to Stop City Barbers From Opening Shops in the Borough on Sundays Only.

The Borough Council members attended the first meeting of the year last Friday in full force, Mr. Howell being the only member absent. Clerk Arnold started to read the minutes of the previous regular and adjourned meetings, but by mistake read the minutes of the meeting held one year ago. He discovered his mistake very soon and after the members had indulged in a good laugh he returned to the right minutes. They were approved, and he then presented his financial report for the past month, which was received and filed. It was as follows:

	Balance.	Deficit.
Borough	$ 256.35
Fire Department		$ 148.30
Light	108.45
Roads		408.12
Poor		113.97
	$ 361.70	$ 669.89
		$ 361.70
Total balance		$ 308.19

He also reported $13.50 collected as fines and from licenses.

Tax Collector H. N. Spencer's report for 1895 was then read as follows:

Previously reported	$8,205.58
County tax	3,670.98
State school tax	2,359.73
Borough tax	1,747.80
Light tax	2,009.97
Road tax	1,746.36
Fire department tax	1,218.94
Board of Health tax	262.03
Poor tax	611.78
Special school tax	4,309.50
Poll tax	272.00
Dog tax	94.00
Sidewalk tax	39.00
Total	$26,501.96

This was also received and filed.

A communication was read from L. E. Backlaer and others asking that the name of Emily street be changed to Lincoln place. It was referred to the street committee.

Residents in the vicinity of Somerset street, near Mountain and Summit avenues, petitioned council to lay crosswalks at both corners of the latter street on Somerset, and complained of the dangerous condition of the sidewalk between Mountain and Summit avenues. This was also referred to the street committee.

A batch of monthly bills were presented and after being audited were ordered paid. Mr. Peck, of the fire, water and lamps committee, reported progress in the matter of securing a fire-bell and the erection of a tower and stated that a few bids had been received. He hoped to be able to report more fully at the next meeting of the Council. The report was received and filed.

In regard to the complaint made against the poor service given by the Plainfield Electric Company, he stated that he had communicated with the company and had been informed that it was due to the fact that an unreliable inspector had failed in his duty. He had been discharged and better service would be given.

Mr. Valiant reported that the laws and ordinances of the borough had been compiled by the borough council and were now in shape to be printed. Mr. Smith, of the street committee, stated that with the exception of one sidewalk, part of another, and one crosswalk, the work as planned and directed by the council had been completed. He hoped to have the above done by the next meeting. In regard to the petition for crosswalks at Mountain and Summit avenues, he said that the walks now there were higher than the street, and he would not advise any change being made. His report was received and filed, as was also the following, which shows the amount of money expended on the streets from December 6th to Jan. 3d, 1896:

Bridge Harrison street	$23 75
Crosswalks Westervelt avenue	7 00
Clearing ditch, Harrison street	4 00
Work on Myrtle avenue	7 25
" Watchung avenue	15 60
" Grandview avenue	2 75
" Washington avenue	8 00
" Somerset street	11 00
" Wilson avenue	3 15
" Craig place	4 00
" Rockview avenue	3 00
" Girard avenue	5 00
" Greenbrook road	7 50
Total	$80 27

Mr. Valiant spoke about changing the name of Emily street and said that he had been seen in regard to the matter by a man interested, who told him the residents wanted the name changed. He thought the present name objectionable.

Mr. Lounsbury thought that all continuous streets should bear the same name, and an effort will be made to remedy this difficulty.

Mr. Schutt offered a resolution, which was adopted, that the street committee be authorized to have Westervelt avenue renumbered from Mountain avenue to the city line, on account of the many duplicate numbers on that avenue, the work to be done by the property owners.

Mr. Lounsbury offered a resolution that a warrant be drawn for $1,540.77 to pay the note of $1,500 with interest due January 14th. It was adopted, as was also one by Mr. Peck for $1,518.75 to pay another note of $1,500 with interest due at the same time.

Mr. Valiant said that he thought a record should be in possession of the Council of all the property on which there was a deficiency in taxes, also of the property on which liens had been effected to bear the expense of laying sidewalks. He also thought same method should be adopted for keeping such records.

At this point, Mayor Hegeman was excused and President Lounsbury took the chair. Before the Mayor left he stated that before the laws and ordinances were printed they should be examined carefully, and the one in regard to allowing cyclers to ride on the borough sidewalks during certain hours be changed.

An ordinance was then introduced which prohibits Sunday work on the part of all who do not habitually observe Saturday and worship on that day. It was placed on first and second readings and laid over till next meeting. The ordinance provides a penalty of $20 or ten days for each offence.

After Mr. Schutt moved that the Council meet Friday evening, January 10th, an adjournment was made.

Protesting for the Armenians.

The following are the resolutions passed by the Armenian meeting held Thursday evening:

The Christian people of Plainfield, N. J., gathered tonight, January 2d, 1896, in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church to consider the condition of their fellow Christians of Armenia, and their duty in regard to them. most solemnly adopt this preamble and these resolutions:

Whereas: Reports have continued to come to us for some months past of the most atrocious and bloody, inflicted upon men, women and children, of Armenia, with the knowledge and apparently by the direction and command of the authorities of Turkey, for no other reason than that these Armenians refuse to renounce their faith and become Mohammedans, therefore

Resolved, That in the name of our Christianity and of our common humanity, we do most earnestly protest against the deeds of savagery as a disgrace to the human race, and to this the nineteenth century of the world's progress.

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to bring this matter to the attention of Congress, and to take such other action as in their judgment may be calculated to put a stop to these horrors which have shocked the Christian world.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the Plainfield papers, and a copy signed by the chairman and secretary of this meeting be sent to the Members of Congress from New Jersey.

Alexander Gilbert, Chairman.
Isaac L. Miller, Secretary.

The Somerville Unionist-Gazette

has the following editorial this week on the subject of consolidating the city and borough, doubtless taking its cue from those who are opposed to the scheme:

We wonder not that the residents of North Plainfield object to any legislation which may transfer them over to Union county and join them in that way to the city of Plainfield. They would have little gain and so much to lose. They have a good economic government with all the advantages of city life without the big tax rate which exists in Plainfield. They can now control their own internal affairs, spend what they please on streets and other improvements and are an influential township in Somerset county. If they go over to Plainfield what do they gain? They simply lose their identity and become the nonentity that all suburban annexes are. They will lose control of their beautiful borough and its streets will get no further improvements until the greater thoroughfares of the larger city are attended to. Assemblyman Reed is right in his opposition to such a plan. His plan is that if consolidation is advisable at all, Plainfield should unite with the borough and become a part of Somerset county. And there is much more reason in his contention than in the other. The city and borough united would make a city of considerable importance in Somerset county which would be an advantage to Plainfield and to Somerset county as well. In Union she would still be overshadowed by larger places.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher, That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Fac-simile Patent, Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher is on every wrapper.

GIVE OLD WORDS A CHANCE.

Why Recent Barbarous Combinations of Letters to Patent?

When laws are made that tend to affect the purity of the English tongue the professors of literature should have a power of revision over the decision of mere M. P.'s.

At present an enterprising manufacturer may not patent an English word, however wheedy he describe his goods, but he may coin a word and patent that. The legislators who brought this about will in the future receive warmest possible time in a future state.

What right have they to tamper with the purity of a noble language and cause the ruin of a literature? The proverb of the offensive perversions of real words" England really requires a licensing committee on matters of language.

I am not a patriotic enthusiast. I can't shout "Hurray!" when I see a regiment of soldiers, and I really think "God Save the Queen" a most stupid national composition, whose demerits are not covered by its good intention, but when I see a great language tampered with my dormant patriotism is awakened.

There is really no justification for the state of things I have described. The average Englishman does not use one word in ten of those placed at his disposal by the lexicographers. There are thousands of long words born to live unseen and waste their length within the dim recesses of a dictionary.

Why not hunt them out and place them at the disposal of patentees? Nobody wants them for general purposes. They are ready for lack of use and only see life from the tip of the tongue of some old Dr. Dryasdust. Place them in the mouths of people more young and pleasant than old professors—give them something to live for.

The pathos of the situation is really tearful, and it is a shame that trifles like American outrages and Russian persecutions should close the ears of the people to the bitter cry of an insulted language.—London Sketch.

NO CHINESE IN LEADVILLE.

Its Rarefied Atmosphere Does Not Agree With Them.

There are no Chinese in Leadville. The atmosphere is too rare for them, and in other cities where a Celestial would step into the camp something or some one soon told him to stray out again, and he quickly obeyed the still, small voice. Some years since a resident of the camp brought in a Chinese cook. Within an hour the cook and his employer were seated upon by a committee of public spirited citizens, full of information as to railroad time tables and the hour for the departure of the next train. The employer was careless as to train time and so announced. "Very well," replied the committee, "we will leave the time table with you and will be at the station to see your friend off, in case you should wish to speak. If he is not there on time, it will probably be necessary to hang him, and if you should get tangled up in the rope we will have no one to blame but yourself." And the committeemen went placidly away to their respective gold and silver propositions.

At 3 p. m. the Chinaman and the afternoon train departed from the camp in each other's company. That was quite a good while ago, but never a Chinaman has since been seen here.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

During January a complete change of machinery will be made in the Newark Sunday Call office. Boilers, engines, press, stereotype and type setting machinery will be supplanted by the latest improved designs. This shows what pluck and brains can do, right alongside of the great New York Sunday papers. Messrs. Ure, Schoch & Company are to be congratulated on their success.

KRIS HAD TO ADOPT WHEELS.

THE JOLLY OLD FELLOW FINALLY GOT TO THE PARK AVENUE BAPTISTS.

Lack of Snow Delayed Him a Week, But When He Arrived He Made Everyone Happy—A Pie With a Golden Plum.

Kris Kringle did not forget the Park Avenue Baptist church children. The absence of snow delayed him but he put wheels on his sleigh and Tuesday evening arrived, buried under a load of packages. The entertainment for the occasion was a Christmas story illustrated by shadow pictures. It told the experiences of the writer on a trip with good old Santa Claus. There was a good little girl, the naughty boys that tried to wreck Santa Claus's sleigh and received nothing but two big rocks for their Christmas present, the poor little brother and sister, and other characters that were visited. At last there was a sound of sleigh bells and in came the jolly Santa Claus in his sleigh. He had discarded the old fashioned reindeer and adopted the petroleum motor. He was pushed up the aisle by some of his friends, however. The presents were then distributed, while boxes of candy and oranges were passed. When the children had all received their gifts, Santa Claus produced a pie of small dimensions which he presented to the pastor, Rev. J. W. Richardson and his wife. Rev. Mr. Richardson put in his thumb and pulled out a valuable plum grown in the treasury of the United States.

The Christmas story was read by its author, Miss Florence G. Hawkins. Joseph Hawkins was the impersonator of Santa Claus. The rest of the committee in charge of the entertainment were Superintendent D. W. C. Skaden, Baird Runyon, Mrs. C. E. Ryder, Miss Alice Spangenburg and Miss Adelia Runyon. The children who assisted in the shadow pictures were Miss Marion Shotwell and Masters Smith, Remsog, Shotwell and Nash.

SANTA CLAUS WAS A LITTLE LATE.

But His Visit Was Hugely Enjoyed at the Children's Home.

Glad indeed were the hearts of the twenty little ones at the Children's Home, Tuesday afternoon, when the handsome Christmas tree freighted with lots of goods things was shown to them. If there is an institution in this fair city that deserves the hearty support of all, it is the Children's Home. It would have brought pleasure to everyone to witness the joy evidenced by the children over the feast provided. They sang Christmas carols just as heartily as a large school of children, after which they were given lots of useful things in the way of clothing, etc.

They also received dolls, toys, books, games, candy and fruit. Those in charge were Mrs. Kimball, Mrs. Cahoone, Miss Ella Serrell, Miss Lewis and James Kimball.

READING HISTORY OF THE FRIENDS.

Young Friends' Association Hear Interesting Papers.

The Young Friends' Association met Friday in regular session in the committee room of the Friends' meeting house on Watchung avenue. The reading of Janney's History of Friends' was continued, giving an account of the religious experience of James Taylor, a Friend of the seventeenth century, and of the persecutions he endured in his work in the ministry.

In the report of the Current Topics Section, many subjects of interest at the present time were touched upon. Among others, the earnest appeal of Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward to President Cleveland asking him to use his influence in settling peaceably the Venezuela difficulty.

A paper was read entitled "The Ministry Among Early Friends." The roll call was responded to by sentiments on Faith, after which the meeting closed with a short silence.

A Westfield Surprise.

Quite a number of young people from Plainfield attended a surprise sociable at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Issac Lambert, at Westfield, on Monday evening. It was given in honor of a new home just completed for Mr. Lambert and was a genuine surprise to him and his estimable wife. Good music, plenty of dancing, followed by a bounteous supper, mace the evening a very enjoyable one to the large number present. Miss Etta Raybert, of North avenue, this city, is entitled to much of the credit for the success of the affair.

Celebrated With Cannon.

Some of the young men of this city and the borough celebrated the arrival of 1896, Tuesday evening, with salutes from a large cannon. They chose Westervelt avenue as the scene of their operations.

The Old Bell Ready to Ring.

The old fire-alarm bell has been hung on top of Warren Engine Company's house, with a rope attached. It will be used temporarily until other arrangements are made.

PASTORS AT HOME.

Three Gospel Teachers Entertain Members of Their Churches.

Rev. C. E. Herring greeted a large number of the members of his church Tuesday at his home, 403 East Second street. He was assisted in receiving by his sister, Miss Pansy Herring. Those who served chocolate and cracers were Miss Nettie Remsen, Miss Wood, Miss Grace Petrie, Miss Agnes Blair, Miss Bessie Blair. A feature of the affair was the presentation to the pastor, by Mrs. P. P. VanArsdale, of an exquisite collection of water color paintings, taken from the texts of sermons preached by Mr. Herring. It is in book form, and a choice bit of holly tied with satin ribbon, makes it an exceedingly valuable present. During the evening Mr. Herring made several flash-light pictures of the young people.

A delightful social affair Tuesday was the tea given by Dr. and Mrs W. R. Richards at their home on East Front street from 4 to 7 o'clock. They were assisted in receiving by Mrs. Ostrom, Mrs. Bushnell, Mrs. Leal. Mrs. Pierson and Miss Richards of Germantown, Pa., sister of Dr. Richards. Those who served as waitresses were Miss Munger, Miss Miller, Miss Erskine, Miss Kate Martine, Miss Tracy, Miss James and Miss Van Winkle. About 160 persons, chiefly members of the Crescent Avenue church, were present and extended hearty congratulations. The decorations of the table were pink.

Rev. Dr. and Mrs. C. R. Barnes, of Grove street, were at home yesterday afternoon to the congregation of the First M. E. church. They were assisted in receiving the numerous guests by the Misses Barnes.

SCHOOL FOR NETHERWOOD.

A Taxpayer Complains of Poor Educational Facilities for That Section.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—A report has gained credence that another public school to be built on Third, near Berckman street, a school in that neighborhood would be a great mistake, as it would not accommodate the great majority of children that attend the Bryant School, who have to walk over a mile, and some of them nearly two miles. There are a great many small children that have to attend a private school to Netherwood on account of the great distance they have to go, and others that do not attend school, as their parents cannot afford to send them to private school. Should a school be built, and it is certainly needed, it should be located no further west than Netherwood avenue to meet the requirements of the East end children. The accommodations at the Bryant School for children that have to eat their lunch there are certainly not what they ought to be; the scholars have the choice of being locked in the cellar while the janitor goes home to a hot dinner, or eating their out of doors.

NO PUBLIC DEMONSTRATION.

The Holiday Was Marked by Quietude in This City.

New Year's was an unusually quiet holiday in Plainfield. Few people appeared on the streets, the day being mostly given up to family gatherings and events of that kind. The time honored custom among the liquor dispensers of treating customers to Tom and Jerry, Roman punch and seductive decoctions of that sort was in vogue and many a man with an overdose was seen ambling along in zig zag tracks to a haven of rest.

People of conventional and unperturbed minds went home early New Year's Eve to enjoy a night of rest in the arms of Morpheus, were rudely awakened at 12 o'clock by the ringing of many bells and tooting of tin horns, but the demonstration of escorting the old year out and the new one in was rather tame this year to what it has been in times past.

TWO FIGHTERS OF SIN MARRY

NOVEL MARRIAGE OF THE SALVATION ARMY.

A Plainfield Army Lassie and a Montclair Warrior Join Lives to Continue in the Work of Their Own Choice.

Two fighters in the war with sin were united in marriage Wednesday at the Salvation Army hall under rather novel circumstances, novel, at least, for Plainfield.

The hall was thronged with people who came to witness the ceremony each contributing fifteen cents to the treasury of the army. The platform and the whole room, in fact, was bright with decorations. Flags, both of the Salvation Army and the United States, floating and greens most artistically arranged, while two large cedar trees acted as sentinels on the sides of the platform. On the platform was seated part of the Plainfield corps and visitors from Orange, Bound Brook, Newark, No. 3, Brooklyn, New Brunswick and New York, No. 7, about forty in all, dressed in the regulation uniform. A passageway was curtained off on the right side of the hall.

At eight o'clock, there was a cheery "Hallejuah" and Brigadier R. Evans and his staff escorted the bride up the passageway and on to the stage. The groom had passed in with the rest of his comrades. Both were dressed in the well-known Salvation Army uniform; the bride did not wear any hat, however, and wore a white muslin scarf over her left shoulder. The bride was Lieut. Paule Scott Dale, of the Plainfield corps. Archibald Low, of the Montclair corps, was the bridegroom.

The service began with the song, "I Now Believe," and after and earnest prayer. Staff Captain Dunham, secretary of this division of the army, took charge of the musical and testimonial service. He led the singing on his cornet and his enthusiasm waked up the assemblage and they sang with a hearty good will.

"Everybody sing," exclaimed the captain. "You married people should give them an hearty welcome, and you who are not married, should sing with a faith that you'll get there some day," and everybody did sing after that. Short and earnest testimonies were given by the workers, some of whom had grown grey in the service. Staff Captain Dunham then announced that a collection would be taken up, and as it was the first one this year, he expected a good one. While it was being taken, Captain Taylor, of the New York headquarters, sang one of his own army songs with guitar accompaniment.

Brigadier Evans next read the Twenty-Third Psalm, commenting on each phrase. The marriage ceremony followed. Brigadier Evans stood in the centre of the platform with the bride and groom, one on either hand, while the flags of the Salvation Army and the United States were held over the couple soon to be united.

Brigadier Evans then affirms upon which the couple were to be married. These were as follows: First, they declared they had not sought marriage for their own happiness and interests, although they hoped that these would be furthered thereby, but in order that their union might enable them the better to please God. Second, they promised not to let this marriage lessen their service to God. Third, they promised never to do anything likely to prevent each other from suffering anything to assist the army. Fourth, they promised to use their influence with each other to a self-sacrifice in fighting in the rank of the army. Fifth, they agreed to regard their home as a Salvation Army officers' quarters. Sixth, they promised, whether together or apart, to do their utmost, as true soldiers of Jesus Christ to carry on the blessed war, and never allow the army to be injured or hindered without doing their utmost to prevent it. Seventh, if, through sickness or any other cause, either one should cease to be an efficient soldier, the remaining one promised to fulfill all the foregoing promises.

The usual marriage ceremony, altered to suit the Salvation Army, was read and the responses made. The couple were then pronounced husband and wife. Now placed the simple wedding ring on his wife's finger, and then all heads were bowed while Staff Captain Dubham offered a prayer for the future happiness of the newly married couple. Then the groom stepped forward and kissed his wife, while the cornet, bass drum and tamborines added to the thunderous applause.

The bridegroom spoke a few words and said that all that was needed to complete his happiness was to know that some poor soul had turned about and started on the right road. He ended by reading a congratulatory telegram from the headquarters in New York. The bride then seconded her husband's remarks. The Brigadier then invited all who would try to work harder for the Lord in 1896 than they had in 1895 to stand, and as the audience rose in a body, the nuptial event came to an end.

SHOULD BE ONE.

James E. Martine Writes About Borough and City Consolidation.

To the Editor of The Daily Press: Borough annexation? No, this is not the popular term—for the word annex would mean different elements—when in reality Plainfield and North Plainfield are one—one in every interest that can make our people one. Streets and avenues cross the imaginary dividing line, people resident in North Plainfield do business in Plainfield, our churches derive much of their membership from the borough, and social and friendly intercourse touch elbows at every entertainment, but aside from all these, sanitary reasons and sewer construction all demand one head and consolidated action. Extensions of streets already projected and in construction would be facilitated. And I feel that no one will contend but that police jurisdiction under one head would mean better service and less expense to each. Whatever may be one's prejudices on the liquor question, I feel that the most liberal will admit the absurdity of two systems or policies with only an imaginary line to divide them. With all deference to the abilities, qualifications and dignity of the two respective Mayors, I confess it always provokes a smile on gala days to see two heads, as city mayors, acting as chief functionaries, when grander dignity and force and better economy would be accomplished through one.

A SILVER WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

Mr. and Mrs. James K. Arnold Entertain a Large Number of Friends.

One of the most delightful events accompanying the opening of the New Year was the celebratio of the twenty-fifth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs James K. Arnold at their home on Manning avenue last Friday. It was one of those occasions where genuine sociability reigns and the lines of formality are so finely drawn as to be invisible. The hours were from 7 to 11, and during that time a large number of intimate friends and relatives called and extended not only their hearty congratulations, but their wish for a very happy New Year.

Mr. and Mrs. Arnold were to be found at one end of the parlor where they welcomed everyone in a hospitable manner. They entered into the festivities with the same interest as when first they met. Choice selections of music were furnished by Guttman, while the guests were arriving and departing, and this added not a little to the pleasure of the event. An elegant supper was served during the evening. Mr. and Mrs. Arnold were the receipients of a large number of presents, including all kinds of silverware and cut glass. The present came from a brother in Wisconsin.

Later in the evening the younger folks indulged in dancing.

TRUTH IN RHYME.

Cider joints flourish with impunity.
In this otherwise pure community.
They guzzle forth their poisonous stuff
And make imbibers very gruff;
Zigzag their victims walk,
Befuddled thoughts they talk.
Then a policeman comes along
And the arm of law so strong
Descends in one mighty swoop
And off they march to the coop.
A night of horrors is spent.
With pockets containing not a cent.
Arraigned in court the next morn
The victim finds no excuse, easily forlorn.
At the prisoner the judge gives a gaze,
He hears the charge—Drunk!—thirty days!
And thus ends the little escapade
Of the cheerful hard cider trade.

Smalley Brothers Purchase.

Charles H. Lyiman has sold F. H. Martin's four-story brick building, No. 136 North avenue, the store of which is occupied by Chas. C. Lister, to Smalley Brothers. David, Albert and Newton. They will not move their business there having only purchased it on speculation.

A Present to the Superintendent.

A very pleasant event was the chasing of the old year out at L. A. Rheaume's, when the employes gathered around their Superintendent Mr. J. D. Lolzeaux and in a few well chosen words presented him with a fine bicycle lamp.

STRANGE MARINERS.

BOATMEN WHO PASS THE LARGE CITIES DURING THE NIGHT.

They Transport the Dreadful Nitroglycerin. Pilots Have Great Respect For the Boats With a Little Red Flag—Avoided as If They Were the Cholera.

Oftimes by night, when the twin cities are wrapped in slumber, when only the "night owls" are astir and every one who can be heard with greater ease than in the daytime, a close observer, stationed on one of the many bridges that cross the Allegheny river from city to city, might detect a small craft, perhaps a skiff, going down the river. If an attempt were made to learn more about the boat and its occupants or cargo, it is probable that the self appointed investigator would at once be repulsed.

From the mysterious actions of this craft's crew any ordinary mortal would quite innocently and naturally suppose that it would be a fit subject for police investigation. The observer could call up stories he may have read of the "river rats of London," who frequented the old piers of the historic London bridge, that has been falling down in the songs of childhood for many decades, but which still sustains the weight of tramping multitudes. These "river rats" are not confined with river thieves that a separate and peculiar system of police service patrols its waters, but they have their secret places, when they may be discovered.

However, the Alleghany river does not compare in any way with the slimy and ill famed Thames, although the cities of Pittsburg and Alleghany infested with the parasites known as "river rats," the worst of all thieves and thugs. The man that may be in the little boat and keeps strangely away from all things animate or inanimate is not employed in any questionable service, on the contrary, is engaged in a calling that is most strictly honest and terribly dangerous. The curious observer, whose inquisitiveness might be aroused, would, if he knew the business of this exclusive individual, give him a wide berth and heave a great sigh of relief when he disappeared.

It is quite possible to, and, more than possible, it is probable that the thousands of sleepers in the down town districts of the two cities and the thousands of night toilers and idlers may some night be awakened and startled by the noise of the most tremendous explosion, such as will shake the very foundations of the cities and leave no trace of its destruction unless it be the remains of a few spans of several bridges, for those men who slip through so silently and mysteriously on the waterway between the shores of Pittsburg and Alleghany are engaged in carrying that dreaded explosive, nitroglycerin, from where it is manufactured on the Alleghany river to places down the Ohio and on the Mississippi and other rivers.

This heavy explosive cannot be transported by railroads for obvious reasons, and only men who by constant contact with the substance, and who have had tried in them the utmost confidence, and its dangers, can be induced to take it, for even a short distance, in wagons fitted with the most elaborate contrivances. Therefore the placid waterways are perhaps the safest highways whereby this most dangerous substance can be transported.

The men who are employed more men are engaged in this perilous occupation. They go past large places like Pittsburg in the nighttime, when they will encounter very few boats, and will observe the watches are at rest. They are the terrors of rivermen. No matter how anxious a pilot may be to overtake a boat, and will see the red flag shown by those wanderers of the waterways is more than sufficient for him to have the engines stop to let the boats glide past each other, for the little agitation on the aqueous as possible.

A year or more ago the towboat Pacific left Pittsburg for Cincinnati. It had not gone down the Ohio very far when a lone boat asked for a lift. It is customary on the river for a man who may be out in a skiff to tie to a tow, and thus be taken the length of his journey.

This individual tied up and went along all day. It was noticed that whenever another tow boat came up he would go out and keep his skiff away from the barges and was altogether very solicitous regarding its welfare. The next morning at eight and the strained manners of the lone traveler excited the suspicions of the captain and crew, and it was demanded of him what the boat contained. To which he replied that he was taking a load of glycerin to be shot in the oil and gas wells of Indiana. This information filled the faces of the crew, who recognized that they were harboring instant death, and they gave him two minutes to cut loose and get away. He did so in the shortest time, and they helped push the boat away, so that it would not accidentally bump against the barges.

A witness to the terrible explosion out in the river from Packersburg several weeks ago, during the hot spell early in June, told a Leader man that the explosion was probably due to the excessive heat or a sudden change of temperature. He said he saw the man wet a blanket and lay for some moments on it to protect it from the sun. The next instant he heard a mighty detonation and saw the flash of the awful explosion.

Many unbalanced men are of the opinion that the steamer Cargo, which blew up in the Alleghany river opposite Eleventh street seven years ago, exploded from the nitroglycerin. It is thought that a can had somehow been dropped into the river and washed to the city, where the boat struck it. A big hole in the river bottom after the explosion made this theory very plausible.

These men are ostracized just about as much as they ostracize other people for their own safety. When on their trips their lives hang on the mere possibility of their being able to keep their boats from being jarred. They are avoided as though they were the living reality of Asiatic cholera.—Pittsburg Leader.

The Dark Horse.

The "dark horse" probably originated with Disraeli, who, in "The Young Duke," refers to an exciting race as follows: "The first favorite was never heard of; the second was never seen after the distance post; all the ten-to-ones were in the rear, and a dark horse, which had never been thought of, rushed past the grand stand in sweeping triumph."—Galveston News.

Good Excuse.

"What! With your new trousers on!"

"Yes, papa. I didn't have time to take them off."—Philadelphia Times.

INDIAN SUMMER.

It Does Not Come Until the Bright Days of Mid-November.

Many persons, if they were asked about it, would say, without hesitation, that the last days of October are the real Indian summer. The term is vaguely employed, and at one time or another has been stretched to include almost all the autumnal weather with which we are blessed between the close of August and the 1st of December. Thanks to the almanac, we have got the idea very thoroughly into our heads that summer ends on the 31st of August, and when we find the skies still warm and grateful after that date, and the woods and fields still smiling to us with persuasive voices, we are a little perplexed as to what we ought to think about it and whether it is really autumn or summer come again. Thus we fall back upon the familiar term, "Indian summer," which seems a sufficiently appropriate designation, although there is no special justification for our selection of this uncertain phraseology.

It would be much more satisfactory if we should dismiss once and for all at once of the notion that summer proper ends with the month of August. There is nothing in the nature of things in the appearance of the natural world to indicate any radical change in the season at or about that date, and the increasing custom of lengthening the vacation until the 1st of September or in the mountains is pruct sufficient that we are gradually coming to appreciate the fact that summer really extends through September, to say the least. Let us say, for example, that summer ends only when the fronts of October have put a change upon the face of the year. Then will summer only be nearer the truth than the established conception of the season, but will enable us also to get a fairer conception of when Indian summer really begins. The lexicographer Worcester quotes Dr. Freeman as saying that the term Indian summer is used in New England to define a season of pleasant weather in the late autumn, and this notion of its date is brought out in various ways by most of the poets and versifiers who have discoursed upon this subject. And a very prolific source of verse it has been.

Here is one rhymer, for instance, who tells us that Indian summer comes in "the autumn's dotage, mid-November, when skies seductive woo the earth," and another who places it "when the year period when "the woodland foliage is gathered by the wild November blast," when "even the thick leaves upon the oaken bough are fallen to the lea." Samuel Longfellow says: "Summer is gone, but summer days return. The winds and frosts have stripped the woodlands bare." And a fourth poet tells us that the season comes "after October's biting frosts." From all of these quotations and many more like them, it is apparent that the Indian summer days are not the Indian summer, after all.—Providence Journal.

TRIP TO A FIXED STAR.

Would Be a Long Journey Even With Transportation Facilities.

There is a perpetual fascination about the stars and the mysterious distances at which they lie from one another and from us. To demonstrate the vast distance of Centauri from the earth, a French scientist gives the following illustration in Answers: "We shall suppose that some wealthy directors, for want of outlet for their overflowing capital, decide to build a railway to Centauri. We shall neglect for the present the engineering difficulties—a mere detail—and suppose them overcome and the railway open for traffic. We shall go further and suppose that the directors have found the construction of such a railway to have been peculiarly easy, and that the proprietors of interstellar space had not been exorbitant in their terms for right of way.

"Trains, with a view to encourage traffic, the directors had made the fare exceedingly moderate—viz, first class a 1 penny per mile. Having built the station of these facilities, a gentleman, by way of providing himself with small change for the journey, buys up the national debt of Britain and a few other countries, and, presenting himself at the office, demands a first class single fare to Centauri.

"For this he tenders in payment the scrip of the British national debt, which just covers the cost of his ticket, but at this time the national debt upon little wars has been run up to £1,100,000,000.

"Having taken his seat, it occurs to him to ask:

"'At what rate do you travel?'

"'Sixty miles an hour, sir, including stoppages,' is the answer.

"'Then how much each Centauri?'

"'In 48,663,000 years, sir!'"

Misplaced Sympathy.

Under a sprawling elm near the reptile house, in the Zoological gardens, there is a nameless grave. A simple little rounded mound of earth, with no stone to mark it, but caressed by the soft tendrils of clinging vine and the sunshine and the foot of the forest Titan. It has been there many years—so many years that none of the keepers now employed about the gardens remember when the mound was first there. Thousands of curious people have strolled unbeeding by the little grave, and not one has ever thought to shed a tear. Yes, there was one. He was a tall, slender young man, with a soulful and melancholy eye. He found the little grave, and he leaned against the slender bole of the tall elm and fell to musing sadly. Superintendent Brown, happening along, called to the man that he was trespassing on forbidden ground. "Pardon me," said the sympathetic visitor. "I forgot myself in the sorrowful contemplation of this humble grave. Tell me, sir, who is buried here?" "Oh," said Mr. Brown, "that's the grave of a Skye terrier, whose mistress, an eccentric old lady, requested permission to bury him here many years ago."—Philadelphia Record.

The Lay of a Bachelor.

A bachelor old and cranky was sitting alone in his room. His cosy with the coal were aching, and his face was o'erspread with gloom. No little one's shouts to disturb him from his woes the house was in. In fact, from cellar to attic 'twas as still as still could be. No medical aid was lacking. His servants answered his ring, respectfully heard his orders and supplied him with everything. But still there was something wanting, which he could not commander. The kindly words of compassion, the touch of a gentle hand. And he said as his brow grew darker and he rang for the hireling nurse: "Well, marriage may be a failure, but this is a jolly sight worse."—London Standard.

PRESIDENT SEE AGAIN.

He is Selected to Preside Over the New Common Council.

CIDER JOINTS MUST CLOSE SUNDAYS

The Daily Press' Efforts to Rid the City of the Inebriating Incubators Recognized by Councilman Dumont Who Introduces an Ordinance to Prohibit the Sale of Cider on Sunday—Two Committees Abolished and the Work Put in Other Committees—Makeup of the New Committees—A Veto From the Mayor—Other Business in Detail.

When City Clerk James T. MacMurray called the City Council for 1896 to order last Monday every member was in his seat as follows: Councilmen Barrows, Dumont, Fisk, Frost, Ginna, Moore, See, Stebbins, Serrell, Tolles and Westphal.

The first order of business was the election of a president. Wm. G. E. See was the unanimous choice of the members and after Stenographer Geo. B. Wean cast the ballot for him he was escorted to the chair by Councilmen Dumont and Westphal.

President See responded by saying: "I appreciate the honor you have conferred upon me. This is the third term I have been elected to preside over this body and the relations have been very cordial and I hope they may continue. I thank you for the honor."

The election of W. V. Mundy as janitor followed, after which Mr. Fisk made a motion that The Daily Press and News be made the official papers for 1896. It was adopted.

Mr. Fisk offered the rules of 1895 as the rules for 1896, with the following corrections: That the Police and Public Lights committee be made Police committee and that the Printing and Stationery committee be struck out entirely, also that the reading of the title of an ordinance be sufficient instead of the reading of the whole ordinance after the first reading. Mr. Fisk then gave notice that at the next meeting he would offer a resolution that the rules for 1895 be adopted as the rules for 1896. President See then announced the following committees for 1896:

Alms—Ginna, Frost, Stebbins.

Auditing—Westphal, Barrows, Moore.

Fire and Buildings—Stebbins, Westphal, Fisk.

Finance—Dumont, Serrell, Barrows.

Laws and Ordinances—Serrell, Stebbins, Tolles.

Lights and Trees—Tolles, Moore, Serrell.

License—Moore, Dumont, Westphal.

Police—Barrows, Fisk, Ginna.

Streets—Fisk, Tolles, Frost.

Water and Sewers—Frost, Ginna, Dumont.

M. Honan & Sons communicated with the Council in regard to the recent damage to the sewer pipes in the eastern part of the city by explosion. They did not consider it was their fault and stated that they were not willing to be responsible. The matter was laid on the table until later in the evening when the committee on sewers was elected. It was then referred to them.

Amos Moffet and George R. Rockafellow, constables, presented their bonds. They were referred to the Finance Committee and later Mr. Dumont made a motion that they be received and recorded. Vincent W. Nash and W. R Colington were sureties for the former; Henry Lieke and George W. Cole for the latter. Both were for $1,000.

A petition from John Vetterlein asking for the privilege of making alterations and extensions and moving his machine shop from Exchange alley to East Front street, opposite Marsh, Ayers & Co., was referred to the Fire, Building and Street Committees.

At this point the Mayor's message was read. On Mr. Fisk's motion a copy will be furnished to each of the members of the Council, and such suggestion made will be referred to the proper committee for consideration.

The ordidance relating to the licensing of inns and taverns was returned without the Mayor's approval to the Council. It substance the Mayor's opinion on the subject was as follows:

The original ordinance provides that all applications for a license to sell spirituous and fermented liquors shall be signed by the owner of the place proposed for license, (if the applicant be not the owner,) stating that the applicant is known to him to be of good repute for honesty and temperance. The purpose of the amendatory ordinance is to exempt from this requirement an applicant having a lease for a term of ten years or more, provided the owner had knowledge when he made the lease that the tenant intended to use the premises for the purpose of selling spirituous and fermented liquors. I can see no good reason for the exemption of an applicant having a lease for ten years, that does not apply with equal force to an applicant having a lease for three or five years, or for any term longer than one year. The object of the requirement in the original ordinance is a wise one. It fixes upon the owner of the licensed premises, to a degree, responsibility with reference to the orderly character of the place. He alone, of all the signers to the applicant's certificate, has a personal interest, which would prompt him to withhold his signature, if the place should become disorderly. If it is wise to make any discrimination, it would seem better to exempt the applicant with a short lease than one with a long lease, for the reason that the longer the lease the greater the risk of a change taking place in the character of the licensed premises.

In my judgment the only consistent way to accomplish the purpose of this amendatory ordinance, which is apparently made to meet a special case, is to provide that every applicant having a lease for a longer term than one year, having once secured the signature of the owner to his application, shall not be required to again obtain it during the term of his lease. This would be putting all applicants on an equal footing—whether it would be considered wise or not, is an open question. My judgment is that it would not.

Mr. Fisk moved that the matter be received and placed on the minutes. It was so ordered.

The Board of Engineers, through Chief T. O. Doane, recommended that B. F. Moore, of No. 2 company, be transferred to the exempt roll, and that N. H. Guttman be dropped from the department for non-attendance at fires. The recommendations were adopted.

J. F. Parker, of 103 Grove street, and others communicated with the Council asking that hacks, express wagons and other heavy public conveyances, that are usually found on North avenue, near the station, be kept twenty feet from the curb to allow private carriages some privileges. It was referred to the police committee.

On Mr. Fisk's motion, Councilmen Frost, Ginna and Dumont were elected a committee on sewers.

A petition from Assessor Hubbard was referred to the finance committee for consideration.

The following petitions for electric lights were referred to the lights and trees committee: Charles Timpson, Carleton avenue; Philip Cottrell, East Third street; D. F. Stewart, John street; C. G. Ross, La Grande avenue.

The persistent efforts of The Daily Press to rid Plainfield of an abominable nuisance reaped a rich reward last evening when Councilman Dumont offered an ordinance, which was passed on first and second readings, ordered engrossed and duly advertised, that cider in no shape, form or manner shall be sold on Sundays under a penalty of $20 for each and every offense.

This news will be enthusiastically received by thousands of Plainfielders.

A petition from L. L. Croom, of 519 East Sixth street, and others, asked Council to transfer Policeman J. A. Saunders from night duty to day duty. It was referred to the Police Board.

Mr. Fisk moved that the committee on Laws and Ordinances have the laws and ordinances printed all together, up to date. It was so ordered as was also another motion that the clerk be authorized to secure stationery, etc, for the several committees.

Another motion by Mr. Fisk provided that all reports of city officers including the treasurer's for 1893, '94 and '95, and rules of order be prepared and printed in pamphlet form, the City Clerk first securing bids on the work for 300 copies. It was so ordered.

Mr. Dumont stated that last November a city collector had been elected and that the present incumbent would not surrender, and in consequence he moved that when council adjourn it be to meet Monday evening, January 13th. It was so ordered and council adjourned.

BOARD OF EDUCATION

Reorganize For the New Year With the Same Officials.

ROUTINE BUSINESS TRANSACTED.

A Communication From Stephen A. Krom With Reference to Individual Drinking Cups For Each Pupil Causes Considerable Discussion—New Committees Appointed—Dr. Probasco Presents the Board With a Set of Books.

The first meeting of the Board of Education for 1896 held Monday evening in the High School. Messrs. Probasco, Lovell, Lounsbury, Abbott and subsequently Mr. Jenkins, were present. The first business was the organization of the board for the new year. Dr. Probasco was nominated by Mr. Lovell as president of the board and was unanimously elected. Mr. Lovell nominated Mr. Lounsbury as permanent secretary and he was elected unanimously.

The minutes of the last regular meeting and those of the adjourned meeting were read and approved. A long list of approved bills was then read by the secretary and all were ordered paid. Another batch of several bills was then read and ordered paid if found correct. A bill from the city was then read for the board's share of the salary of the tax assesors and tax collector which amounted to $820.93. It was ordered paid. A notice from the City National Bank was read stating that the rent on the safe deposit vault had been paid up partially through November. The committee was given power to settle with the bank as the new safe will now be used instead. It was moved and carried that the note of the City National Bank, which comes due in a short time, be ordered paid.

The report of City Treasurer told that he had $661.81 to the credit of the Board, having received it from B. Holmes, county superintendent, for the support of public schools. City Collector Johnson's report was read, showing that in the last year $25,180.16 had been collected, which added to the interest of $83.13, made the amount deposited to the credit of the Board, $25,333.29.

A letter was next read from Dr. Probasco in which he presented the Board with a set of the Century Dictionary and Encyclopedia and a stand for it. After the members had inspected and admired the gift, on motion of Mr. Lovell, a vote of thanks was given Dr. Probasco.

Mr. Lounsbury read the report of the building committee. The report stated that the Washington School had been equipped with electric lights at a cost of $80.30. The safe was purchased as was also the letter file. Repairs had been made to the various school building during the last month, principally to the heating apparatus. The gun closet had been constructed on the first floor of the High School building at an expense of $18. Sewer connections had been made, as far as possible, at all the schools. The committee recommended a definite sanitary plan for use in the various schools. Such a plan should include a thorough remodeling of the ventilation of the various closets, the same, at present, being quite imperfect.

The attention of the Board was called to the floor of the Washington building which is in a deplorable condition, while the heating apparatus needs attention. The recommendation was that the work be done during the summer vacation.

A letter from the Board of Health was next read saying that they referred a communication to the Board of Education without action. The communication referred to was from Stphpen J. Krom asking the Board of Health to adopt the same rules as have been adopted by the New York Board of Health. They provided that a covered pitcher should be placed in each class room and that each pupil should have an individual cup. The use of slates, dirty pencils and sponges among the pupils should be discontinued. Pencils and penholders should be kept in a box especially for that purpose. The property of children suffering with contagious diseases should be thoroughly disinfected or destroyed.

Mr. Loundsbury thought it very kind of the Board of Health to send the communication, but was of the opinion that any action in that direction came under the work of the Board of Health. Dr. Jenkins said that there was very little danger of transmitting disease in the present methods used.

Mr. Lovell remarked that in his opinion most of the rules had been already adopted and he favored all except the first part regarding individual cups. Mr. Abbott said that Mr. Lovell's remarks voiced his sentiments also. Dr. Probasco thought that the water standing in the same room with the scholars would become contaminated and favored the present method of running water. He said the school took all the precautions necessary. Mr. Lovell then moved that the secretary reply to the Board of Health, thanking them for sending Krom's communication. It was carried.

President Probasco announced the election of clerk as the next business to be transacted. On motion of Mr. Lounsbury, F. B. Clark was elected clerk at a salary of $400 a year.

Mr. Lounsbury next brought up the question of purchasing a letter press. He read a letter from a Mr. Coles, of Rahway, offering a new one for $1. The question was referred to the committee with power.

The following committees were then announced by President Probasco:

Fuel, Messrs. Jenkins, Lovell and Abbott; finance, Messrs. Lovell, Jenkins and Lounsbury; building, Messrs. Lounsbury, Probasco and Lovell; teachers and text books, Messrs. Probasco, Jenkins and Abbott; books, stationery and supplies, Messrs. Abbott, Lounsbury and Probasco.

The board then went into executive session.

A SHORT CUT TO DEATH.

A SWEDE'S FATAL WALK ON THE TRACKS TO SAVE A FEW STEPS.

John Svansen Struck by a Jersey Central Train Between Berckman and Richmond Streets—No Relatives Here

After so many accidents resulting from trespassing on the railroad, it would seem that more care would be taken, but last Tuesday another man walked down the track and was struck by a passing coal train.

John Svansen and Christian Ramussaen were two Swedes in the employ of H. C. N. Johnston the Berckman street stone dealer. Svansen drove one of the stone wagons. They have been sleeping in Johnston's office on the corner of South avenue and Berckman street, and taking their meals at McVey's restaurant on North avenue. Last evening they went to dinner as usual and shortly before 6:30 o'clock the two men started for the office. When they reached Watchung avenue Ramussaen tried to persuade his comrade to walk up to Fifth street and go that route but Svansen would not. He has been in the habit of walking up tracks every day to and from his meals. He said that the railroad was the shortest, so the two men separated and each went his way.

Peter Miller, the night track walker, was walking along the west bound freight track when he heard a whistle in the rear. He stepped to one side and looked behind him in time to see another man walking about thirty feet away while an east bound coal train was rapidly approaching. Miller yelled a warning at the unconscious man but he paid no heed and the next instant the engine struck him, killing him instantly. The accident occured between Richmond and Berckman streets. Miller immediately notified Policeman McCue and they examined the body, which the officer recognized as that of John Svansen.

Undertaker Casey was notified and the body was placed in his morgue to await the coming of the coroner.

The deceased came here from Sweden several years ago where his parents are now living. He was unmarried and was not known to have any relatives in this vicinity.

STUDY OF A NOTED WOMAN.

Life of Lucretia Mott Considered in Its Different Phases.

The Plainfield Branch Alliance of Unitarian and other Liberal Christian Women met Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the church, and enjoyed a study of the life of Lucretia Mott, a noted liberal woman. Mrs. Hobart Clark presided and introduced the subject, after which Miss Haviland read a paper, prepared by herself, on the life and work of Mrs. Mott. She was born in 1793 at Nantucket, and was a noted Friend. Her early life was spent in preparation for one of great usefulness in the abolition of slavery. She was devoted to religion and all its branches, and this coupled with a strong mind and body, made her a power of good. As a speaker she was famous all over the land, having addressed large audiences in all the principal cities. Her simplicity in discoursing was a marked feature, making them doubly interesting. In her home life she was also a hard worker and an early riser, and found many opportunities to teach the principles so dear to her heart.

She thoroughly advocated non-sectarianism, and often remarked that she only wore her Quarker bonnet because it was a habit of long standing. In the year 1840 she and Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton were sent as delegates from the American Anti Slavery Society to the World's Anti-Slavery Society Congress in England, and when they arrived the members of the Convention refused to let them take a seat because they were women. Wm. Lloyd Garrison, who was present as a delegate, immediately refused to take his seat unless they too were allowed, and he didn't.

Mrs. Mott died November 1880, at the age of 88. Her last public appearance was when she was 86 years of age, and her mind was exceedingly clear and strong for one of her years.

Following the reading of the paper, a general discussion of the subject by the members was enjoyed. Among those who had personal knowledge of Mrs Mott, were Mrs. Kimball, Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Dr. Rushmore, Mrs. Ryder and Mrs. Hussy. They gave bits of experience that had endeared them to this remarkable woman. At the close a vote of thanks was given Miss Haviland for her very interesting and valuable paper.

Following the above meeting the executive committee remained for a short conference to discuss business pertaining to their work.

A SCHOOL WAY UPTOWN.

BOARD OF EDUCATION FIND IT NECESSARY TO ERECT A NEW BUILDING.

The Property on Which the New Building is to be Located is on Berckman Street Near Second Street—The Estimated Cost.

The rapid growth of the Netherwood section of this city the last few years has so overcrowded the facilities of the Bryant School that the Board of Education have for sometime been at a loss to know how to provide accommodations for the children attending that school. One class was transferred from the Bryant School to the Wadsworth building, but still there was not enough room in the former building and there was great hindrance in properly instructing the scholars. The board finally decided that the only policy to pursue would be to erect a new school building in the Netherwood district and to that end Messrs. Lounsbury and Probasco were appointed a committee to investigate the matter. The following is their report:

TO THE BOARD OF EDUCATION:

Gentlemen:—Your Committee on Buildings and Repairs beg leave to make special report as follows:

In conformity with instruction from the Board negotiations were opened for the purchase of the plot of land facingon Berckman street, and running from Second street to Midway avenue, which negotiations resulted in the purchase of the property on behalf of the Board for the sum of thirty-three hundred and fifty dollars.

The property has a frontage on Berckman street of 322 feet with 120 feet on Second street, and 144 feet on Midway avenue. The level of the property is slightly above the grade of the street, insuring perfect drainage, and in every respect the site is an ideal one for a school, being dry, smart and sufficiently large to insure unobstructed light and ample play grounds for the pupils.

The First ward of the city has long felt the need of a suitable school building, and we feel that the Board has been most fortunate in securing such a desirable site in that section, without being compelled to go to the extreme east end of the ward, which, while it would have proved an accommodation to the few living in that neighborhood, would have compelled the majority of the pupils to walk long distances.

While the Board has spent considerable time in determining the question of a site, we now feel that it has been well settled, and should proceed with as little delay as possible to take up the question of the erection of a suitable building, as it is apparent that additional room will be required to properly accommodate the increase which is sure to occur in the fall of 1896. In fact, without any such increase additional room ought to be obtained as the district is now so arranged as to (or rather so disarranged,) as to prove very inconvenient to a large number of pupils, to say nothing of the over-crowding in the various buildings.

We have been enabled to keep pace with the increase in attendance only by utilizing the Wadsworth building, by converting the assembly room of the Stillman building into a study room, and we are now at the end of our resources as far as present buildings are concerned.

In view of the fact that it is the purpose of the Board to erect upon the site in question a primary school of say eight rooms, we feel that by giving the matter early attention, such a building could be completed and equipped and ready for use at the beginning of the fall term, and therefore recommend that the Board take such action as may seem necessary to accomplish this result.

The following figures taken from our reports will serve to illustrate the necessity for the action of the Board:

Total enrollment for year 1891, 1,691.
" " " 1893, 1,849. increase
158 or 9 1-10 per cent.
Total enrollment for year 1895, 2,165. increase
317 or 17 1-4 per cent.

Of the above last mentioned increase, 120 were in the Bryant district, and these were provided for by transferring a large number to other buildings.

Respectfully submitted,
Fred Lounsbury, ch.,
J. B. Probasco.

It is calculated to erect a two-story building on the property purchased, with four rooms on the first floor and the same number on the second, but to use only the first floor until the increase demands that the whole building be used. To make the expense as small as possible the second floor will not be finished until occasion demands.

Suing for $5,000 Damages.

The time of the Union County Court yesterday was taken up with the trial, before Judge VanSyckel, of the suit of Mary C. Whaley, of Lorraine, against the Central Railroad Company for $5,000 damages for injuries received by being struck by a train at Lorraine nearly a year ago. The plaintiff has been lame ever since, and her physician says the injuries are permanent. The case occupied all day, and resulted in a non-suit.

Many merchants are well aware that their customers are their best friends and take pleasure in supplying them with the best goods obtainable. As an instance we mention Perry & Cameron, prominent druggists of Flushing, Michigan. They say: "We have no hesitation in recommending Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to our customers, as it is the best cough medicine we have ever sold, and always gives satisfaction." ANGRY PASSIONS AROSE.

RASH ACT OF A STUDENT TOWARDS A YOUNG FRIEND.

He Took Offense at Some Fancied Insult and Demanded That His Honor Be Avenged With Weapons.

The office of a certain Plainfield lawyer and inmates were stirred to the highest pitch of excitement a day or two ago. The cause of it was the following letter which was received:

To Mr.——,

Sir: On a certain Sunday (the Sunday before last) you cast a heavy insult upon me by running away. This insult, sir, can only be washed out in blood. I therefore request a meeting in a secluded spot which you may, yourself, select, and also the time and weapons (pistols preferred.) As to seconds, I refer you to ——. Trusting to hear from you shortly, I am,

Yours faithfully.

The names, of course, were given. The letter was addressed to a well known law student in this city. The second mentioned was a prominent business man and the signature was that of a young Englishman who is studying at one of Plainfield's educational institutions.

The young man who received the formidable communication was rather surprised, to say the least. He did not recollect insulting anybody, but he determined to prepare for the worst. He asked the advice of friends, some of whom suggested as weapons swords at twenty paces, while others thought a shotgun the best choice. The would-be lawyer, accompanied by a friend, then interviewed the second of the challenger. He knew nothing about the matter and calmed the excited spirits of the challenged young man by suggesting that it might be a practical joke. Soon after, the principal in the affair appeared in the law office and tried to explain that it was all a joke. The other young man took out his revenge in reading the statute on duels and challenges to the practical joker.

The little affair might have proved quite serious to the writer of the letter had the other taken offense at it and turned the challenge over to the officers of the law. The least the joker should have done was to send the law student a written apology.

IT WAS A NATIVE AFRICAN.

So Says Archæologist Fountain After Examining the Skull.

One of the skulls which were unearthed by Contractor Uhdal and his men in the opening of Stelle avenue last November, was examined Tuesday by George H. Fountain, Plainfield's archæologist, at The Daily Press office. After a careful inspection of the skull, Mr. Fountain declared it to have belonged to a native African. The depressions on the skull, which had been thought by some to have been the result of a blow, were, he said, perfectly natural. The marks on the upper portion of the skull and the jaw showed it to be an adult. The nose was African and the thickness corresponded to the same idea. It was, he concluded, the skull of a very low type of human being.

Mr. Fountain's testimony would substantiate the theory that a slave burying-ground had once existed where the excavations were made.

Telephone Changes.

The following changes have been made in the local telephone system relative to the subscribers: The pay station number at Leggett's drug store, Y. M. C. A. building, has been changed to 110, and the following subscribers have had their instruments changed from the old style to the metallic circuit instrument: J. T. Clawson. Dr. Probasco, East Front street; Dr. Murray, Watchung avenue, and T. B. Penton, Jr., Rockview Terrace.

The first bottle of it so far relieved me that I was enabled to attend to my work, and the second bottle effected a cure." BE FAITHFUL LIKE CALEB ADVICE TO CHRISTIANS BY REV. CORNELIUS SCHENCK LAST NIGHT.

The Matter With Most People is That They Will Not Leave the Tables of Publicans—Second of Revival Meetings.

The interest in the evangelistic meetings does not show any sign of abatement. On the contrary there was a larger attendance last Tuesday than on Monday night. Every seat in the lower floor of the First M. E. church was filled, while there were very few empty ones in the gallery. The chorus choir numbered about the same as on Monday night, or perhaps a trifle more. The meeting opened promptly at 7:15 with the song service led by Horace J. Martin. Whitfield Frazee assisted in the music with his cornet. A prayer by Rev. W. C. O'Donnell followed the singing, and then Rev. Cornelius Schenck read a selection from the ninth chapter of Matthew. He took for his text the words "Follow Me" from that chapter.

He gave the different instances in which that command was given by the Lord Jesus. He spoke about the way in which Matthew obeyed the command and said that it showed the strength of the personality of Christ and that, if there was hope for the publican, there is hope for anybody. The matter, he said, with the people today is that they will not completely cave the tables of the publicans. He next spoke of the call of the four fishermen. Andrew, Simeon Peter, John, James, and said, the great Captain is calling all those in the audience to follow him. It is a call to all who have not confessed him and it is also a call to all disciples of Jesus to follow him more strictly. You should follow Him fully, wholly, and faithfully like Caleb and not afar off. It is impossible for one who follows closely to fall. The call is an appeal to your sense of right, it is your duty to follow Christ If we have not obeyed the call before let us do it now.

After a prayer by Rev. W. R. Richards, D. D., and a hymn the regular meeting was over but the majority of the audience remained to the after-meeting. Rev. Dr. Richards, acted as leader in the after-meeting. There were several short prayers followed by a number of requests for prayer. Rev. Dr. Yerkes made a prayer carrying the requests in it. The thought of the meeting was personal effort, to bring another to the meetings not to depend on the daily papers to invite others but to bring them personally.

Rev. Mr. Randolph will preach at this evening's meeting.

A GORGEOUS REPAST.

The Annual Dinner of the Megantic Club at Boston.

The dinner of the Megantic Club at Boston on Saturday evening was a most gorgeous entertainment, some 250 guests being present at the Copley Square Hotel. Among them were Lieut-Gov. Wolcott, the Mayor of Boston, and many other distinguished gentlemen. The entertainment was varied and entirely novel. Sweet music was discoursed and various novel features interspersed through the evening, including minstrel songs, recitations and cornet solos. The most novel, however, was an immense "game pie," borne on the shoulders of four men clad in white, preceded by four men, clad in similar garb, with torches. The pie was placed on the table in front of the Lieutenant-Governor. The top being removed, out popped a beautiful little girl clad in fairy costume, tinsel wings, etc. At the same time out flew a dozen or more of white doves. The little fairy presented to the Lieutenant-Governor an elegant basket of flowers in fitting words. The Lieutenant-Governor's response was most happy and appropriate. Great numbers of Boston's fair daughters fringed the banquet hall, altogether making a magnificent entertainment.

Messrs. R. M. Stelle, William K. McClure and J. E. Martine were present from this city. William K. McClure was a member of the entertainment committee.

For a pain in the chest a piece of flannel dampened with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of the pain, and another on the back between the shoulders, will afford prompt relief. This is specially valuable in cases where the pain is caused by a cold and there is a tendency toward pneumonia. For sale at Reynold's pharmacy, Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, manager.

One Minute Cough Cure is rightly named. It affords instant relief from suffering when afflicted with a severe cough or cold. It acts on the throat, bronchial tubes, and lungs and never fails to give immediate relief. L. W. Randolph, 143 W. Front St.

BUSINESS MEN HERE.

SEMI-ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE RETAIL GROCERS ASSOCIATION.

An Address of Welcome by Mayor Gilbert, Which Teemed With Bright Thoughts and Practical Observations.

Plainfield was the centre of a gathering of live business men Wednesday as the delegates for the seventeenth semi-annual convention of the Retail Merchants Association of New Jersey assembled in this city. Last evening the first installment came and since then they have been pouring into the city until it is expected that one hundred and fifty out of town merchants are assembled here at the head quarters of the association in the Grocer's Association rooms on the second floor of the Babcock building, and here the delegates registered and waited until the association was called to order. They were looked after by the reception committee which consisted of Messrs. George W. Rockafellow, chairman; J. M. Dunn, B. D. Newell, H. A. Weber, F. Westphal, Edward White, Garrett Q. Packer, John A. Thickstun, E. H. Holmes, L. B. Woolston, J. W. VanSickle, Frank W. Jones and George W. Eddy.

Shortly after 10 o'clock the delegates made their way to the Odd Fellow's Hall on the top floor, where at 10:30, ex-Mayor James P. Sullivan, of Middletown, president of the state association called the meeting to order. He introduced Mayor Gilbert, who welcomed the Association to this city.

"It is my duty," said the Mayor, "and a very agreeable duty too, to extend to you the freedom of this city. I want my welcome to be charged with sincerity and friendship. We throw open wide the gates of Plainfield to you and, as wide as we open them, we throw open our hearts. We want you to see everything that we have in our beautiful city. We know what it is to go to an unknown city and be left to yourself without entertainmebt or pleasure, so we want to protect you from any feeling of homesickness and we want to do it right royally Plainfield is a very old settlement—it dates back of Colonial times. Every spot of ground on which we stand has felt the tread of Revolutionary heroes. Our people are an enterprising people. You can see it shrewd look in their faces and you want to look out for them if they take you about the city today, especially if they offer you any special bargains. Our ancestors, so the historians tell us, were particularly fond of applejack. The Plainfield man gets his shrewdness from the Scotch, his solidity and carefulness from the Quakers, and, perhaps, he gets his dash from the appiejack. But when it comes to beauty and perfect physical proportions, I don't believe that comes from appiejack, but rather from cold water. Plainfield has cold water, pure as can be, that lies fifty feet below the ground, a perfect wealth of it. That is the fountain from which Plainfield draws its great supply of health. Plainfield is one of the healthiest places in New Jersey. You will see many doctor shops and drug stores, but they may be accounted for in that we believe that plenty of prevention is worth lots of cure."

Mayor Gilbert then spoke of the beautiful buildings and miles of residences to be seen in the city and said, that more than anything else, they marked the prosperity of Plainfield.

"We have enterprising newspapers here who are run by people who have their own ideas, especially in regard to politics. They contribute to and reflect the growth and prosperity of this city."

He next referred to the object of the meeting and the association itself and spoke of the needs of the business man and the changes over the past.

He must not be afraid to advertise freely, he must be popular with the people, he must deal in the best of wares and be ready to meet his obligations, and finally learn to discriminate between the good and bad buyers. To be popular he must gain confidence of the people and be obliging in little things as well as great. On these things depend his success.

The Mayor concluded with a little outline of what was to be done for the guests and in again welcoming them to Plainfield.

President Sullivan replied in a few words, well suited to the occasion and then the convention settled down to business.

Secretary J. E. Hendrie, of Paterson, read the call after which the roll call was held and twelve out of the eighteen associations in the state replied. Delegates were present from the following associations: Arlington, Harrison and Kearney, Hudson county.

Tracked For Robbers.

Two borough sporting men went rabbit hunting a few days ago near the Passaic river and tied their horse along the roadway near the river. Soon afterward they started a rabbit and followed it across the fields, through the woods, until they were lost completely. The night previous a store was robbed at Pluckamin, and a number of the farmers were out hunting for the robbers. In searching about the woods they came across the footprints of the borough young men, and followed them until they found them. An attempt was made to arrest the North Plainfielders. The latter had great difficulty in explaining matters and finally had to ask the farmers to assist them in finding their horse and wagon. It was found and they were glad to get home.

MacClymont to Be the Leader.

At the close of the Choral Society rehearsal Monday evening the promoters of the new glee club met and decided to hold the next meeting this evening at W. E. MacClymont's studio. Mr. MacClymont has consented to fill the position of director and that is enough to assure the success of the club.

THE PARIS SUNDAY.

A DAY OF REST OR RECREATION FOR NEARLY ALL THE PEOPLE.

The Well to Do Stay at Home, but the Masses Are Gay and Festive—Especial Arrangements For Their Entertainment and Pleasure.

If the day be fine—a bright sun in winter and cool breezes in summer—Paris presents the most beautiful exterior of any capital in the world. There are smooth paved roadways, full of cheap cabs and mostly laid sidewalks, free from those treacherous unevennesses, the bane of the pedestrian in American cities, and, to cap all, those Paris streets are perhaps even a little cleaner than in Manhattan thoroughfare since Colonel Waring took up his good work. Then there are well trimmed lawns in the many public gardens, numerous flower beds blooming in every season, graceful fountains ever playing, innumerable statues and groups of sculpture by past masters in the plastic art, comfortable benches scattered along miles of avenues and scores of more comfortable chairs under the trees of the broader streets and squares, countless restaurants and cafes, with their immaculate tables invitingly installed on the broad sidewalks, and, lastly, the famous boulevards—the boulevards, from the Madeleine to the Montmartre—the like of which, for an indescribable something, are to be found neither in London nor in any American city, overflowing, especially on Sunday, with the well dressed crowds of men, women and children in gala dress.

But a description of the attractions of Paris on Sunday would be quite beyond pleteness without some mention of the charms and entertainments in its immediate vicinity. Here belong the horse races, offered in great variety nearly all the year around, the boating parties on the suburban tracks; the Seine boats, bearing their happy human freight to the Vincennes wood in one direction and to the superb alleys of St. Cloud in the other; the neighboring town of Sceaux, with its garden dedicated to Robinson Crusoe and Friday and its dining tables perched in the most easily accessible branches of towering chestnut trees; St. Denis, with its tombs, and Versailles, with its picture galleries, and still farther away, but one of the favorite Meccas of the more well to do Parisian Sunday sightseers, Fontainebleau, with its historic apartments and its grand forest.

Such are some of the more inviting aspects of external and exterior Paris on a propitious Sunday. Now a word about a few of the internal, the within doors attractiveness of this ever captivating city.

The magnificent Louvre, with its immense collections of paintings, sculpture, antiquities, ethnological and naval museums, is open free every day in the week, year in and year out, to the delighted crowds who throng its galleries from morning till night. The same is true of the Cluny, the fine military museums at the Hotel des Invalides, of the Trocadero ethnological and architectural collections, of the Orleans collection of paintings, chiefly of the modern painting and sculpture at the Luxembourg, of the Canavalet museum so rich in souvenirs of the history of Paris, and scores of half dozen or more other museums, collections and exhibitions of greater or less importance. It is on Monday that the Louvre and Cluny are closed for the weekly cleaning and sweeping, not on Sunday, when all the population is free and can visit them.

The theaters—the Francais and the Odeon—and the Opera House are not only open throughout the year, winter and summer, but never dream of closing their doors on a Sunday. It is the only day that day the Francais and the Odeon, and, as a rule, all the Paris playhouses offer two performances, afternoon and evening, when the prices of admission are most popular as possible and the prices of admission reduced. In a word, the managers seem to vie with one another in an effort to entertain the public, a striking instance of the democratic spirit which pervades the Paris Sunday.

Furthermore, the best musical concerts occur on this day of rest. There is one on day, too, that the military bands perform in the parks. When the great annual picture exhibitions are in progress, the price of admission is reduced to the figure of the theaters on Sunday, and at the old salon no charge whatsoever is made in the morning, when one may see lines of people, four or five deep and a block long, filing in through the gates in order to feast their eyes on the best work of the leading artists of the country.

Now, how do the people of Paris use these privileges of a French Sunday? In answering this question we may separate the population into two grand divisions. The leisure class, that have amused themselves during the week, generally remain at home on Sunday, for if they go out they complain of finding the streets too crowded, the cabs taken and the theaters full. Speaking generally, it is the masses who take the people of Paris on Sunday, and they evidently get so much enjoyment out of it and must be so much benefited by the esthetic surroundings that even a Puritan would have to admit that some good thing can come out of Nazareth.

The big stores and most of the small ones do no business on this first day of the week, so that the army of clerks is free. Many of the great public administrations, such as the post and telegraph offices, close early Sunday afternoon and add a large contingent to those bent on out and indoor amusements. The mechanics and vast majority of the day laborers, the shop girls and home servants, the university students, probably from 15,000 to 20,000 in number; the cadets from the various government schools, in jaunty uniforms, and the whole host of Paris children, all, in their way, give vivacity and variety to the joyous scene.

M. Leon Say and several other philanthropists have founded an organization whose aim is to secure the cessation of all labor on Sunday, and they are meeting with considerable success. The number of the "Sunday Unemployed" is consequently ever on the increase in Paris, so that a Parisian Sunday is continually growing in popularity and universality.—Paris Cor. New York Independent.

THE TINDER BOX.

A Description of the Old Time Contrivances For Making Fire.

Does any one of my readers know where a tinder box can be seen, or has one of them any idea what it is like? Fortunately I came upon a description of it in the recently published accounts of the lifetime of John Hollingshead. "The tinder box was the toy of my childhood." It was certainly not a "toy" in my time. It was a very much the reverse—an absolute necessity. I will allow, however, Mr. Hollingshead still to speak: "Without it there would have been no light or fire; without them were, after a time, light and fire and a certain amount of safety. No child could burn down a house or burn itself to a cinder with a tinder box." It was, in fact, a task beyond the reach of most children to strike a light. First of all, the rags had to be got and burned into tinder. "This tinder was put into a large round tin box, big enough for a pie dish. Then a piece of jagged flint had to be got, and a thing called 'a steel,' which might have been the remains of an old horseshoe, had to be purchased; the flint, struck edgeway on the steel, sent sparks into the tinder, which smoldered and prepared itself for the matches.

"The matches were a formidable bundle of thin strips of wood, diamond pointed at the ends and dipped in brimstone. They suggested Guido Fawkes and the cellars of the old houses of parliament, and the 'Guys' in the streets, carried in chairs by boys, were represented a proper Protestant horror of all Roman Catholics." It is now half a century since I have seen such a thing. It is possible that in the country it still exists. With the picturesque character of the French peasant and the heavy tax in France on matches it is more than probable that it might there be found. In London it is now an antiquity. Reference to the flint in this respect are frequent in Shakespeare, the best known being that in "Julius Cæsar," wherein Brutus tells Cassius that > Carries anger as the flint bears fire,

> Which, much enforced, shows a hasty spark
> And straight is cold again.

Other things, such as horn lanthorns, are at least uncommon. Snuffers were at one time in constant use and may be so now for aught I know to certain quarters. One thing at least I know—a friend of mine has taken to collecting them as curios.—Gentleman's Magazine.

GODFREY'S TANKARD.

A Seventeenth Century Relic of the Fire and Frozen Fair of London.

A curious historical relic was sold by auction recently in London. It is the large tankard of solid silver presented by King Charles II to Sir Edmund Berry Godfrey for his valuable services during the plague and the fire of London, for which he received the honor of knighthood in 1666. The tankard is of the old pint size, has a hinged cover and weighs nearly 36 ounces. Its front is engraved with the royal arms and the crest of the recipient, together with inscriptions in Latin and engravings of scenes connected with the fire, which are still in excellent preservation. On the reverse side is a similar design, carrying corpses to the dismal plague pit and that of the crowded blocks of houses surmounted by flames are very quaint and curious. Sir Edmund, who was born in 1621 at Sellings, in Kent, was a timber merchant, possessing wharfs at Dowgate city and at Charing Cross. He prospered, became justice of the peace for Westminster and member of parliament for Winchilsea. In history, as no reader of Macaulay and Green will need to be told, he is the most famous in connection with his mysterious murder, which was popularly attributed to the zeal with which he had suppressed the plot, unravelling the alleged popish plot. His body was found in a ditch near Primrose hill, face downward and penetrated by his own sword, under circumstances which precluded the idea of suicide or robbery.

The excitement caused by this still mysterious event is indicated by the fact that when the funeral procession left the city with great pomp and pageant, for the burial ground of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, it was preceded by 70 clergy and followed by upward of 1,000 persons of distinction.—Boston Herald.

A German Journalist's Queer Idea.

The following paragraphs are summarized from a recent issue of the Frankfurter Zeitung:

"The late Professor Pronde held that the succession to the English crown in line with the eldest child of the sovereign, not the eldest son; consequently that the heir to our gracious queen is not the Prince of Wales, but the Princess Frederick. The Empress Frederick is reported to have said that, should she succeed to the throne of England, she would make Prince Henry her heir. The emperor, who now also made acquainted with Professor Froude's discovery, intimated that if what was put forward were correct the entire English succession should go from eldest child to eldest child, which in this case would be himself, and that he certainly would not waive his right. GOT SEVENTY CENTS A WEEK

ALL THE JURY CONSIDERED MRS. WHITEHEAD'S SERVICE WORTH

Ex-Councilman Weber Sued for $1,560 But Will Only Pay $200 and Cost—The Right Sort of Advice From Mr. Marsh.

Considerable interest has been aroused by the suit of Mary E. Whitehead against Herman A. Weber, for wages as housekeeper during the last five years, the story of which was told in The Daily Press sometime ago.

Wednesday morning the case came up for a second trial at Elizabeth in the same court before Judge Van-Sickle and a second jury. The opening speech was made by Mr Swackhamer, and then two witnesses were sworn and examined before the noon recess. In the afternoon, the number of witnesses was increased to ten, after which the evidence of both sides was closed. At about 3:30 Mr. Marsh began his summing up for the defense, which occupied about forty minutes. Mr. Swackhamer then took the floor and made the final plea for the plaintiff. The hour for closing court interrupted the remarks, which were continued yesterday morning. The jury went out at about 11 o'clock and returned at about 4:30. They brough a verdict of $200 and costs for the plaintiff.

The bill sued for was 260 weeks services as housekeeper and nurse at $6 per week, total $1,560. The majority of the jury yesterday was in favor of the defendant, but finally compromised by allowing seventy-seven cents a week or $200 for the whole five years work.

Before the trial, Mr. Weber offered $150 in settlement, which was refused.

Mr. Marsh was asked whether he would apply for a new trial. "No," he said, "the verdict is about right. Mr. Weber the day before the trial, after his $150 offer was refused, wanted me to let him offer property worth $750 to settle the case, and I would not let him do it. I told him he might expect a small verdict against him, but I would guarantee it would not be over $500."

Mr. Marsh said that Mr Swackhamer tried the case admirably. Judge Van Syckel had said to him that he was very much pleased with Mr. Swackhammer's address to the jury.

THREW DOWN THE JUDGE.

Bridegroom and Bride Roughly Resent a Magistrate's Official Curiosity.

Judge Collins was closing his office in Westfield, Wednesday evening, when a man and woman came up in a buggy and said they wished to be married. They gave their names as Arthus Hague and Caroline Bray, of New Brunswick. After the preliminary questions had been answered the Judge said:

"Now, as I do not know you, I shall have to ask you to make an affidavit that there is no reason why you should not marry."

The groom taking this as an insult, struck the Judge on the ear. The Judge struck back, and then the prospective bride took a hand, shoving the Judge sprawling over a chair.

When Judge Collins recovered him self he picked up a stool and brought it down upon the head of Hague hard enough to daze him.

The Judge was getting along fairly well after this in an attempt to handcuff his man, when the woman kicked him in the short ribs, taking his breath away and placing him in hors de combat.

She ran out, jumped into the buggy, and called to the man to follow her. Hague did so, and as Judge Collins fainted from exhaustion the entire English succession should go from eldest child to eldest child, which in this case would be himself, and that he certainly would not waive his right. Germans are now interpreting to each other a speech of their emperor's that lately puzzled them—a speech in which he said the German army and the German navy would pass beyond the ocean. He was thinking, say his commentators, of the time when England will be an appanage of Germany."

AN EVENING WITH THE MONTHS.

A Delightful Social Is Given at the Seventh-Day Baptist Church.

Most of the merchants in the country are busy now taking account of stock, and so the "Months" social held at the Seventh-Day Baptist church last Friday was most opportune. The programme consisted of a tableau for each month, after which a short account of the important happenings during that month was read, in all forming a review of the year's work and what remained. January was represented by a snow scene. Love was the governing spirit in February's tableau of St. Valentine's Day. The March winds are proverbial as are the April showers and furnished material for those two scenes. A dainty May Queen was the next. June came with a profusion of roses. The Fourth of July came next, and then followed August with its sports and yachting. A school child was made emblematic of September, while a chestnutting party represented October. Rain was November's characteristic, and last came December, and of course, Christmas. Each tableau was preceded by a quotation. Miss Mabel Maxson was in charge of the tableaux while the delightful supper, that was served from 6 to 8 o'clock, was given under the charge of Mrs. Nathan Randolph, Mrs. E. F. Randolph and Mrs. A. H. Lewis.

A number of the congregation were present and greatly enjoyed the supper, the tableaux and the informal social that followed.

CAUCUSING IN TRENTON.

Thompson to Be President of the Senate and Voorhees the Leader.

The Republican Senators held a caucus on Friday at Trenton to decide on the officers to be chosen next Tuesday. All the eighteen Republican Senators were present, and Senator Williams, was chosen chairman, which carries with it the leadership in the Senate.

This he later resigned, when Lewis A. Thompson, of Somerset county, had been chosen as the Republican candidate for President, by a vote of 11 to 7. Senator Voorhees was then chosen chairman, and he will be the Republican leader.

The first vote for the Presidency resulted in a tie, nine votes each being cast for Thompson, of Somerset, and Voorhees, of Union. On the second ballot two of the Voorhees men went over to Thompson and it was decided to honor Voorhees with the leadership.

Harry B. Rollinson, of Rahway, backed by Senator Voorhees, was chosen as candidate for Secretary of the Senate, and Edward M. Fielder, of Monmouth, was re elected as the candidate for reading clerk.

There was a long discussion over the advisability of suspecting the law passed last year reducing the number of employes and it was finally decided to regard the law, although there was a disposition to ignore it in order to provide places for the many candidates who were presented.

At 11 o'clock it had been decided to make Louis L. Peale, of Newark, engrossing clerk, but later complications arose which made necessary a new deal, and the previous action was reconsidered.

SMALL SIZED FLOOD.

North Avenue Business Places Suffer a Small Inundation.

Friday morning about 12:30, while Policeman Cooney was patrolling his North avenue beat, he noticed a quantity of steam coming from Hillier and Co's laundry store. On examination he found that water was rushing into the store through the ceiling, which he was able to see by the aid of the electric light left burning. He immediately got one of the hackmen at the station to go to the home of Miss Mary Brown, of East Fourth street, the manager. When she arrived and opened the store they found the floor flooded with water. In the meantime the water had been shut off in the street.

An examination was made of the third floor and it was discovered that some person had turned the water on, and at the same time stopped the outlet in the sink with old rags.

The water had flooded a room on the second floor in A. V. D. Honeyman's offices, in which was stored a large number of books, and passed through there into the store occupied by Hillier & Co., on the first floor, and also into a room in the rear of J. T. Vail's real estate office. The total amount of damage will be small on account of its quick discovery. The door leading from the street to the upstairs apartments was not locked, making it possible for a person to get to the upper floor very easy.

Persons having goods at Hillier & Co's can get them by calling at the telephone office next door, as the store is closed today.

THEATRICAL.

"Hands Across the Sea" bids fair to rival "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in dramatic longevity, and its popularity is well deserved. Its drawing power was attested by the large audience at Music Hall last night. The play itself is so well known that it is needless to repeat its story. Of the company it may be said that it is quite as satisfactory as any producing the piece at higher prices, and is under the same management. Maurice Freeman, a strong local favorite, has the leading role of Jack Dudley. His reception was one which any actor might be proud of. George Mack was good as Tom Bostock, and the same is true of Perry Brigham as Robert Stillwood. Carl Fay is fine indeed as Jean de Lussac. James Otley, who was with the original company, repeats previous successes as Dick Melford. Jos. Damery is pleasing as Count Paul. Tillah Wefling's excellent as Lillian Melford, and C. Blanche Rice in the soubrette role. All the minor parts are satisfactorily assumed. The scenery, particularly that of the ship in the fourth act, is well fitted to the play. There will be a matinee today and tomorrow.—Wilkesbarre Record. Music Hall next Friday night.

Supporters for Consolidation.

It is reported that petitions are being circulated among the residents of the borough in an attempt to ascertain how many are in favor of annexation, and while there are many opposed to it, it is said that the supporters are meeting with very good success.

HAVEN FOR ALCOHOL VICTIMS

CHRISTIAN MEN'S UNION MISSION OPENS NEXT MONDAY.

Col. Hadley and Several Other Active Workers Will be Present and Make Addresses—Plans of Work to be Outlined.

When Col. Hadley closed the large meeting in Reform Hall December 22d, it was adjourned to meet next Monday night at 224 West Front street, in the large room formerly occupied as a hardware store.

Since that time, arrangements have been made for the heating, lighting and seating of the store, which will be formally opened as a mission at 7:30 p. m., next Monday evening, by Col. Hadley, assisted by Walter N. Hinman, who has for four years been Superintendent of the famous Canal Street Rescue Mission of Buffalo, who will remain with us for a month at least, and get the work well upon its feet, that the people of Plainfield may see what rescue work is, as done by The Christian Men's Union, of which that is to be a branch.

Mr. Hinman will also be assisted for a month, by Mr. Jabez Thompson, one of the prominent workers of "The Lighthouse," (a Christian saloon) 140 West Lehigh avenue, Philadelphia.

The meeting Monday night will be one of unusal interest, as these three workers will make short references to their own miraculous conversions, each having been saved from drink through Christianity. The plan of the work will be outlined, and a good time generally is expected.

Treasurer Benton, of the Plainfield branch, has called in the pledges made by those who wish to help the work, and it is hoped that all people who have become interested and who wish to interest themselves in saving the victims of the saloon and the non-church-going class, generally, will be on hand Monday night and such nights thereafter as they can find it convenient to come, for there will be a meeting nightly at 7:30 every day in the week except Wednesday, which is the prayer meeting night of the churches of Plainfield, and according to the rules of the Christian Men's Union, they have no meeting on that night, but will try to induce those whom they have recruited to attend the church prayer meetings, in the hope that they may have the co-operation of the pastors and church members to bring them into the church of their choice, and make good members of them.

All parties who have flags or buntings and other decorations which can be used to cover the walls and shelving of the store, which is to be occupied as a mission for the next three months, are cordially invited to send them to the mission room from 9 until 3 o'clock on Monday, that they may be appropriately arranged before the meeting begins.

AMATEUR ACTORS REHEARSE

THEY PREPARE FOR "CONFUSION," TO BE GIVEN AT MUSIC HALL.

It is a Light Comedy, Abounding in Humorous Situations, Brought About by the Mixing of the Pug and the Baby.

A Daily Press reporter was invited Wednesday to a private view of "Confusion," the comedy which is to be given at Music Hall next Thursday evening by the Dramatic Association of the Plainfield Catholic Club. The play is being rehearsed almost every evening at the club house on West Sixth street, and it was one of these that the Daily Press reporter was permitted to witness. Of course, portions of the play are crude, as yet, and all the parts have not been thoroughly learned, but the rehearsal revealed enough to show that for amateur actors the performance Thursday evening will be excellent.

The play itself abounds with humorous situations, and is full of witty lines. It well merits the title "Confusion." The scene is laid at Jersey Lodge, the home of "Mortimer Mumbleford" and his wife, "Rose," which characters are respectively taken by M. J. Cashin and Miss Etta Blatz. "Christopher Blizzard," Charles J. Ward, uncle to "Rose," is living with the young couple, who have only been married two months. "Miss Lucretia Trickler," an aunt to "Mortimer," also resides with them. "Rupert Sinberry" and "Violet," respectively M. J. Winn and Miss Julia Day, are two young people deep in the meshes of love, who are visiting at the same house.

"James, the Butler," is impersonated by T. J. Cumerford, "Muzzle," the detective, is C. Guinee, and "Dr. Bartholomew Jones," is represented by W. J. O'Brien, while Miss Kittie Cullan portrays "Maria" the maid. And last, but not least, came the two causes of all the confusion," the pug and the baby.

The plot is simple, but things become rather mixed before the end of the last act. "James" and "Maria" are really a married couple but hire out to the Mumblefords as a single man and woman. They have a baby which is left under the care of friends in town. "Rose" has long wanted a pet pug dog but her husband has objected strenuously to it. Her uncle buys one for her but does not bring it to the house at once. He is in the meantime making love to "Miss Lucretia." He receives a telegram to come and take care of the pug as the family caring for it leave town very soon. At the same time, "James" and and "Maria" receive a telegram that their baby is ill. "Blizzard" goes after the dog and "Maria" after the baby and both are brought back to the house. The telegrams became mixed as well as the baby and dog until the entire house is in a turmoil.

The parts have been well assigned and are all played well. Mr. Cashin as "Mortimer" is particularly pleasing and has the agony of the deceived husband down to a fine point. His scene with "Dr. Jones" is perhaps the most laughable of all.

All the characters deserve much credit and, with more practice, the play promises to make a great hit.

A RUNAWAY SON RESTORED.

He Applies For Shelter to Chief Grant, Who Notifies His Father.

A good looking boy, respectably dressed, applied to Chief of Police Grant last Friday for a night's lodging. The Chief questioned the lad regarding himself and learned that his name was Herbert DeLong. His home is at Allentown, where his father is in the employ of the government as a mail carrier. Some time ago the father punished Herbert, who is fifteen years of age, and the lad ran away. He went to New York, where he lived for a short time, and then started to work his way home. He was going in that direction when he came to Plainfield.

After Chief Grant had heard the whole story and taken the lad to jail, he telegraphed to the father at Allentown and at about 11 o'clock received a reply stating that Mr. DeLong would be down on the first train this morning. He told Herbert that his father would soon arrive, but the lad took the news without reply.

The Plainfield High School promises to hold an important position in interscholastic sports this coming year, and that it should was the unanimous sentiment of those who attended the meeting of the High School Athletic Association yesterday afternoon. The treasurer's report was the first thing to come before the meeting and it showed the association to be in a better financial condition than ever before. George Proctor Smith then gave a report of the organizing meeting of the National Interscholastic Athletic Association, as told in The Daily Press. The question of completing the organization of the New Jersey Association was then brought forward, and George P. Smith and Wilbur F. Cornwell were appointed a committee to confer with Stevens' School and call a convention of New Jersey schools. This convention will be held in Plainfield, a constitution adopted and the officers elected. It is hoped that Plainfield will also secure the State meet. A meeting will be held Saturday by the committees from Steven's and the High School, when the call will be formally issued.

Cheap Coal.

The Jersey City coal dealers are engaged in a war on the small dealers who peddle coal in 100-pound bags. The result is that the price of coal by the ton has been reduced from $5 to $4.50, as many consumers who had purchased coal by the ton were buying it by the bag.

Borough Officials Arrest and Fine Men Who Travel From House to House Without License From the Authorities.

J. Jacobsohn, representing J. Beck & Co., soap manufacturers of New York, has given Chief Marshal Van-Horn and several residents in the borough considerable trouble the past few days. The agent went from house to house selling his goods without a license, and the Chief detected him in the act. He was taken before Clerk Arnold, where he paid $10.50, the amount of the license, and obtained a receipt. *He then went to Mayor Hege*man and told a plausible story of how innocent he was, etc., with the result of obtaining an order for the return of his money. He got the money from the clerk and then went to selling again.

At the home of H. E. Gayle, of Vine street, he was overbearing in his manner. Mrs. Gayle opened the door after which the agent placed his foot in such a position as to prevent her from closing it. She was, however, obliged to buy something before he would leave.

Thursday he left town when he learned that Chief VanHorn was close on his tracks. The Chief has also been looking for McManus Bros., who have been selling goods in the borough without a license, but as yet he has not been able to find them.

THEATRICAL.

Charles Frohman has received a great many letters from admirers of John Drew, asking for a revival of "Christopher, Jr.," during Mr. Drew's engagement at Palmer's Theatre in New York. He has concluded to heed their requests, and "Christopher Jr." will be presented all next week at Palmer's. The following week Mr. Drew will produce a new play.

Proctor's Pleasure Palace, which is obtaining a reputation throughout the entire country for its costly and colossal entertainment, begins the new year with a rush. The bill is overcrowded with fifteen-minute acts, costing $200 each, are forced in before 1 o'clock p. m. and at the supper hour. It is this liberality of outlay which keeps the house crowded from opening to close of a twelve-hour entertainment. The Four Mosers, eccentric acrobats, from the Alhambra, London, just arrived per Etruria, make their American debut in two distinct acts. Charles E. Ward sings a new song by the author of "Down Went McGinty." Elsie Adair in her dainty dancing novelties; Sherman and Morrissey with their "Jay Circus;" the Flying Dillons; Gertrude Mansfield; the Gypsy Trio and George Lockhart's wonderful elephants are reinforced by Hyde's comedians.

The withdrawal of gold from the sub-treasury in New York, on Tuesday, footed up $2,950,000, of which $850,000 was withdrawn for "domestic purposes." This amount, it is surmised, was designed to be held for the purchase of bonds. Bankers, it is reported, look for large withdrawals of gold before the bids for the bonds are opened, and the opinion is expressed that the reserve will touch the lowest point since it was created in 1879 for the maintenance of specie payments. The sale of bonds, however, it is believed, will fully restore the gold reserve to its legal limit.—True American.

In New Offices.

Leech, Stiles & Company, the opticians who visit this city every Thursday, and who have come to be recognized by the people in the section of New Jersey as experts in their profession, have moved their offices in Philadelphia from 441 Chestnut street, where they have been located for several years, to 1413 Chestnut street. The new location is further up town and but a few steps from the Broad Street station. They have an elegantly arranged suite of offices, especially adapted to their business.

FROM SMILES TO ANGER.

The Story of a Car Conductor and Five Female Passengers.

They were five in number—ladies, evidently—and they boarded an electric car at the Tremont House. Possibly they intended to have a little fun before going home, and as they occupied nearly one-half of the side of the car a merry twinkle gleamed in the eyes of each.

Then the conductor entered. This was the signal for a simultaneous movement of five hands for five handbags. Five tightening strings were loosened, five hands disappeared into uncertain depths and then five pocketbooks came to sight. Five little purses were opened and five pocketbook clasps snapped. Five nickels did not appear. The first lady tendered five pennies, and as she did so she smiled. No. 2 lady caught the infection, and passed up five pennies.

Then the smile of No. 1 was a grin.

No. 3 did the same, and five ladies laughed. No. 4 was somewhat unlucky, and while she was poking numerous hairpins, ribbon samples and other bric-a-brac—which every lady carries in her pocketbook—in search of her change, No. 5 flashed up her five pennies.

More laughter, somewhat increased.

Finally No. 4 had to give it up. Three pennies was all that she could find, and she meekly tendered a quarter. She received her ten cents change. Every conductor in Boston is pleased to receive pennies, because they are handy in making change on transfers. This conductor who, every night, carries in his pocket a book—in spaces

The gold syndicate is beginning to shake off its slumber of the last few days.

Lincoln's birthday, February 12th, will be observed a holiday in this State hereafter.

Foster Voorhees is left behind again. He ought to be used to disappointment by this time.

Governor Griggs is acquiring all the things that fame brings. Now a brand of cigars has been named after him.

Emigration from Italy is on the increase. But the quality of the emigranis is just the same—very poor.

A resolution has been introduced in Congress providing for the admission of the Hawaiian Islands into the Union as a State.

James J. Esterbrook, a veteran of the Mexican War, whose regiment took part in the capture of the City of Mexico, has been appointed by Gov. Werts one of the commissioners to represent New Jersey at the international fair to be held in the City of Mexico next April.

The Ministerial Union of Trenton has commenced a crusade against candy stores, soda fountains and like business enterprises, and will endeavor to make them close on Sunday. A newspaper report says that "it is understood on good authority that there will be no attempt made to close the barber shops or cigar stores." Any such movement directed against only the weaker of the violators would be the height of inconsistency.

The Christian Endeavor, a Chicago paper, has been printing letters from twelve Governors of States as to what they would suggest the 2,000,000 Christian Endeavorers to do along the line of Christian citizenship. Governor Griggs advises them to ally themselves with one of the two big political parties and not waste their strength. It is a poor suggestion. The organization is doing a great work in its present field of effort. An affiliation with political elements would prove a negative to its present line of work.

California's experiment of printing the text-books used in the public schools of the State proves to be a costly one, the San Francisco papers report. The idea was that the books, when thrown upon the market, would not only fully repay the cost of production, but would yield a handsome revenue, which in a few years would fully reimburse the State for the amount of appropriations made to establish the original plant. This was fallacious. The estimate now is that the State has lost about $200 000 on the venture.

The custom of employing convicts in road making is increasing in South Carolina. The Constitutional Convention removed the obstructions in the way of the chain-gang system, and now all the officials with authority to sentence to imprisonment have the right to send convicted prisoners to the chain gang. This has resulted in an increased number of convictions, and in a lessening of the number of prisoners in the penitentiary. Nineteen counties have chain gangs at work on the roads, and other counties contemplate like action. The system works well in many of the counties, where several miles of good road have been built. Other counties complain of the expense involved. But it proves not to be unduly expensive where intelligently applied, and where the labor of the convicts is supplemented by the use of modern road machinery.

The wisdom of the last Legislature in passing the act declaring the 12th of February, the birthday of Abraham Lincoln, the martyr President, a State holiday, remains to be seen. A holiday which is more honored in the breach than in the observance, would be better no holiday at all. There is no doubt that the day is deserving of being set apart in some manner, and its observance by public exercises, meeting and speeches has in recent years been growing in several States under the fostering care of rising Lincoln clubs, but whether it yet occupies a place in the public mind which would make it an appropriate legal holiday is a question. It is true, however, that patriotic observances is apt to follow upon the track of the legal declaration, and it is to be hoped that the people need only the leisure from labor to celebrate it in the proper spirit.—New York Press.

The movement in opposition to the consolidation of the cities of New York and Brooklyn is developing along new lines. In the Eastern District of Brooklyn the action taken in Liliady is creating considerable discussion, and the feeling is on the increase among thoughtful people that the preponderance of "hayseed" legislators who are unacquainted with the wants of a great metropolitan community must sooner or later be overcome. There is talk of convening a meeting to take steps for the creation of a new State of Long Island, and call it "the State of Long Island." This idea is not put forth by politicians, who are, of course, favorable to it, but emanates from substantial business men, who feel their interests and those of their rent-paying employes affected by the proposed consolidation.

Why should New Jersey Governors, New Jersey Generals, New Jersey Colonels and Jerseymen generally betake themselves to New York whenever they want to have a feast or a frolic? If Gov. Werts is to be entertained at dinner, his friends drag him off to New York. If it is desired to honor Governor elect Griggs in a similar manner, the cry is "On to New York," and on to New York they go. There is nothing new in this temporary emigration. It has happened so for years, and it will happen so for many years to come, unless future entertainers prove more loyal to their own State. When the citizens of Newark wanted to honor Ambassador Runyon previous to his departure for Berlin, the emigration was to the Waldorf, and a steady stream of entertainers and entertainees has flowed to the Waldorf ever since. Now the Waldorf is surpassing lovely, and New York is very attractive, but it really seems as if the proper thing to do on occasions of a public character, and especially where New Jersey officials are entertained, is to entertain the guests on Jersey soil. No doubt if this is done, the demand will eventually create the supply and our own State will be the better for a temporary period of self-sacrifice.—Newark Advertiser.

Uncle Sam Will Stand It.

The Postmaster-General has transmitted to Congress the claim of Mrs. Bridget Lane, postmistress in Summit, for a credit account of loss by burglary on Nov. 20th, 1895. A department inspector reports that postal funds to the value of $:05 and postage stamps valued at $5,340.66 were stolen, without fault or neglect of the postmistress. The Postmaster-General recommends that Congress relieve her of the loss.

A SCIENTIFIC LIBRARY.

COMMON COUNCIL TAKE NECESSARY STEPS TO ESTABLISH ONE.

The Funds Are Furnished in the Bequest of $10,000 by the Late George H. Babcock—Improvements Will Cost $6,000.

All the members of the City Council were present at Monday's adjourned meeting except Councilman Fisk, who is detained at home by illness. After the minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved, a petition was received from I. W. Rushmore and others asking for electric lights on West Eighth street, between Plainfield and Grant avenues. It was referred to the Light and Trees Committee, and another petition from the same parties, offering to pay their proportionate share for the macadamizing of the above street was referred to the Street Committee.

Constable W. B. Mattox submitted his bonds with G. W. Cole and W. W. Coriell as securieties. It was referred to the Finance Committee who later ordered it received and filed.

Mr. Stebbins stated the ordinances to the office of building inspector would go into effect today, and in view of this fact he nominated T. O. Doane for the office temporarily, until Mayor Gilbert makes his appointments in February. The nomination prevailed. Mr. Stebbins then moved that 300 copies of the building and inspectors ordinances be printed in pamphlet form. It was so ordered.

Mr. Barrows stated that contemplated changes in the police force made it unnecessary to act on the petition received a week ago in regard to changing Policeman Saunders from night to day duty. He also reported that he had spoken to Chief Grant in regard to the hacks and wagons at the North Avenue station, and the ordinance would be enforced.

Mr. Dumont presented a communication from a committee from the Public Library in regard to proposed changes at that place. In substance it was as follows:

At a late meeting of the Board of Directors of the Plainfield Public Library and Reading Room, the undersigned were appointed a committee to bring before the Mayor and Common Council the situation of the above in regard to the bequest of the late George H. Babcock, in the sum of $10,000, to be devoted to the purchase of books and periodicals, and to constitute a Babcock Scientific Library. It has also devised a plan for the increase of which amounts to from $1,200 to $1,500 per year, to be used in making additions from year to year to such library. We have no fear that the Common Council will not approve of the plan, but we do not think that we have any authority to make them. The gifts were to the city and they should take steps to provide such room and secure authority as is needed.

Two plans have been suggested. One is to cut the room in the library building which is at present used as a reading room and for book cases, into two parts; make the north end a reading room and cut out the floor from the south end of the room and build stacks of book cases, running from the floor of the basement to the ceiling of the present library room, and perforated for air flues, the first 7 feet above the floor of the basement and three stacks would be book cases running within a foot of the side walls of the room, and situated a less part and filling the whole space south of the passageway in present library room. The bay window could be used for the librarian's distributing desk, and the part north of passageway could be used for a reading room. In this way 45,000 volumes could be accommodated. We now have 14,000 books and with the change we could secure room for 31,000 more volumes.

The improvements could be made at a cost of $6,000.

The second plan would be to build a fireproof addition in the rear. This could be built with low walls and the height increased as we needed the room. The advantages in this would be additional room and safety from fire.

The only way this matter can be arranged is by the city securing an amendment to the act under which the library was organized, so as to allow the city to raise by tax the fund required to make such changes. The undersigned have prepared a bill, a copy of which is enclosed. It provides for the raising by tax of such money as we needed. We ask that a committee be appointed to secure the passage of the act.

Respectfully,
S. Mason W. Tyler,
J. Evarts Tracy,
J. B. Dumont.

Mr. Dumont moved that instead of a committee being appointed, as suggested, the council approve the substance of the act and give such aid towards its passage as was possible. It was so ordered.

On a resolution offered by Mr. Dumont, certified copies of the act will be sent to Mason W. Tyler and he will see that the assemblymen are supplied.

The council then adjourned, there being no further business to transact.

Better Every Year.

Time was when the "glorious climate of California" did not attract tourists. But year after year the tide of travel sets in stronger every fall and winter toward this favored region. There is no climate like it on this continent for a winter resort, and the usual fine service on the Union Pacific System has this season been brought to a degree of perfection which leaves nothing to be desired. CHARITY PEOPLE CONFER.

The meeting of the Organized Aid Association was held last Monday in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue church. With Colonel Mason W. Tyler, president of the association, in the chair, the meeting was called to order. The minutes of the previous meeting were read by Secretary John D. Miller and approved.

The constitution and bylaws of the association which were adopted before the association had been incorporated, were readopted by the incorporated association. The report of the Treasurer, H. P. Reynolds was as follows:

January 1st, '95, balance brought forward	$ 83.70
Receipts from members for the year ending December 31st	482.00
Collections	34.30
Total	$600.00

The following are the payments during the year ending December 31st:

Office expenses	$109.23
Outside expenses	14.95
Salary of agent	300.00
Printing, stationary, postage stamps and cards	69.86
Employment committee	21.10
Total	$565.08
Balance	$ 34.92

It was moved and carried that this report be referred to the finance committee.

The secretary's report was then given by John D. Miller, Esq., secretary of the association. This report was also accepted and ordered to be placed on file.

The next reports were those of the several committees.

The report of the District committee was one of great interest and will appear in printed form sometime in the near future. This report was given by the chairman of that committee, Rev. G. Kennedy Newell. All the reports were accepted and approved by the motion of Dr. Reynolds.

A motion to the effect that the care of the city poor be referred to the district committee was made by the Rev. Mr. Newell and after some discussion and explanations, was unanimously carried.

John D. Miller offered the motion that a vote of thanks be extended to David P. Hall for his faithful service in the work of incorporating the association. This motion received a full vote.

REVIVAL AT SCOTCH PLAINS.

The Entire Town Is Stirred and Many Conversions Have Been Made.

During the week past Scotch Plains has been stirred to its depths by a series of revival meetings which have been carried on by Rev. Arthur Crane, of this city. Great interest has been taken in the meetings, not only in Scotch Plains alone, but in Fanwood and the adjacent villages. The church life has been quickened and a large number have come forward as a result of the movement. The meetings are being held in the Baptist church of that place.

So interested were the people in the revival that the church officials telegraphed to Franklin, N. H., where Rev. Mr. Crane was to go this week, asking that he be allowed to remain in Scotch Plains for another week.

Rev. Mr. Crane is assisted in his good work by the famous gospel singer, H. A. Woolfsohn.

The Great Tobacco War.

Many readers know of the war existing between the manufacturers of plug chewing tobacco, but few, perhaps, are familiar with the cause.

For years some manufacturers have been making enormous profits by giving consumers a small piece of plug for ten cents. Recently a very large manufacturer, seeing that the time had come for better things, had placed a new brand called Battle Ax on the market, which gives the consumer a very large piece of most excellent quality for the same price. This has raised a great storm among those who are hurt by it, but it gives to those who use the goods. In Battle Ax they get a greater quantity for their money while the quality is equal to the finest of other brands. This has naturally had the effect of greatly decreasing the business of those who have held to the old way, and it has materially curtailed their enormous profits. On the other hand Battle Ax now taxes the resources of three large factories, which, by running night and day, are still unable to make the goods fast enough to satisfy the enthusiastic demand.

The people want a good thing and the most of it that they can get for the price. The manufacturers who do the best by them will get their trade. Their rivals naturally do not like it. They raise a mighty howl, but the AX will cut them down.

For Literary People.

Mrs. Florence Howe Hall is arranging a course of three entertainments for February and March. The first will take place about February 6th at the home of Mrs. Charles Case, on Central avenue, when Mrs. Hall's sister, Mrs. Laura E. Richards (author of Captain January) will read selections from her own writings.

A SATURDAY BLAZE.

FIRE IN DAN HOGAN'S BARN BRINGS OUT THE DEPARTMENT.

The Flames Are Supposed to Have Been Started by Children—Several Chickens Roasted to Death—Loss About $150.

While Michael Flynn was returning to his home on West Third street Saturday afternoon, he noticed that smoke was coming out of the second story of Daniel Hogan's brick barn at 428 West Third street. He called to his brother, Peter Flynn, who was a short distance away, and told him to send in an alarm. The latter met Letter-carrier Daniel Shea, and securing his key sent in an alarm from Box 46, corner of West Second and Liberty streets. On account of some work being done at the electric light station around the gong, the latter did not blow right at first, but the register was correct at the fire houses In four minutes from the time the alarm was sounded, there was water on the fire.

The barn, a substantial brick structure, had been out of use for sometime, and a number of valuable chickens owned by Mr. Hogan were kept there. In the building there was a quanity of rubbish and hay, and the supposition is that the fire was of an incendiary character. It was necessary to use a large quantity of water to extinguish the flames which caused a dense smoke, making it very difficult to reach the flames. The damage will probably reach $150. Several of the chickens were destroyed. Chief Doane arrived home from Newark just as the fire broke out, and quickly reached the place. He ordered the firemen to break several panes of glass in the barn, so that the fire could be more easily reached.

There was no insurance on the building.

TO BUILD A NEW TOWN.

It Will Have Several Large Factories and Shops and Thirty Houses.

The transfer of sixty-five acres of land north of Cranford has been just made, the purchaser being the Orange Improvement Association. The sale of such a large tract has given rise to a rumor that it was secured in the interest of the Pullman Company. This is denied by the officers of the association, who, however, are careful not to give any definite information as to the actual object of the purchase further than to state that there are to be several large factories and shops erected in early spring and a model town built.

Already there has been a large force of workmen employed and the work of clearing away the trees and undergrowth is being rapidly pushed. A number of streets have been laid out and the men are grading and forming the same.

The manager in charge of the work has stated that there are to be thirty houses begun at once, the plans for which are now in the hands of the architect.

From present indications there will be a large amount of work done here during the coming summer, as the members of the association are moneyed men and are giving evidence of large building projects.

Praise Meeting.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Presbyterian churches of Plainfield will hold a praise meeting and thank offering service in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church on Tuesday, January 14th, at 3:30 p. m. All women are earnestly requested to be present. The offerings made will be used to extend the Gospel in foreign lands.

A HERMIT FOUND DEAD.

$2000 in Gold Found in the Tumble-Down Shelter of an Elizabeth Recluse.

Peter Schwartz, an old German, aged seventy-five, always supposed to be a miser, was found dead at his home in Linden township yesterday morning. He lived in an old house on the property of John Westcott, who found him and reported the matter to the overseer of the township, George W. Bauer. He had been ailing several days, Dr. H. P. Hough, of Rahway, was sent for yesterday, but, not being home, he did not go until the afternoon. The overseer of the poor, while hunting around the house, found over $2000 in gold in the house. It is believed the old man died of exposure.

Dr. Lewis in Demand.

A meeting of the American Sabbath Tract Society was held yesterday afternoon in the parlors of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, and one of the important resolutions adopted was one asking the church to give Rev. Dr. Lewis six months leave of absence for the purpose of developing the movement for observing the seventh day as Sabbath.

Not Itinerant Peddlers.

McManus Brothers, of Newark, state that they have no agents in Plainfield or elsewhere and the report, therefore, that they are itinerant peddlers who the borough police are looking for for not taking out a license, is erroneous. They sell goods only direct from their store in Newark.

Use It in Time.

Catarrh starts in the nasal passages, affecting eyes, ears and throat, and is in fact, the great enemy of the mucous membrane. Neglected colds in the head almost invariably precede catarrh, causing an excessive flow of mucus, and if the mucus discharge becomes interrupted the disagreeable results of catarrh will follow, such as bad breath severe pain across forehead and about the eyes, a roaring and buzzing sound in the ears, and oftentimes a very offensive discharge. Ely's Cream Balm is the acknowledged cure of these troubles.

CUPID'S MORNING EVENT.

QUIET MARRIAGE OF MISS ANNIE OPDYKE TO AARON KEYSER.

The Ceremony Performed in Grace P. E. Church This Morning and Witnessed by Only a Few of the Near Relatives.

The marriage of Miss Annie Opdyke, daughter of Charles W. Opdyke, of Watchung avenue, to Aaron Keyser, also of Watchung avenue, was performed in Grace P.E church Monday morning at 10 o'clock, by Rev. E. M. Bodman, the rector, as exclusively reported in The Daily Press last evening. The affair was an exceedingly quiet one, owing to a recent death in the groom's family.

The bride was becoming in a green traveling gown. She also wore a hat. The ceremony was performed with a ring. Immediately after the bridal couple received the congratulations of those present they left on the 10:26 train for a two-weeks trip south.

On their return they will reside at Mr. Keyser's handsome residence on Watchung avenue. They received a large number of very costly presents from their friends and relatives.

Among the guests present at the church were: Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Opdyke, Dr. Ralph Opdyke, Alfred Opdyke, Geo. W. Farlee, Miss Strobell and Mrs. H. B. Opdyke, of New York; Edwin Opdyke of Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. D. Shepard of Montclair.

The bride was a granddaughter of the late ex-Mayor Opdyke of New York, who served during the war as the executive head of the metropolis. It is understood that the wedding does not meet with the approval of the bride's father, who did not attend the ceremony.

FELL INTO ICY WATER.

The Shock Half-Crazed the Lad and He Did Nothing But Scream.

The skaters turned out in full force Saturday morning and thronged Hyde's pond but, while there was plenty of falls and tumbles, there was only one accident of any serious moment. A small lad, apparently about eight or nine years old, in some way, walked or fell into the water in the flume at the outlet of the pond. Some of the young men, who happened to be skating nearby, went to the rescue and pulled the struggling boy out of the icy water. The shock of the sudden plunge seemed to temporarily unsettle his mind, for he sat upon the bank in his freezing clothing and screamed with all his might, not paying the slightest attention to those who tried to find out who he was and what was the matter. At last it was learned that his last name was Runyon and that he resided at the corner of Church and East Third streets. A carriage was secured, but the lad resisted all attempts to put him in it and was finally carried by main force to the vehicle, in which he was driven home.

The incident cast a gloom over the gay crowd for some time after it happened.

WILL HANG MARCH 11.

That is the Sentence of Johnson by Judge McGee.

Jacob S. Johnson, a former colored preacher, was Saturday found guilty in the Somerset County Court of murder in the first degree, and he is now in the county jail awaiting sentence on the charge of having strangled Ann Rogers, otherwise known as Annie Beckman.

Johnson was brought into court this morning when Judge McGee sentenced him to be hung to death between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock on March 11th.

A Signal for the Police.

The mystery of the pistol shots that were fired on West Seventh street on last Friday evening, has been solved. A resident on the street thought that there was some one in his cellar that did not belong there and he fired several rounds from his revolver to summon Officer Hartpence, who soon responded. There was no one to be found in the cellar then, however.

PROGRESSIVE PLANFIELD

PITHY OBSERVATIONS OF THE NEW JERSEY CONTRACTOR'S EDITOR.

Pays a Compliment to The Daily Press—There is No Fictitious Boom in Plainfield—Its Growth is Substantial.

The New Jersey Contractor last Saturday published the following:

Unquestionable, Plainfield is forging far ahead of any of the cities of the State. A walk through the city finds the hitching posts in front of the business houses fast to a team of horses either the property of a farmer, or a wealthy resident or with a liveried coachman, and in numerous cases a footman at the head, a pair of well groomed and fed horses. The fact that there are over eighty houses, not a few being business houses, in course of erection, is another evidence of the growth of the city. To a Contractor reporter, who walked through the city, this did not appear to be a fictitious boom, but an honest sign of thrift and industry, and an expenditure of money whose investors appeared to be assured of a speedy return of their investment, and a sign of local pride and energy. Stepping into one of the newspaper offices (The Press) the reporter was pleased to notice the air of bustle and business of the office, and the clamor of the newsboys, it being the hour of issue, who were lustily crying out, "give me seven," "give me fifteen," "give me thirty." The lively sale of a daily paper in any city is proof of the wide awake character of the community.

Dropping into the office of A. D. Thompson, President of The Plainfield Real Estate Company, and inquiring of the movement of real estate in the city and at Watchung Park, near The Watchung Mountains, which is less than eight minutes from the station, Mr. Thompson said that there has been erected recently 70 new houses, none of them costing less than $5,000, and all sold, with a lot left, every one of which is desirable at $1,000.

At Netherwood, said Mr. Thompson, no houses are to be found in the city can be found. Houses in this vicinity are the most finest. We have just completed a handsome residence, price $20,000, and are erecting two more to cost $14,000 each. They are complete in every particular. Anyone desiring high class property cannot help but be suited. On the tract at Sixth and Seventh streets, five minutes from the station, we are building two houses with all modern improvements, to cost from $4,000 to $5,000. Desirable lots in this vicinity are only $18 to $20 per foot.

A call at the office of real estate agents and owners found them jubilant over the business in hand, and of the unusually cheery prospects of a big spring sale of all classes of property. Before the reporter left the city, he was convinced from the number of passengers carried by the darting trolley cars almost on every street, and by the business done by the hackmen from the railroad, surely the people of Crescent do move.

SKATES TWO FEET LONG.

They Are Used On the Hudson River But Seldom Seen Here.

Skates may be found of many different patterns but those which have attracted the most attention, perhaps, of the skaters of this city, are those which are the property of John E. Hall, of East Fifth street.

They are the kind known as "straights," and are used almost exclusively on the upper Hudson river, although very seldom seen in this neighborhood. The skates are constructed of wood and steel. The tops, on which the foot rests, is made of cherry and is twenty-three and a half inches long. The steel runner is attached to the wooden foot rest and is about twenty five inches long. The skates weigh about one pound each. They are fastened to the heel with a screw and a strap passes around the toe. The skates were manufactured Mr. Hall who is also a mechanic.

He is an excellent skater and seems to find his style of runners much preferable to the ordinary.

Property Transfers.

From January 3d to 8th inclusive the following transfers of property have been recorded in the Union County Clerk's office as published in the New Jersey Contractor:

Wm. N. Sandford et ux, Plainfield, to Josiah D. Unangst, Plainfield, lot Richmond avenue, Plainfield, $1,850; Josiah D. Unangst, Plainfield, to Newton B. and Alfred J. Smalley, North Plainfield, and David C. Smalley, Plainfield, lot Northwestern avenue, $1; James E. Martine et al, Plainfield, to Lemuel B. Woolston and James F. BIG WEB PERFECTING PRESSES BUILT BY WALTER SCOTT.

An Industry Which Every Plainfielder Should Be Proud Of—Machines That Will Print 100,000 Papers Per Hour.

The last issue of The Fourth Estate, a New York trade paper, contained the following about Walter Scott & Company:

It is seldom that a manufacturer is so pleased with a story in regard to a rival firm as was Walter Scott over an article that appeared in the London (Eng.) Press News under the heading: "A Great Printing Press." This read as follows:

Provincial journalism is going ahead. The proprietors of the Sheffield Daily Telegraph have ordered from Messrs. Hoe & Company, of London and New York, one of their new notaries, to be built on the lines of one that was shown at the Chicago Exhibition. There is at present nothing like it in England, and the purchasers have named it the "three decker," as it will consist of three printing presses placed one above the other, and so arranged that they will print separately or altogether.

From this wonderful giant, readers will receive their paper cut on the top, properly folded and pasted gummed, and the fabric's lens of the above journal will consist of 10 or 12 handy pages, in place of the large sheet of 8 pages. This new machine will print 4 page papers at 72,000 per hour, 6-page papers at 48,000 per hour, 8-page papers at 36,000 per hour, 10-page papers at 24,000 per hour, 12-page papers at 24,000 per hour, also any other size up to 24 pages, either 6, 7 or eight columns to a page.

"This is a case where credit due has gone astray," said Walter Scott to a representative of The Fourth Estate, and he smiled as he said it.

"The press referred to as having been at the Chicago exhibition was exhibited by Walter Scott & Company, of Plainfield, New Jersey. The order was given to R. Hoe & Company was for a press similiar to two now running in the Montreal Star office, which were built by Walter Scott & Company. These are three tiered presses with tandem folders."

Continuing, Mr. Scott said: "There has been some discussion as to who was the first to introduce the two and three decker presses now known as the straight line machines, the printing cylinders being placed in parallel with each other, the rolls of paper at one end of the presses and the folders at the other. I claim the credit for such machines.'

"I have produced several kinds of them, single and double width. One of the above-mentioned Montreal Star presses was built and operated in 1889, and was placed in the Star office in 1891. The first of the "three tiered" presses in the Chicago Inter-Ocean office was installed early in 1892. Others followed in rapid succession until twenty-five such machines have been built.

"If you are going to say anything about this matter," remarked Mr. Scott, "to make it clear, you can do no best by illustrations of the three kinds, viz., triple, sextuple and octuple presses. He then gave the reporter the accompanying cut, saying:

'The triple, with double-tandem folders, will run 2, 4 and 6 pages, as is speed of 50,000 per hour, 8 pages at 37,000 per hour, 10 and 12 pages at 25,000 per hour, 20 and 24 pages at 12,500 per hour, delivering the papers cut, pasted and folded in book form and counted in fifties.

"The sextuple will work 2, 4, 6, 8, 10 or 12 page papers at 50,000 per hour, 16, 18, 20 and 24 pages at 25,000 per hour.

"We have placed in the Chicago Tribune office two sextuple presses with auxiliary folders. The extra folder is to fold the web from the upper press, when the lower two presses and folders are working 8 pages or less, and also when working 16 pages. By this means the machines will produce per hour 75 000 of 2, 4, 6 or 8 pages, 50,000 of 10 and 12 pages, 37,500 of 16 pages and 25,000 of 20 and 24 pages.

"The octuple machines, with four folders, will produce per hour:

"100,000 of 2, 4, 6 and 8 pages.

"50,000 of 16 pages.

"37,000 of 18 and 20 pages.

"25,000 of 22, 24 and 32 pages.

"There are many excellent inventions embodied in these machines which at once commend themselves to the practical pressman."

A TELEGRAM.

She Was Like Other Women, and Got Scared to Unconsciousness.

The effect which the telegraph messenger has upon the members of my sex when he delivers a telegram makes us a fruitful theme for study, writes Harold Holt Cahoon in the New York Recorder. Nothing suggests real feminine advancement more fully than a cool demeanor on the part of a woman when she receives a telegram. The feminine nature is prone to be oppressive of proper self control, and the messenger boys have come to regard us with cool masculine amusement and superiority. I learn from one of these fateful emissaries that a woman is always in tears a message open in feverish haste before she signs the book, a thing a superior masculine recipient of one never does.

My neighbor received a telegram this morning and fainted away in the hall near the door of her apartment. The telegraph messenger summoned neighborly sympathizers, and then became a curious, and silent and contemptuous eyewitness of what he plainly regarded as the queer and inexplicable conduct of women. A few people ran in from the street, and some born camphor and smelling salts, and others brought water and sympathy and various other remedies, and were quite officious than the others, called in a doctor. My gentle neighbor revived eventually, and the telegram that had fluttered to her feet was opened by the doctor. The patient beheld him tear it open, and then, as he unfolded it, she swooned again. This story is drawn at first hand. Innumerable are these things will happen in due succession. The message was from her husband, and it said, "Gone to Philadelphia; back late tonight."

Then everybody laughed at her and threw water on her, and the doctor murmured, "Too provincial, madam—too provincial altogether." The New York woman hates to be called "provincial," and so my neighbor has fluttered in and out several times this afternoon and sputtered in a pretty fashion. That is all. That thoughtful spouse will catch it when he gets home from Philadelphia. We women shall never advance generally until we are able to meet the exigencies of such trifles as telegrams.

ALASKA'S ICE BEAR.

An Accurate Description of It by Professor Dall of the Coal Commission.

When the government sent out a commission to investigate the goldfields of Alaska, Professor W. N. Dall was made one of the party. While the scientific men were visiting the Mount St. Elias glaciers, Professor Dall saw an animal he had never seen before. It was a bear, but such a bear as nobody in the party had ever seen or heard of. They thought they had discovered an entirely distinct species. Professor Dall made an elaborate report of all the circumstances, together with all the information he could get from the natives about the animal. This is the description:

"The general color of the animal resembles that of the silver fox. The fur is not very long, but extremely soft and with a rich under fur of a bluish black shade, numbers of the longer hairs being white or having the distal part half white and the basal part black. The hairs taken from the tip of the nose to the rump, the back of the very short ears and the outer faces of the limbs are jet black. Numerous long white hairs on the nose and on the back and silver is the prevalent pelage of the sides, neck and rump; the underfur is white and the belly and inner sinuses and the limbs are grayish white, not even nearly pure white, I am told, in some cases. The sides of the muzzle and the lower anterior part of the cheeks are pure white. The most characteristic I have not seen in any other American bear, and this characteristic is said to be invariable. There is no tint of brown elsewhere in the pelage. There is no tint visible on the pelts. The claws are small, very much curved, sharp, black above and lighter below; the animal evidently can climb trees, which the brown bear cannot do."

To this the Alaska Mining Record says: "Professor Dall seems to have discovered our ice bear."

Going to Sleep.

"If you have never dozed so, watch yourself go to sleep, and learn to laugh at it," said you will be amazed to see how tense your position is. Your knees are down and bended, your head is thrown back, the jaws are held more or less tightly to the body and the fingers are folded. The eyelids are held shut, not allowed to droop over the eyes, and the whole attention of the mind seems to touch the pillow only at the temples. The points of contact with the bed are really at the temples, shoulders, hips, knees and ankles. Now look at a child sleeping. Every muscle is relaxed, every joint is inert and prone on the couch, his little frame finds rest at every point. The features are undone, so to speak, the mouth widens, the mouth drops, the eyelids close easily, and with every line of expression obliterated he finds utter and complete repose. The abandon makes him fall out of bed sometimes, such an inert body has he become. You may imitate him even to that degree, if necessary. Begin at your toes to relax, loosen all your joints and muscles, unbend your fingers, shake your wrists loose, take the curves and straightout of your neck, go all in pieces, in fact, and see how the day's fatigue seems to slip off from you, and the gentle mantle of rest and oblivion to infold you like a garment."—Atlanta Constitution.

Sir Henry Irving Many Years Ago.

Many years ago, when Sir Henry Irving was playing in Manchester, he was called upon to undertake a heavy part, the actor who was cast for it having been taken ill. In those days the gallery boy was a much greater conversationalist than he is now. If a couple of gallery friends were separated, they thought nothing of holding a conversation across the house while the play was in progress. When Sir Henry made his first appearance on this occasion, one youth shouted to another, "Is that Mr. Irving?" "No," came the reply, "there 's the young man's clothes. They'll shove him out later on!"—Westminster Gazette.

TIPS AND CLASSES.

THE QUESTION OF FEES TREATED AS A SERIOUS MATTER.

Monetary Remembrances Said to Be Creating Unpleasant Distinctions—Destruction of One of America's Proudest Claims.

There are persons still living who can remember when "tips," or unearned rewards, were unknown in our country and were considered utterly un-American. Our working people, no less than all the rest of our citizens, were not only too self respecting and independent to accept them, but they were offended by the offer of them. Their wages were honestly earned; their little courtesies and kindnesses, that have been called "the bond," they were accustomed to give as freely as any gentleman or lady in the land, and therefore class distinctions were little known among us. When every one was decently of the noblest and dearest of rights, that of free giving, each enjoyed the respect of each. It could not be otherwise. Respect cannot be extorted, and it comes flowing naturally to those who hold themselves above price and freely give themselves.

The mark that once distinguished all American citizens, the mark of honest and unpaid serving, and when all gave freely and all took freely there could be little class distinctions, is the one of "tipping for a fee!" was the amazed comment of the European visitor. "You must not offer fees here. You will only offend people," replied the American. "Our people are all above fees!" How proudly we said it! How we long to be again able to say it! In those days part of the traveler's pleasure came from the disinterested and kindly helpfulness, the waiter's alert good will, the passing stranger's prompt kindness, and by no means only the rich stranger's kindness, offering, perhaps, to aid the poorly dressed and careworn, the busy worker's moment of free service. No smiles were for sale; no courtesies were minted and issued as the current of mercenary motives. How tips have altered and degraded our relations to our neighbors, separating between rich and poor and the professional servers! We used to lead in independence and free helpfulness, but we have dropped behind.

The guards in the palace of justice at Paris are not allowed to accept fees, though there is no charge for seeing the rooms. Not knowing this, a fee was offered to an obliging attendant who had guided some visitors. The guard drew back, saying proudly, "Never, madam, never!" And in Switzerland the same traveler asked for wine at a humble cottage door. The fair woman who answered the inquiry insisted upon going some distance up the mountain that the path might not be missed. In the afternoon she kindly fixed grew scarlet as the volunteer guide drew back, saying, "I, madam, am a Swiss girl!" Instead of being, as, so our own people once took such an offer, but now! Shall we rest content to be thus outstripped?

And now the tip fail to take the natural sweetness from well earned wages? We all feel great satisfaction in a hard won gain until we see others getting as much, or more, for less labor. Then all such satisfaction dwindles inevitably. The beggar and the tip taker alike often receives more than the honest worker, and without effort. Their way of living is a school for. Who has not heard the admonition to the hotel waiter, "Now, get the best of everything for me, and don't keep me waiting, and I'll tell forget you!" This plain to establish this means, "I will reward you if you secure for me alone what is meant for several people." Then the obsequious bows and bought smiles! The accomplished barber of the best part of a man, regarding alike by tips and fought! It is argued that hotel servants are not well paid and are expected to supplement their wages by getting tips, and that they make them alert. This speaks for itself. But there are proprietors of hotels who are not willing that their employees should be considered beggars, or dependent on tips, and so do reserve all their employees.

But unearned fees are by no means confined to hotels. The evil has spread widely. Scarcely the employees of the churches should be on as high a place as those of the palace of justice at Paris. They are far from being so. The churches allow their employees to be paid, and soon they widens, the mouth droops, the eyelids close easily, and with every line of expression obliterated he finds utter and complete repose. The abandon makes him fall out of bed sometimes, such an inert body has he become. You may imitate him even to that degree, if necessary. Begin at your toes to relax, loosen all your joints and muscles, unbend your fingers, shake your wrists loose, take the curves and straightout of your neck, go all in pieces, in fact, and see how the day's fatigue seems to slip off from you, and the gentle mantle of rest and oblivion to infold you like a garment."—Atlanta Constitution.

SMOKING HORSES.

The Singular Manner In Which Indians Obtain Their Mounts.

A curious method of obtaining horses is practiced by some of the Indian tribes. It is called on the plains "smoking horses." If a tribe decides to send out a war party, the first thing to be thought of is whether there are enough horses at hand to mount the warriors. If, as is often the case, the horses of the tribe have been "run off" by enemies, the effort to "smoke" enough horses for present needs and to steal a supply from their enemies at the first opportunity.

When the decision is reached, a runner is dispatched to the nearest friendly tribe with the message that on a certain day they will be visited by a number of young men, forming a war party from his tribe, who require horses. On the appointed day the warriors appear, stripped to the waist. They assemble in the village of their friends, seat themselves in a circle, light their pipes and begin to smoke, at the same time making their wishes known in a sort of drawling singsong.

Presently there is seen, far out on the plain, a band of horsemen, riding gayly caparisoned steeds fully equipped for war. These horsemen ride into the village and wheel about the band of beggars sitting on the ground, in circles which constantly grow smaller, until, at last, they are so close to the seated to the smokers without riding over them. Then each rider selects the man to whom he intends to present his gaily caparisoned steed, and, singing and yelling, he lashes the bare back of the man he has selected with the heavy rawhide whip until the blood is seen to trickle down. All the other smokers should flinch under the blows, he would not get his horse, but would be sent home on foot and in disgrace.

At last, when the horsemen think their friends have been made to pay enough in suffering for their ponies, each dismounts, places the bridle in the hand of the smoker he has selected, and, at the same time hands him the whip, saying:

"Here, beggar, is a pony for you to ride, for which I have left my mark."

After all the ponies have been presented the "beggars" are invited to a grand feast, during which they are treated with every possible attention by their hosts, who load them with food sufficient for their homeward journey. The braves depart with full stomachs and smarting backs, but happy in the possession of their ponies, and in anticipation of the time when their friends shall be in distress and shall come to smoke horses with them.—Philadelphia Times.

LIQUID AIR.

It May Take the Place of Oxygen In Submarine Navigation.

Liquid air may play an important part in submarine navigation. It was believed a few years ago that oxygen would solve the problem of furnishing a reasonably safe and comfortable atmosphere for men, and a submarine craft equipped with oxygen retorts instead of compressed air retorts remained many hours under water, while its crew played cards, ate a hearty meal and did other things that had hitherto been done only above the surface of the water. The advantage of oxygen over compressed air for the purposes of the former than of the latter is needed in submarine navigation, and therefore a less weight of metallic retorts has to be carried. The thoroughly successful experiments the oxygen was permitted to escape in small quantities into the atmosphere of a closed room, the analysis of a small flame indicated the presence of too much carbonic acid and consequent death of oxygen. Little has been heard of oxygen submarine navigation of late, and the failure

BOROUGH COUNCIL POSTPONE ACTION ON THE BELL TOWER.

SEMI-ANNUAL CONVENTION OF BUSINESS MEN TO BE HELD HERE.

A New Ordinance Relating to Public Exhibitions and Skating Rinks to be Adopted—Other Business of the Council.

The Convention Will Be Held on January 15th, and Big Preparations For the Delegates Are Being Made—Committees.

The real object for which the Borough Council met last Friday was not accomplished, namely, a decision in the matter of erecting a bell tower and the purchase of a fire bell. Owing to the fact that Councilman Peck had failed to receive all the bids on the same he was not able to report. A plan of the tower was presented by W. T. Kirk, giving the members an idea of the structure. Beside the Mayor there were present Councilmen Valiant, Smith and Schutt and Clerk Arnold.

Collector Spencer reported the receipt for $142.50 received from the court for Hipp's license and the same was received and filed.

Councilman Smith reported for Councilman Peck, stating that all bids were not yet in for the erection of tower and purchase of bell, hence no report could be made. He also reported that no work had been done on the streets during the past week.

Wm. N. Pangborn made application for an auctioneer's license to April 15th, 1896, and on account of the short time Mr. Valiant offered a resolution that the same be granted for the sum of $12.50. The resolution prevailed.

The clerk then read an ordinance, which is an amendment to the bicycle ordinance. It provides that no bicycle or wheel shall be ridden on the sidewalks of the borough by any person over eight years of age, except a baby carriage or one used by invalids. The ordinance was placed on first and second readings and laid over for final passage. The ordinance relating to shows, circuses, skating rinks, etc., was repealed and a substitute offered in its place which provides that a license must be secured from the Mayor, the same to be issued at his discretion and not to exceed $200 in cost. The clerk is to receive 50 cents as a fee for the issuance. Violations of it provide for a penalty of $20, ten days, or both and costs. In substance the ordinance is as follows:

"No person, corporation or association shall have, make, give or exhibit in the borough of North Plainfield any entertainment, theatrical performance, circus, show, exhibition or device of any kind whatsoever for money or gain, nor shall combine the selling or vending of any article or thing with any such performance, circus, show exhibition or device, nor shall open or keep any skating rink in said borough without first obtaining a license therefor."

The ordinance passed on first and second readings and was laid over for final passage.

The Mayor then appointed Dr. J. H. Carman a member of the Board of Health for four years, the same to date from January 15th, 1896, when his present term will expire.

There being no further business to come before the council an adjournment was made. A special meeting will be held at an early date, when the bids for erecting a fire tower and the purchase of a bell will be considered Plainfield is growing to be quite a popular city in which to hold conventions and next week the seventeenth semi-annual convention of the Retail Merchants Association of New Jersey will be added to the already long list of those held in this city. This association is composed mainly of the grocers of the State who were instrumental in its organization. The date on which the convention is to begin is Wednesday, January 15th, and it is hoped that all necessary business can be transacted in the one day. The retail merchants from all over the State will be represented, three delegates at large from each local association, and one delegate for each fifty members. Other dealers, besides those in local associations, have been invited and will be entitled to all the privileges except voting at the business meeting of the association.

The first instalment of delegates is expected to arrive on Tuesday night and arrangements have been made for them at the Hotel Grenada and the City Hotel. The delegates will register at rooms No. 212, 213 and 214, second floor, Babcock building.

The executive committee will meet on Tuesday evening at 7:30 o'clock in the Babcock building and next morning at 8 o'clock the Secretary's committee will meet in the same place.

The convention proper will open at 10 o'clock in room B, in the Babcock building. Mayor Alex Gilbert will deliver the opening address. The business meeting will then follow and officers for the ensuing year elected. Lunch will be served to the delegates at noon in the same building. Another business session will follow. In the evening, a grand banquet will be held in the rooms of the Plainfield Camera Club on the top floor of the Babcock building. P. Ludwig Conde and three other musicians will furnish music during the evening. After the repast, toasts will follow and among the subjects will be "Legislation," "Insurance" and "Trade Interests."

Of course, the gathering together of such a large number of men necessitates considerable preparation, and the committee of arrangements in charge has been thorough in all its work. The chairman of this committee is J. Augustus Smith and his assistants are F. W. Dunn, James Clawson, R. W. Barnes and Charles M. Ulrich. The committee which will look after the reception of the delegates consists of George W. Rockfellow, chairman; J. M. Dunn, B. D. Newell, H. A. Weber, F. Westphal, Edward White, Garrett Q. Packer, John A. Thickstun, E. H. Holmes, L. B. Woolston, J. W. Van Sickle, Frank W. Jones and George W. Eddy. A committee, composed of Harry W. Marshall, James Clawson and George G. Stevens, will look after the entertainment of the guests.

A large number of delegates are expected.

APPEAL TO CHRISTIAN PEOPLE.

Workers Wanted for the Revival Meetings Next Week.

To the Christian people of Plainfield.—

1.—We call your attention to the fact that this is not a movement of the young people alone. They have this time placed themselves in the hands of the committee, and done very valuable preliminary work. They are ready to continue to labor with others, but have no thought but that this is a combined effort of all Christians.

2.—Because no evangelist has been engaged to conduct the meetings, we trust that no one will consider less interest in them. Firmly believing that God will honor the faith and work of His people, we make an earnest appeal to all who earnestly desire a revival although we present you no human name for a sign, we confidently ask for volunteers in that Name which is above every name. Instead of looking to an evangelist for leading, we claim the promised guidance of the Holy Spirit. Let this, and the notices read in the several pulpits tomorrow be considered as a personal and urgent invitation to every Christian to work.

3.—That the minds of the people may be as little diverted as possible, we suggest that Christians make no social engagements, which they can possibly avoid. Attend the services yourself and do what you can to secure the presence of others. Cancel every other engagement, and consider this the only binding one.

4.—Believing in the efficacy of prayer, we urge upon you that the coming Sabbath be observed as a day of prayer for the meetings to come. Let the congregations pray in the public worships, the Sunday-schools pray in their sessions, let families pray at their alter, and in the privacy of his closet let each Christian pray. Believing that that this movement is of God, and that it will receive the seal of His approval, we are

Yours sincerely,

C. R. Barnes, Com.

Kappa Delta Phi.

The regular meeting of Kappa Delta Phi was held yesterday afternoon. The meeting was called to order by Charles Noble, president. After the executive session, at which the most important business was transacted, the society adjourned to the chapel where the programme was carried out. The programme was a debate, the subject being "Resolved, That John Brown Should Be Considered as a Hero and Not as a Fanatic." The affirmative side of the argument was upheld by Wilbur F. Cornwell, principal, and J. Hazlewood Craig, second. The negative was held by Charles Noble, principal, and Henry Eggerding, second. After the debate was over the judges, consisting of Ernest Swayze, Charles M. Dolliver and Wm. C. Buell, gave the decision in favor of the negative. At the next meeting, Jan. 17th, the subject will be a novel one, at which each member of the society will read a funny story. The programme for the meeting on Jan. 24th will be a talk on various countries of the world. J. Hazlewood Craig was elected president for the coming month, and Henry Eggerding appointed programme committee.

Constructing a Dynamo.

J. VanEps, of Park avenue, is now constructing a dynamo of his own design. It contains no changes of importance, however. It will be used for gold and silver plating and for experimental work. It will generate sufficient current for one sixteen candle power lamp.

CHINESE VENTRILOQUISM.

A Performance That Was Realistic Enough to Settle the Audience.

A man who witnessed the performance gives the following description of what a ventriloquist in China did:

The ventriloquist was seated behind a screen, where there were only a chair, a table, a fan and a ruler. With the ruler he rapped on the table for silence, and when everybody had ceased speaking there was suddenly heard the barking of a dog. Then a man began to scold and a woman spoke. She had been waked by the dog and was shaking her husband.

He were just expecting to hear the man said with a yawn, when a child began to cry. To pacify it the mother gave it food; we could hear it drinking and crying as the tears fell. The mother spoke to it soothingly, and then rose to change its clothes.

Meanwhile another child had been wakened and began beginning to make a noise. The father scolded it, while the baby continued crying. By and by the whole family were in the room and a mattress or two and a mouse was heard. It climbed up some vase and upset it. We heard the clatter of the vase as it fell.

Then all was still throughout the house. The regular snore of the ventriloquist, his table, his chair and the ruler.—Philadelphia Times.

HUMAN SELFISHNESS.

A Philosophical Dissertation on Sins of Omission and Commission.

While standing in the street one afternoon, from, say, London to Watford, I meet a man who, I can plainly see, is in the last stage of starvation, and he also tells me he is starving to death. He asks, I refuse, button up my pockets and walk on. A few days later I read in the paper that his body has been found by the wayside. An inquest has been held on it and that the jury has decided that he died of hunger. Had I relieved him when he asked me he might not have died, or, at any rate, not so soon. So that I, to that extent, was responsible for his death. My selfishness helped to kill him. But would any sane person call me guilty of any conduct? Say that I had helped to kill him in the same sense as if I had done so by physical violence. Then I, a fellow pedestrian take me into custody, and, if he would, would any sane magistrate listen to the charge?

Let me put the matter in another way. Is God responsible for sin? In God's eyes, of, say, not relieving the widow, as great as that of robbing the widow? Is "not taking the stranger in" as bad as "making him"? In another and very different sense? Is "not visiting those in prison" as great a wickedness as that of "putting them there, direct or indirect, of their imprisonment?

And yet, according to the view usually taken of our Lord's words on this subject in the twenty-fifth chapter of St. Matthew, it is for such sins—sins of omission and not of commission—that the persons there mentioned will be "cursed" by the Lord and consigned to "everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."—Westminster Review.

Lincoln's Early Sorrows.

His life had its tragedies as well as its touch of romance—tragedies so real and overwhelming that they seemed to all the crudeness and poverty which surrounded him and quickened and intensified the melancholy temperament he had inherited from his father. When a young lad in 1816, when Thomas Lincoln had started to find a farm in Indiana, bidding his wife to ready her children into the wilderness, to return, Nancy Lincoln had taken her boy and girl to a tiny grave, that of her youngest child, and the three had there said goodby to the mother and children had scarcely known, but for whom the mother's grief was so keen that the boy never forgot it. Years after, when he saw his father make a green pine box and put his dead mother into it, and he saw her buried not far from their cabin, without religious prayer. Young as he was, it is said that it was his efforts which brought a parson from Kentucky, three months later, to preach the sermon and conduct the service which seemed to the child a necessary honor to the dead. As sad as the death of his mother had been, another had followed it. Married to Aaron Grigsby in 1826, she had died a year and a half later in childbirth, a death which to her brother must have seemed a repetition of the first.—Ida M. Tarbell in McClure's Magazine.

Champagne.

Lemon Hart, an Englishman, says: "The world's consumption of champagne amounts to about 21,000,000 quart bottles per annum. England is the greatest buyer of the wine, and next to her the United States comes next. Formerly Australians were good customers, but since the great wool depression and the consequent fall in globe they have bought very modestedly. The French care very little for champagne, and in Paris Americans and Englishmen drink about all that is sold for it. The French prefer their cheap still wines from habit and from motives of economy. They are too thrifty a people to indulge in extravagance in eating and drinking. Americans and Britons drink wine, I think, mostly to produce a hilaration of spirits, and they do not care so much, naturally gayety of disposition that they don't need it."—New York Tribune.

Surprising Longevity of a Turtle.

When Mauritius was ceded to the British, in the year 1810, one of the soldiers, who had a liking for natural history, discovered a turtle in the cellar he occupied, which, from ancient authorities said was then 200 years old. The repulsive looking old reptile is still alive and healthy, and bids fair to live to the end of the century, probably the next century. He has enormous strength and can, with apparent ease, carry two large men on his back.—St. Louis Republic.

THE ART OF GIVING.

Dr. Burkhurst Asserts That It Must Be Learned Just as Spelling Is.

"The Passion of Money Getting" is the topic of Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst's paper in The Ladies' Home Journal. In discussing one phase of his theme he says:

A man cannot be trusted to do right in this (the art of giving) or in any other particular till he can do right easily—that is to say, until it has become his habit to do right. Giving cannot be left to impulse any more than spelling can be left to impulse. We have seen what might be called impulsive spellers, and they make just the kind of mistakes we should be unfavorably impressed by. Their impulsiveness in matters of spelling is matched by their impulsiveness in giving. Now the purpose of putting the ability to spell correctly into the mind is not merely handling in the capacity of agent. It is a very common thing. If there is a beggar at the door to whom a penny is to be given, or a gift is asking to the church or the Sunday school where the contribution box is to be passed, or a child is to be sent from its father or mother into the exquisite pain of doing so, and then for the child and parent both to imagine that the child was somehow involved in and disciplined by the penny which changed hands. The child in the Sunday school does not learn to give in that way any more than the child in the spelling class learns to spell by the mere intimation of the lesson that the teacher herself puts into the child's mouth.

We learn to spell by making the spelling our act. We learn to give by making the giving our act. It is hoped that this truism will touch a vibrating chord in the intelligence of parents. Much of the world is full of moneyed men; but, really great as is the amount bestowed in benefaction, it is not great in proportion to the amount that men and women bestow on themselves, and it is not because these people are intentionally sordid and have no heart in their giving. Many years ago, when they were children, their parents imagined that while schooling would be necessary in order to qualify their offspring to read and write, no schooling in particular would be necessary in order to educate them into the far more difficult capability of parting with their own possessions in the interests of and for the bettering of others, safeguarding the lesser, trusting to chance for the greater.

Tom Thumb's Wedding.

Do you remember Tom Thumb's wedding?

It took place in Grace church, not with a sexton masquerading in robes, but with a bona fide clergyman attended by his staff, says Joe Howard in the New York Ledger. Tom was a midget, you know. There was quite as much genuine interest in that incident as there can be in any wedding ceremony, and thousands sought admission only to be disappointed. The women pushed and crowded and jostled. Some stood upon the backs of the pews, and when they grew tired, direct or indirect, of their imprisonment?

And yet, according to the view usually taken of our Lord's words on this subject in the twenty-fifth chapter of St. Matthew, it is for such sins—sins of omission and not of commission—that the persons there mentioned will be "cursed" by the Lord and consigned to "everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."—Westminster Review.

PUGET SOUND SHACKS

PICTURESQUE DWELLINGS THAT FRINGE TACOMA BAY.

Homes Across Whose Threshold the Rent Collector Never Passes—Where It Is Easy For Each Man to Rear and Maintain His Own Castle.

The Arab has his tent, the Kaffir his kraal and the red man his wigwam, but no one of these primitive habitations is more distinctive of the surroundings and surrounding conditions of life than the "shack" of the laborer in the Puget sound region. This lucky unmarried laboring man of the northwest has no implausible boarding master to satisfy weekly. He pays no rent for furnished room. His retired maids does not anticipate with fear and trembling the monthly visit of the landlord, who wants a large percentage of his earnings down on the nail. No. He lives in his own shack, and rent, that bugbear to the poor in eastern cities, is unknown to him.

The shack in itself, a temporary, incomplete, or makeshift residence, is simple and comprehensible. The conditions that gave it birth and make its existence possible are equally simple. A look at and a casting to the church or the Sunday school where the contribution box is to be passed, or a child is to be sent from its father or mother into the exquisite pain of doing so, and then for the child and parent both to imagine that the child was somehow involved in and disciplined by the penny which changed hands. UNEXPECTED WEDDING GIFTS.

Some of Them Were Timely, but One Was Just the Reverse.

Not unfrequently a marriage ceremony has an added air of romance attached to it by the bride's receiving from a known or unknown source a wedding present which was quite unexpected. One or two such authentic cases have occurred, where the lucky wedding parties were thrown into a state of great excitement as a result.

A curiously timed present was that which arrived at the wedding breakfast held in honor of Lord X——'s marriage with Lady M——. The years before Lord X—— was a director of a company which turned out to be a most profitable one, largely owing to the embezzlement of great sums of money by the manager, who escaped to Argentina. Lord Eight-o, altogether, he was soon forgotten, and in a year or two Lord X—— and his fellow directors in part recovered from the blow. As the wedding party sat down to the breakfast a manservant handed Lord X—— an envelope, full almost to bursting point. Opening it, the paper was amazed to find in it notes to the value of £10,000 sent to him by the errant manager, who, according to the private note accompanying the money, had made a very successful speculative hits in the Argentine. As Lord X——'s wealth was not very great the wedding present of £10,000 was an exceedingly welcome one.

Equally curious was the incident which happened in south London some time ago. According to the newspaper reports at the time, about 13 years ago, a young girl, daughter of well to do tradespeople, lost nearly £20, which she had saved out of a very liberal allowance, the money was taken from a drawer in her bedroom, and the thief was never detected. On the girl's wedding morn, however, she received an anonymous letter, stating that the writer was the person who stole her money while she was yet in her teens and inclosing bank notes for the amount with the respectable the amount stolen, with compound interest added. Naturally the bride was delighted, and the anonymous writer was forgiven.

Not always are these unexpected wedding presents of this practical and useful character. A young lady friend of the bridegroom was very much disgusted by receiving at the wedding breakfast a bulky looking parcel which evidently appeared to be a large quantity of letters. Upon the newly married man handed the parcel to his wife to be opened. She opened it and found therein a number of love letters in a girl's handwriting, apparently love letters, written to the bridegroom of the morning. Fortunately the affair was a joke on the part of the bridegroom's friends, but it is needed all his reservations of innocence to calm the natural indignation of the young wife.—Washington Star.

HARRISON ON PATRIOTISM.

Aid In Reinstating the Fourth of July, Honor and Reverence Our Flag.

General Harrison, in writing upon "This Country of Ours" for The Ladies' Home Journal, has this to say regarding Fourth of July and the study of patriotism:

"The old time Fourth of July celebration, with its simple parades and musters, the reading of the Declaration of Independence, that more than supplied the lack of glitter and color in the parade—once the event of the year—went out of fashion. It is always easy to be learned and forgotten. It may be that the speaker was boastful, but a booster is better than an apologist or a mugwump. The Fourth of July, as a patriotic anniversary, was almost lost, and a family picnic day or a baseball day substituted.

"It is coming back, and we ought to aid in reinstating it. The old Declaration has still a pulse in it and a ring to it that does the soul good. Has your boy ever read it? Have you—all of you—in the census takes to be required to get an answer to that question.

"The fathers ought not to be too busy to give some time to patriotism. But, if they are, let the mothers—who are more busy—see that a love of country is cultivated, and that children are early and well made acquainted with the wise, unselfish and heroic characters in our history. In the home, and before the school days come, the foundation should be laid for that sentiment awakened. Do not be ashamed to love the flag or to confess your love of it. Make much of it; tell its history; sing of it. Let more floats carry our colors, and it ought to hang from the windows of all our homes on all public days. Every man should wear colors in the flag for a day in the parade, and every one should rise when a national air is given at a concert or public meeting."

Chinese Tactics.

The Chinese soldiers accepted their fate from the outset, after their first decisive defeats, and the idea of flight has never really entered their minds, their sole preoccupation being to make room for the enemy as he advanced, while keeping up some forms of fighting in relation between the two armies because so well understood before the close of the war that the Japanese commander-in-chief would send word to the Chinese that they would attack such a point at such a time, when the Chinese general would place his main body in a central position, with a small detachment to fire off some cartridges for the honor of the flag, and retire. This was the only fighting done in keeping with Chinese military traditions. The campaign against the Taeping rebels was conducted much on the pro forma system until toward the end. An imperial officer on one occasion, speaking to a foreigner, summed up his own justification in the next action that two people could not go many times running through the same performance. "If they come, I must go."—Blackwood's Magazine.

Sea Salt.

It seems that the sea was made salt in the beginning as a part of the grand design of the Creator to provide for the preservation of evolution which has been going on since the creation. Many distinct species of the organic regime have disappeared as a result of its salinity, and their remains have largely contributed to the growth of continents. The three great factors in accounting for the saltness of the waters of the ocean, by which it becomes the great heat distributor of the globe, are changes of temperature, the winds and salinity. The last mentioned becomes an important factor through the immediate and essential differences of specific gravity and consequent differences of level that it produces in different parts of the ocean through the action of evaporation and rainfall.—Popular Science Monthly.

Art.

Mistress—Well, Mary, what did you think of the pictures at the academy?

Mary—Oh, mum, there was a picture there I could have painted myself. After I'd looked at it for nearly half an hour, but couldn't see no Landseer.—Strand Magazine.

THEATRICAL.

"Hands Across the Sea," Henry Petitt's English melo-drama, which has achieved marked popular success for years, was presented at Lothrop's opera house last evening, and deserved the reception given by the delighted audience, which filled the pretty play house from pit to dome, the "Standing room" sign having been foored out long before 8 o'clock. All theatregoers remember the play as one which makes a great impression, and its stirring features as presented last night were as powerful as ever, as was in evidence by the hearty applause and curtain calls given the interpreters of the drama.—Worcester Post. At Music Hall Friday night.

The public has learned to rely on what Al. G. Field says, and they have also learned that they can look forward to an evening of rare pleasure when they attend his minstrel entertainment. Starting ten years ago, practically unknown to the amusement public, Al. G. Field today stands at the head of the minstrel business. He has never made a statement that could not be sustained. Every year has witnessed some improvement in his company. He is always on the lookout for the best talent and he generally secures it. This year Mr. Field says he has the strongest company of minstrel stars he has ever had. Over 70 people are in the company. The company appears in Music Hall, Thursday, January 23d.

PLAINFIELDERS GN ROOSEVELT.

Dr. Lewis and Mr. Powell Say Children Should Not Be Used as Spies.

The New York Advertiser this morning published interviews with Rev. A. H. Lewis and Aaron M. Powell on the charges that Police Commissioner Roosevelt, of New York, is using children as spies to gain evidence of excise law violations. Mr. Powell said:

While sympathizing with President Roosevelt's purpose for diminishing the saloon evil, I should regret the employment of young children regularly in that kind of detective service. If, however, there are children who can be made available as witnesses, who have been, as is so often the case, sent by their parents or others to the saloons, then I see no objection to their testimony being taken by the courts in furtherance of President Roosevelt's laudable object.

Dr. Lewis said:

While I am not a resident of this State, I nevertheless am familiar with the liquor question in New York city, and I must say that the employment of children in such capacity as detectives to secure evidence against saloon men is nothing short of being criminal. The citizens and mothers and fathers should protest against it loudly. I have made a study of the liquor question and that of the social evil, and I am sure that if President Roosevelt is in earnest in having children for such purposes, all I can say is that he has not studied the question very hard.

COMIC OPERA AT CRANFORD.

The Alcæus Society Give a Successful Performance of "Pirates of Penzance."

The second opera presented by the Alcæus Society, of Cranford, of the season of 1895-96, the "Pirates of Penzance," was given on Tuesday at the Opera House before a fashionable and appreciative audience. The cast was as follows:

Richard, a Pirate Chief..... Graham Reed
Samuel, his Lieutenant..... H. R. VanSaun
Frederic, a Pirate Apprentice..... J. T. Brennan
Major-General Stanley, of the British Army..... William Holmes
Edward, a Sergeant of Police.....E. W. Johnson
Mabel, Genera Stanley's Youngest Daughter..... Miss Faith Morse
General Stanley's Daughters.
Edith..... Miss Lucie M. Miller
Kate..... Miss Josie L. Farnsman
Isabel..... Miss M. L. Clark
Ruth, a Piratical "Maid of All Work."..... Mrs. J. F. Olsen
Chorus of General Stanley's Daughters, Pirates, Policemen, etc.

The opera was well presented, a feature being the work of the chorus. J. T. Brennan as Frederic, sang with his usual finished style, and William Holmes, of this city, made a capital Major General and was warmly received. As Mabel, Miss Faith Morse was all that could be desired and sang in excellent taste. E. W. Johnson as the Sergeant, was very droll, and the rest of the cast did themselves credit. The society can well congratulate itself on the success it achieved.

THE OWL CLUB.

It Is Composed of Would-Be After-Dinner Speakers.

After-dinner speaking is a great accomplishment, and some of the young men of this city not being old enough to enter society at present, have decided to prepare for the good time coming. There are eight of the young men who have organized under the name of the Owl Club. Last Saturday evening a meeting was held at the home of one of the promoters, and bylaws for the government of the club were drawn up. There will be no regular officers, but the member at whose home the club meets, will act as toastmaster. The meetings, which are to be held regularly, will consist of an informal banquet, to be followed by the speech making. Every member is expected to respond to a toast given them by the toast master. A large horned owl, stuffed and mounted, was presented to the members of the club as a mate for one already in the possession of the club.

A SUMMER SCENE.

Ladies come the maidens home,
With poppies and wild roses,
Binding clothes as they come,
And blushing like their posies.

Crowned is one merry maid
With coronal of poppy;
Nature has with beauty played,
To make a fashion copy.

Laughter gathers in her eye,
Her every movement blushes;
Earth! she mocks a lover's sigh
With sighing in bindike gushes.

Cupid, should he pass her way,
For lack of strength must tarry;
She will steal his bow away
And hit him rogue to marry.
—Charles T. Lusted in Blackwood's Magazine.

OLD MILITARY LORE.

Regulations That Guided Soldiers In the Sixteenth Century.

"The Pathwaie of Martiall Discipline" (1581), by Thomas St. ...rd, is full of plates and abounds in quaint remarks. Giving the duties of a provost marshal, we find: "He shall according to the lawes punish all offenders with out regard or respect of persons, and in the market place shall set up a pair of gallows, both for the terror of the wicked and for execution upon them that offend the lawes. That he shall not upon all victuals brought to the market a reasonable price, that the seller and the buyer may reasonably live by it." In the office of coronel (or colonel—the two terms seem to have been introduced at the same time, but the latter became the favorite), after mentioning his appointing of as many captains as is needful, giving 300 men to a company, "which is a convenient number," for if the men are divided into smaller companies too much money would be spent on the officers. With regard to the lieutenant, he is to be "of great experiences, qualities and behavior." The coronel shall also examine the selections that the captains have made of all the officers throughout their companies, and if they be such as ought to be, or not much worse he may allow them, and not otherwise."

Before firearms drove out all other weapons it was an object to equalize the strength of the company, "the shot" (as the musketeers came to be called) supplementing the pikes. All the combinations of methods of drilling which are given by various authors illustrate this; thus for the defense from horsemen: "Place the ranks of pikes every way, your shot next unto them, your bills (or halberds) and ensign in the midst, the pike ends rammed down the better to resist the enemy."

All kinds of dodges are taught—thus: "If in sight of the enemy, which is superior in numbers, the front rank of pikes shall spread out so as to admit the men of the second rank in the open spaces. But if the enemy manifest a real intention of attacking, and there be no place of refuge near, the second rank shall return to their places, and all shall serve close together. The shot shall be placed in the vowarde and rearward so that they may skirmish and retire as occasion serveth."—Gentleman's Magazine.

White House of the Confederacy.

Within a short time the old home of Jefferson Davis in Richmond will be thrown open to the public as a Confederate museum. The "White House of the Confederacy," as it has been called, has been the property of the city for many years and has recently been used as a schoolhouse. A room in the house will be assigned to each of the states erected for the exhibition of relics, and in addition there will be a large room for a general museum and one for a library. The first of the state collections—that of Georgia—has been received. It was presented to the committee by Mr. Jo Hoxie on the eighty-sixth birthday of President Davis, June, 1894. Among the relics are the cape, gauntlets and sword of General Lee; the plumes from General Stuart's hat; the spyglass used by General Beauregard at the battle of Manassas, and the collections from the various soldiers' homes established throughout the south, including the Lee Camp Soldiers' home collection, which contains, in addition to many and interesting relics, the skin of Stonewall Jackson's charger. There are also a number of manuscripts and private papers.—New York Tribune.

Shortening the Time.

Friend—Doesn't the journey to and from the country every day seem very long?

Mr. Subnit—Long? It's too short. When I take the train in the morning, I know I've got to pinch in and work like a horse the moment the train reaches the city. That makes the journey seem too short, doesn't it?

"I presume it does. But how about the journey back?"

"Well, I always remember after I start that I've forgotten something my wife wanted particularly, so that ride is always over too soon."—Pearson's Weekly.

Not So Awfully Superior.

Paleface—Why don't you get a civilized name for yourself, now that you have become a civilized Indian?

Noble Red Man—Ugh! What your name?

Paleface—My name is Iglehart.

Noble Red Man (with crushing sarcasm)—Ugh! Iglehart! Heap good! Injun's name Eagle Heart! Heap bad!—Chicago Tribune.

SCOTCH PLAINS REVIVAL.

It Will Be Continued Another Week and Franklin Must Wait.

Rev. Arthur Crane, of Carleton avenue, was taken ill Friday night and was unable to continue the revival services at Scotch Plains Saturday and Sunday. The Scotch Plains people had telegraphed to Franklin, New Hampshire, where Mr. Crane was to hold revival meetings this week, asking that he be allowed to remain in Scotch Plains another week as the revivals were so successful. The New Hampshire committee replied that everything was all prepared for Mr. Crane's coming and they did not want to wait. So on Sunday, a committee from Scotch Plains went to Mr. Crane's home and there asked him to remain this week. He finally consented to stay.

DELICIOUS THINGS TO EAT

PREPARED AND SERVED BY PRETTY AND PLEASANT YOUNG WOMEN.

Attractions in the Window Were Just an Inkling of What Was Inside in the Line of Things to Satisfy the Inner Man—Workers

It is not an uncommon thing in New York to see pancakes baked in the window of a restaurant, but it is a novel sight for Plainfield, and the novelty of it attracted many to the oyster, waffle, and welsh rarebit supper that the Dorcas Circle of King's Daughters gave in the Hart building on Park avenue Tuesday. When the stranger ventured inside the door there was no use of trying to escape until he had purchased his supper there. Japanese screens separated the kitchen from the supper room, and in the latter were five tables, pleasing to the eye with their covering of spotless linen and silver and china dishes. Each table was presided over by two young ladies. Mrs. Samuel Clark and Miss Pangborn were in charge of one, another was under the supervision of Miss Ethel Green and Miss Alice Haynes, while Miss Lulu French and Miss Artine Crane were waitresses at a third. The fourth was looked after by Miss Elizabeth Cornwell and Miss Langdon, and the other was under the charge of Miss Etta Blish and Miss Little.

The room itself presented a very pretty appearance. Red and white bunting was draped and festooned in an artistic manner about the sides of the room, while a bunch of streamers from the corners of the room met in the centre of the ceiling. Parlor lamps were placed around the sides of the room and cast a soft radiance on the interior, while the electric lights, softened by pink shades, added to the artistic effect.

The decorating of the room was done under the charge of a committee composed of Miss Louise Pangborn, Mrs. Samuel Clark and Mrs. Barry Lowrie.

In one of the windows was a pancake griddle, heated by gas, and here Miss Nellie Langdon, in cap and apron, turned and re-turned the cakes.

A fortune teller's tent occupied the other window and a beautiful Gypsy maiden, impersonated by Miss Clara Woltman, told fortunes in a most scientific and up-to-date manner.

The feature of the supper was, of course, the good things which were cooked by the young ladies themselves and the verdict of all was that they were simply delicious, especially the waffles. In the kitchen, where they were prepared, Miss Maud Lowrie exercised general control, assisted by Miss Landon, Mrs. Harry Lowrie and Miss Brown. The delicious Welsh rarebits were prepared by the experienced hand of Mrs. Charles Tyrrell. Creamed oysters were successfully looked after by Miss Langdon and Miss Bowers.

The supper was a great success, financially as well as socially, and Miss French, the cashier, was kept busy most of the evening. All the returns have not yet been made, but already the receipts far exceed the expenses.

An Entertainment Arranged.

The members of John Hand Camp, No. 38, S. of V., at their meeting last Monday, decided to hold an entertainment Wednesday evening, February 12th, in honor of Lincoln's birthday. It will be held in their rooms and invitations have been sent to both G. A. R. Posts and the Woman's Relief Corps to attend. Captain Willard S. Sutton installed Fred Sutton as Quartermaster and Arthur Drake as Principal Musician, last evening. The meeting was well attended and the new officers assumed their several positions with credit. By vote, the Camp joined the Death Benefit Association and will at once become members.

Those that went from Plainfield to New Haven to spend the week are Mrs. F. H. Andrews, Miss Gertrude Andrews, Mrs. C. F. Abbott, Miss Florence Abbott, and Miss Florence Waring.

MR. PITNEY INDIGNANT.

Accuses a Lawyer of Criminal Abuse of Confidence.

Vice-Chancellor Pitney in Chancery Chambers in Jersey City Tuesday criticised Counsellor George H. Bruce, of Cranford, for alleged unprofesional conduct. It was during the hearing of a case in which Counsellor Bruce formerly figured as counsel for the defendants. The parties to the suit, which was for the foreclosure of a mortgage, are Robert S. Bisset, administrator of the estate of the late Mary Baker, plaintiff, and Jennie S. Mead and Frank Mead, defendants.

Counsellor Carrick, in his argentum for the plaintiff, produced a letter from Mrs. Mead to Counselor Bruce in which she confessed that the case was against her.

"Where did you get that letter?" inquired the Vice-Chancellor.

Counsellor Carrick said Counsellor Bruce gave it to him after he had been retained as counsel for the Meads.

"I never heard of such conduct," declared the Vice-Chancellor. "A lawyer betraying the confidence reposed in him by his client! This is scandalous.

High School Notes.

The regular meeting of the Kappa Delta Phi Society will be held Friday afternoon, January 24th, at 3 o'clock sharp. The programme will be extemporaneous speeches by the members upon the government, habits and social life of the people of the different nations of the globe.

The military company will soon take up the drill as regular work in the Columbia Cycle Academy, which has been obtained for that purpose. This year particular attention will be given to the study of the manual of arms. The boys are greatly pleased with the prospects of drilling this year during the cold and disagreeable weather in a closed and warmed place.

The Junior class have been granted three days of grace in which to finish the compositions which were due on Wednesday of this week.

Death of Mrs. Moore.

Mrs. Moore, aged eighty-one years, and widow of the late William R. Moore, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Ryno, Tuesday evening about 7:20). Her advanced age, and a general breaking down seemed to have been the cause of death. Mrs. Moore was very well-known in this city and has for years resided with her daughter. She possessed many excellent qualities and was a thorough Christian. Notice of funeral will be given later.

After Event of Confusion.

An enjoyable evening was spent at the Plainfield Catholic Club house last evening by the actors that took part in the comedy, "Confusion," the committee in charge of the play, and the choir. After a bountiful repast, the rest of the evening passed very pleasantly with recitations, songs and dancing. About twenty-eight were present. Prof. O'Reilly furnished the music.

IMPERIAL OF THE C. B. C.

A BORROUGHITE'S SOLILOQUY ABOUT THE PROPOSED CONSOLIDATION

A Man Has But to Meet the Invincible Newt. Spencer and His Favoritism for the Consolidation is Soon Dispelled.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—I am in favor of annexation to Plainfield. Anything to escape from the iron rule and terror of Boss Spencer and the Cracker Barrel Club. Even the brainy and polished Reed, of the Park Club, bends and fawns, for votes, before Spencer, the Affable, Doud of sound, hard sense, Goodwin, the Jolly, Buell, the Genius, and the gay and bright band of followers—notwithstanding trousers bagging at the knees.

What I want, is low-voiced, refined officials, neatly and stylishly dressed—pants creased with a mathematical nicety.

The city of Plainfield furnishes just the kind—civil engineers—even if they don't know how to build sewer beds.

The Cracker Bar Club do not underestimate the great force of my influence in this community.

The members know I am in favor of annexation. They wish to win my support—harsh, cruel office-holders opposing the intelligence of the age.

Note their treatment of me. Citizens arouse yourselves!!!

Whenever I enter the headquarters of the "C. B. C." the High and Mighty Spencer hands me a cigar, Doud dilates on manhole covers without ventilators. Goodwin mentions the North Avenue sewer. Buell speaks of annexation as a scheme for the vicious Democratic party, and the rest tell me I am willing to sell my home and country.

In reply to their various appeals I say: "Let us join the city and pay high tribute, in taxes or sentiments, or both, to Plainfield's brilliant banker-mayor and dazzingly scientific officials—go and see the sewer beds." Then we all join hands and sing "Hail to the Chief!" the Honorable Peter Emmons enters the door; contention stops and the "C. B. C." adjourns with a round of jolly good fellowship.

I no longer favor annexation. I was born in Somerset county and hope to die there.

Yours truly,
Chatham Lochinvar.

MISSION WORKERS CONVENE.

A Brief Conference Being Held in Grace P. E. Church Today.

The Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions of the Upper Division of the State of New Jersey met Wednesday at 11 o'clock in the Grace P. E. church. There were about two hundred delegates present. Rev. M. M. Rodman, rector of the church called the meeting to order and introduced Miss Emery, the general secretary of the Auxiliary, who gave a very interesting talk on missions. An adjournment was then made to the chapel for lunch.

The afternoon session was called at 1:30 when the delegates had the pleasure of listening to an address by Mrs. Sybil Carter, of New York, who told of her grand work among the Indians.

The meeting closed at 3 o'clock. Those assisted in entertaining include Mrs. D. T. VanBuren, Mrs. J. W. Rhinehart, Mrs. E. T. VanBuren, Mrs. L. G. Timpson, Miss Betts, Mrs. Gilford Mayer and Miss Crane.

State Convention of the Y. M. C. A.

The twenty-seventh annual State convention of the Young Men's Christian Association will be held in Jersey City on February 13th, 14th, 15th and 16th. A large number of delegates are expected and elaborate arrangements have been made to receive them. The programme is of unusual merit.

Instead of each association in the State making a separate report, Wm. Murray, of this city, will combine them and give one joint report of all the associations.

Y. M. C. A. Entertainment Postponed.

On account of the evangelistic meetings that are being held in this city, the next entertainment in the Y. M. C. A. Star Course has been postponed. The Amphion Ladies' Quartette was to have appeared here on January 27th, but will now come on some date in March instead.

HOLD ON ETERNAL LIFE.

IT HAS MUCH TO DO WITH YOUR EXISTENCE OF TODAY.

Rev. C. L. Goodrich Delivers an Enthusiastic Appeal to All People to Live Better Lives—Interest Continues.

There was an evident deep interest in the revival service at the Methodist church last Tuesday. The opening prayer was offered by Dr. Barnes. Rev. C. L. Goodrich then read the tenth chapter of the Gospel of John, beginning at the seventeenth verse.

A portion of his remarks follow: What a significant word "life" is. It is a most fascinating study, of interest to all men. Life, with all its cares, troubles, hopes, defeats, aspirations and encouragements, is a wonderful study. It deals with all kinds of men and women, and my chief wish is to bring to you an important theme. Jesus Christ says He came to bring life. No other teacher has claimed this, but there is still something better, it is eternal life. My text is first Timothy, 6:12—"Lay Hold on Eternal Life." What is eternal life? You don't want to think it is something for the hereafter. To know God is life eternal. When Admiral Farragut was at Mobile Bay he was perplexed, not knowing whether to go ahead or not. He prayed to God for help, and immediately he heard a small voice telling him to go forth. He obeyed and won a victory. A young girl who had been naturally fretful and impatient, was converted and everything seemed so different to her.

The circumstances at home were the same, but she was changed. A boy giving his heart to God becomes in reality another boy. He has eternal life. There are learned graduates of our universities who have said you cannot know God, and yet there are scholars in our primary and grammar schools who know better.

Death comes, what then? We want to live on, but not in misery. Does anyone know what will happen after death? We are sure of one thing and that is when we come to die we will wish that we laid hold on eternal life. I once read of a miser who had died and was afterward found clutching a bag of money, trying to take it with him. A dying girl's request was that her hair be not disturbed, and after death a large amount of money was discovered in her hair. It was impossible for her to take the money with her. The time will come when it will be too late to grasp eternal life. It is something to be secured as soon as possible.

My brother wake and catch the rope of salvation that is thrown to you. Some people are offended if you speak to them about their soul's salvation. Except ye be converted, ye cannot enter the kingdom of Heaven. How shall we get eternal life? Jesus Christ is the great Physician. Trust yourself to Him. Decide you will do as He directs. That is eternal life. Any little child can lay hold of that great truth when theologians fail to grasp it.

At the close of Mr. Goodrich's remarks, P. H. Andrews took charge and a special consecration service was held. Several signified their desire to become Christians by rising to their feet or raising their hand. Mr. Andrews gave a brief earnest talk, which was followed by several short prayers. Those present, mostly Christians, seemed to feel more than ever the necessity of preparing themselves for a united effort in the salvation of souls. The service closed in the usual manner, all feeling spiritually refreshed by the earnest words spoken.

For the Public Schools.

City Treasurer Alex. Titsworth this afternoon received a check for $16,101.75 from County Treasurer B. Holmes as Plainfield's share of the fund for the support of the public schools. The money will be turned over to the Board of Education.

LITTLE LEGISLATION SO FAR.

The Senate Receives a Few Bills—The House at Once Adjourns.

Both houses of the Legislature at Trenton adjourned Tuesday afternoon until next Monday night. They convened immediately after the parade of the Rupublican clubs and were in session only a few minutes. The House did no business whatever. In the Senate during the morning session four bills were introduced.

Senator Voorhees presented in behalf of George B. Chicknor, of Somerville, an engraving of the "State Senate of 1859," and moved the adoption of a resolution thanking Mr. Chicknor for the gift, and ordering that the engraving be framed and hung on the Senate walls. The resolution was adopted.

Bill No. 1, introduced by Senator Voorhees, was advanced to second reading. The object of the bill, as explained by the Senator, is to simplify the wording of enactments, and Arabic numbers will hereafter be used to designate titles of bills instead of Roman numbers, and certain unnecessary verbiage will be omitted, so as to make the principal words of a section follow immediately after the section number.

The railroad taxation bill, introduced by Assemblyman Queen Monday night, stands little chance of enactment with this Legislature. Unless Mr. Queen makes a vigorous and able fight it may not even come out of committee.

THEATRICAL.

The Al. G. Field Big White Minstrels will be at Music Hall one night only, Thursday, January 23d. This season Mr. Field has made a radical change in his minstrel performance. He has entirely done away with the old-time negro first part, presenting instead a magnificent scenic spectacle entitled "The Court of Momus." This is a scene of regal splendor. It is a representation of the Court of Momus, with the singers of the company costumed as courtiers. A party of modern tourists pay a visit to the Court, and this introduces the comedians and dancers. For the delectation of the Court and the entertainment of the visitors, the courtiers render their superb ballads; returning the compliment, the dancers and comedians give the most finished modern minstrel performance.

Mrs. Elwell's Lectures.

The second of the course of lectures by Mrs. Maria Huntington Elwell was given to a large and appreciative audience in Mrs. Kirtland Meyer's parlors yesterday afternoon at four o'clock.

Mrs. Elwell's subject was "Lowell as Known by His Letters." A sketch of the poet's life was the thread on which were strung pearls from his correspondence revealing his tenderness and truth, his courage and his boyishness, his humor and his modesty, his reverance and his faith. The great author was presented not only in the light of poet and man of letters, but as a statesman, diplomatist and patriot, Lowell was shown to be a symmetrical and commanding figure.

Mrs. Elwell's next and final lecture of this course will be at the same time and place next Tuesday, and her subject will be the "Ethics of Shakespere, as illustrated by Lear.

MORE LECTURES TO COME

DR. RIGGS SO SUCCESSFUL THAT HIS TALKS WILL BECOME PERMANENT.

His Address Last Night Was on the English Power in India and the Sepoy Rebellion—The Conditions Thereof

"English power in India, and the Sepoy Rebellion," was the topic of the lecture delivered Tuesday by Dr. James F. Riggs in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church. There are three lectures still to be given in the University Extension course on the Eastern Question, and there is talk of forming a permanent organization for the purpose of continuing the plan which has been found so successful and helpful.

Dr. Riggs began his lecture by telling of the condition of India at the beginning of the rule of the East India Company; utterly different customs and languages prevailing in different parts of the country, the caste spirit very strong, and the Mohammedans and Hindoos strongly opposed to one another. In addition to the English troops under the control of the East India Company, they maintained a number of regiments consisting of natives officered by Englishmen. These were known as Sepoy regiments. The men who commanded these regiments knew little of Eastern ways, and had no sympathy with their men, who served merely for pay. They resented the entrance of the English, and looked longingly back at the time of the empire of the Great Moguls. The immediate occasion of the mutiny was the arrival of a consignment of English rifles.

The men were obliged to bite the ends from the cartridges before using them, and the idea became current among the Sepoys that they were greased with a mixture of hog's grease and beef suet. This was against the religious principles of both Mohammedans and Hindoos. May 10, 1857, there was a general outbreak. The English officers had no control over their native troops, who shot down men, women and children alike. Then followed forty-eight days of unstrained violence. Through the prompt and vigorous action of Sir John Lawrence, Lahore was saved from the rebels, but at Cawnpore a horrible tragedy was enacted, the wives and daughters of the Englishmen being massacred in a manner almost too shocking to be believed. General Havelock and his devoted men arrived just twenty four hours too late. At Lucknow, in the meantime, Sir Henry Lawrence was endeavoring, for five dreadful months, to hold the Residency against the enemy. General Havelock and Sir Colin Campbell marched to his relief but they were obliged to evacuate the Residency. Later, however, the city was retaken. The rebels found themselves beaten at every point by an English force far inferior in numbers, and all at once there was a general collapse of the rebellion. And nearly every Sepoy now insisted that he had been friendly to the English all the time.

The English government now abolished the East India Company, and the Queen became the direct sovereign, under the title of "Empress of India." It is to be hoped that the now enlightened policy now pursued by the English will prevent another such outbreak from ever taking place.

Well-known Hackman Dead.

James McCormick, the well known hackman, died last Tuesday at his home on Linden avenue, from a complication of diseases, which date back to September last. He had been driving a hack for the past fifteen years, during which time he was employed by Dunster & Son, and Blair & Day. He was about forty years of age and leaves a wife and four children.

Little Tots Who Were Killed.

The names of the two Hungarian boys who were killed by the Central train at Bound Brook yesterday morning were Mike Jacob, jr., aged three years and six months, and Mike Anyzelik, aged four years and three days. County Physician Wagener granted a burial permit.

Not a few who read what Mr. Robert Rowls, of Hollands, Va., has to say below will remember their own experience under like circumstances: "Last winter I had la grippe which left me in a low state of health. I tried numerous remedies, none of which did me any good, until I was induced to try a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The first bottle of it so far relieved me that I was enabled to attend to my work, and the second bottle effected a cure." For sale at 25 and 50 cents per bottle at Reynold's pharmacy, Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, manager.

BEDS AS THEY SHOULD BE.

Some Points About Making a Well Arranged Down Pie Bloomers.

How few persons there are who really know how to make a bed well. Perhaps in these days of cycling and public speaking women have not much time to look after this detail of home life, but it is, after all, the details which go to make up the total of home comfort, and what more important for one's comfort and health than one's own "dodo," as the French children say?

Nothing is more delicious than to creep wearily to bed and inhale the delicate fragrant from clean water and oxygen. How restful to place the weary head on pillows that are thoroughly shaken, and how comfortable it is to feel that the bedclothes that are satisfactory, not too thick in one place and entirely untucked in another.

Out of 100 housemaids 99 will throw the bedclothes down over the foot of the bed, then throw them up again in a few minutes. This should never be permitted. Every article should be taken off and laid separately over a chair, and a strong current of air should be allowed to circulate through the room before the clothes are replaced. Mattresses should be turned daily, and from end to end, as this insures its being worn more evenly, and it will not slip in the middle, which spoils the looks of any bed, no matter how beautiful its cover.

The new fashion of steel-chain springs is a great improvement on the old cord style spring, which, when once taken up stairs, was bound to remain there a long time. The careful housewife will cover the springs of her beds with linen, so that it may be taken off and washed. This saves the mattress all chance of rust marks from the metal. Clean newspapers will answer the same purpose.

It is only the hardiest sleepers who can enjoy their slumbers when, by a scanty supply of sheet, the blanket scratches face and neck, or feet and knees. Still more worse, especially where the barbarous custom of steeping two in a bed holds good. One dreads to think how much the other exhausts strength in clinging to them for dear life, and neither is comfortable.

A simple remedy for this discomfort is to place one blanket between sheet and bed. In this way there is a double advantage—less weight on the shoulders and plenty of chance for a firm tucking up. Good housewives will invite their guests to bring three blankets on a bed, to turn down a great piece, giving you six on your shoulders and not one sufficiently tucked in on the sides.

A restless child might be prevented from many a cold if blankets were placed across the foot. It is the careful watch of detail in home life that makes it differ from a hotel, and nothing is more satisfactory than a well made bed.—New York Herald.

A BLOOD RED LAKE.

Peculiarity Manifested by a Sheet of Water In Switzerland Periodically.

Lake Moral, in Switzerland, has a quaint habit of turning blood red every few years or three times every ten years. It is a pretty lake, like most of the sheets of water in that picturesque country, and its peculiar freak is attributed to a deputation to celebrate the slaughter of the Burgundians under Charles the Bold on June 21, 1476. But the French say that it blushes for the conduct of the Swiss, who in that battle gave the Burgundians no quarter.

This phenomenon, of course, has its legend. The Burgundians in the lake, who catch enormous fish called allures, that weigh between 25 and 40 kilograms, say when they see the waters of the lake reddening that it is the blood of the Burgundians. As a matter of fact some of the bodies of the Burgundians killed in the battle were thrown into the lake, while others were tossed into a grave filled with quicklime. This historical recollection angered the Burgundian soldiers of the victorious armies of the republic in 1798 so much that they pulled down the monument raised in honor of their compatriots who fell heroically in that battle, and Henri Martin very justly reproached them for that piece of vandalism.

It would hardly do to attribute the reddening of the waters of the lake to the blood of the soldiers of Charles the Bold. The coloring is due simply to the presence in large quantities of little aquatic plants called by naturalists oscillatoria rubescens. The curious thing is that in the case of Lake Morat is the only lake in which this curious growth is developed, and this peculiarity is beginning to interest scientific men. —New York Sun.

Human Pedigrees.

The effect of pedigree is a great puzzle, because careful attention to it merges fine some families without in this least refining others. A dozen castes in India are equally old and careful of descent, yet only the Brahmins and Kshatriyas are called aristocrats, but if there is any truth in heredity the descendants of the reigning houses, once compelled to exert themselves, should be keen and women of social force. Those houses have kept at the top of the world for nearly 1,000 years. The objection that they have intermarried too much, even if it is true, which is doubtful, except where some taints has entered the blood, would disappear in two generations of plebeian marriages, and the consciousness of ancestry does not of necessity weaken character. We doubt if the popes have, as a body, been duller men than the Hohenzollerns, and who pose have been the picked men of a priesthood counting thousands and have had as many opportunities of action and of displaying themselves as any line of kings.—London Spectator.

Abraham Lincoln's Substitute.

During the earlier days of the war it seems to have been the desire of all prominent men in the country to have a representative in the ranks, and Lincoln was no exception to the rule. At that time there was a minister named Staples in Washington, one of those men who, when told he had a desire to go to the front, Lincoln heard of him, and, after a conference, selected him as his representative, and he proved worthy, for he went to the battle field. He survived the war, and finally died in Stroudsburg, Pa. The inscription on the stone over his grave reads as follows:

J. Summerfield Staples, a private of Company C, 170th Regiment, P. V.; also a member of the Second Regiment, D. C. Volunteers; substitute for Abraham Lincoln.—Philadelphia Ledger.

GOTHAM PEDAGOGY.

THE LIFE AND DUTIES OF A NEW YORK SCHOOLTEACHER.

Good Pay, Short Days and Lots of Vacation—Advantages Over Other Occupations—Male Teachers Have Wider Opportunities Than the Women.

Everything taken into consideration, there are few public offices in the city of New York which are more desirable than those within the public school system. From almost every point of view the life of a schoolteacher is a desirable one in this city. The pay is good, the promotion tolerably rapid, the work not generous, and the hours are better than in almost any other field of labor. About 4,000 teachers are employed in the public school system of New York whose salaries range from $600 to $1,900 a year for women, and from $1,080 to $5,000 for men. Even $5,000 is by no means the limit to the financial ambition of a New York schoolteacher. On the part of the men there are several greater prizes within their reach if they have the proper qualifications and can secure the right influence in the proper school board. For instance, there is the office of assistant superintendent of public schools, of which there are ten, each drawing a salary of about $4,000 a year. Then there is the superintendent's office itself, with its hundred and odd at $7,000, and it has been the goal toward which scores of educators in this and other cities are constantly keeping their eyes. Both the offices of assistant superintendent and superintendent are filled absolutely by the board of education. The assistant superintendent is elected for two years, and, as a matter of practice, has a life position. Then the male teachers can look forward to a promotion to the City college either as an instructor at a salary of $2,500, or a full fledged professor at $4,500.

There are few of the 53 male principals in New York's public schools, however, who do not get more than their salary of $4,000 a year. Almost each one of them gets some little additional pay, as $500 or $800 a year for extra service as an instructor in the evening schools or as clerks of the ward board of school trustees. Some of the principals hold both of these little plums and make a clear $4,000 a year out of the school system. The principals of boys' schools, of course, have their pick in these choice perquisites, but there are so many additional offices to be filled that under male teachers in the public schools come in for a good round share.

The four evening high schools alone give employment to 20 or 30 teachers, each of whom gets anywhere from $3 to $5 a night for his additional work. Then there are some 23 boards of school trustees, each of which has its clerk, who gets pay for the amount of work done, the average mounting up to $400 or $500 a year. Nearly all these clerks are principals of grammar schools.

In the case of women schoolteachers the chances for earning extras are very limited. The maximum salary she can get is $1,900. She starts into the system with a salary of about $600, which is increased $100 until she becomes the principal of a girl's department of a grammar school.

In order to become a schoolteacher in the public schools of New York it is first necessary to get a recommendation from a member of the board of education. This enables the candidate to try a preliminary examination, which, if he is successful, entitles him to be placed upon the eligible list of teachers. After satisfactory work in this capacity for not more than a year the candidate secures a permanent license as a teacher in New York's public schools, and as such is entitled to teach in any part of the city.

This does not mean necessarily that the teacher will immediately find employment. That depends entirely upon the local board of school trustees. The city is divided into 24 school districts, the schools in each of which are controlled by a school board, which is appointed by the board of education. The boards have the selection of all teachers below the grade of principal, these being appointed by the board of education itself. Of course, however, the licensed teacher soon finds an opening and then is in the regular line of promotion.

What has made the school service so attractive to many are the easy hours. Nine-tenths of the salary earners in New York get to work at 9 a. m. and are lucky if they get away by 3 p. m., with half an hour for luncheon. The work of the teacher begins at 9 a. m. and is over, as a rule, by 3 p. m., with an hour for luncheon. Nine-tenths of the salary earners get only 2 weeks out of the 52 in the year for a vacation, and they work 6 days in the week at that. The schoolteachers get a vacation of 13 weeks in 52 and draw full pay during that time. Besides, they work only 5 days in the week and have all holidays. It has been estimated that the schoolteachers of New York work less than 200 of the 365 days in the year.

If a schoolteacher is to rise in the calling, however, the work does not end with school hours. Studies in pedagogy and advanced education must be kept up at home. The work is not so hard, however, or the pay so poor as to induce many to resign. In fact, it has become the goal toward which professional teachers never die and never resign."—New York Tribune.

A Health Fulsimi.

Mrs. St. Hill is a woman who has made of palmistry something more than a means of amusing an idle crowd or frightening a credulous one. She has studied it with reference to its medical side and has proved the connection between brain and hand. The London hospitals, asylums for idiots and the blind —yes, even Hanwell—all have opened their doors to her. From wax impressions made of the hands of the inmates she has learned that each disease brings its own sign on the hand.—London Letter.

IMPURE FOODS.

Some of the Many Things We Eat Than Are Not Cooked.

A recent report of the dairy food commissioner of Pennsylvania names so many food products which are adulterated as to raise a query as to what is not adulterated. Among the many impure things sold are allspice, which often is mainly composed of ground and roasted cocoanut shells; baking powder; beef, wine and iron prepared as a tonic; butter, buckwheat flour, candy, catchup, cider, cheese, cinnamon, cloves—the latter made largely from ground cocoanut shells, the odor and taste of cloves being scarcely perceptible; coffee —consisting chiefly of coffee screenings or damaged coffee, but sold at a high price as a pure article; fresh "Java" made from wheat and barley hulls, roasted with sugar and containing no coffee; codfish not codfish at all—merely cheap dried fish; cream of tartar adulterated with flour; flaxseed adulterated with starch; fruit "butters," such as apple butter, peach butter, etc., very seldom pure, being adulterated with starch waste and salicylic acid; the same is true of grated pineapples; ginger adulterated with ash, rice hulls, rice flour and cayenne pepper; lard; maple sugar and syrup, commercial glucose thinned with about 20 per cent of water; mixed spices; orange juice, lemon oil, lemon phosphate, molasses, mustard, olive oil, pepper, vinegar, vanilla extract, all kinds of preserves, extract of strawberries and tea.

To add to the deception a few apple seeds are scattered through the so called fruit jams, or timothy or other seeds are added to the mixture to represent raspberry, strawberry, etc. The production of artificial cream is particularly common in confections. Indigo, tumeric, annotto, logwood and cochineal are used in great quantities, and are probably not harmful; arsenic, copper and lead are very injurious, but are not now used as much as in former times, before sanitary officials made such persistent attacks on them. Milk and milk products are often colored. Annotto is very commonly used by dairymen to give a rich color. This in itself annotto is probably harmless, but it produces deceptive results.—New York Post.

ODD BILLIARD FACTS.

Making a Table in a Day—The Balls Possessed In Incubators.

A billiard table can be built in 24 hours if carte blanche is given to the manufacturer, but he prefers to have time to get the right effects from one piece of wood. The wood is kept seasoned for a period of nearly seven years. Rich, deep Spanish mahogany is used, pollard oak, ebony and satin wood.

Tables are not always covered in green. Blue is sometimes used and a queen olive green. Prince Leopold was the first to make use of the latter color, and olive green is known today in the billiard world as Prince Leopold's color.

The balls must be well seasoned before they are used for play. Manufacturers have incubators in which to store them that they may undergo the drying process. Some incubators will hold fully 3,000 balls. When they are first made, they are "green." Solid ivory is the only satisfactory material of which to make them; "artificial balls" (those made of composition) are much heavier and do not wear well. English makers, to give the red balls a perfect color, steep them in specially prepared acid, these described as the "guardsman's bath." This is extracted from the old coats of Tommy Atkins, and for billiard balls it is the finest scarlet dye known.—New York World.

A Brave Chinese Officer.

Huang Tsu-Lien, who was a returned American student, was killed before the surrender of Wei-Hai-Wei. He was first lieutenant of the Peiyang cruiser Tsi-Yen, having succeeded the late Shen Shou Ch'ang, another returned American student, who was killed while commanding the Tsi-Yuen in the first naval action of the late war at the mouth of the Yalu river. Korea, July 25, 1894, owing to the nowardice of his subsequently decapitated captain, Fong Peh-Kien. During the fighting at Wei-Hai-Wei Lieutenant Huang Tsu-Lien was badly wounded and was therefore advised to leave his ship and go to Chefu for treatment. This he resolutely refused to do, declaring that "his duty to the emperor demanded his remaining at his post." After having had his wounds hastily dressed, the late lieutenant went on with his duties on board, although he had to be supported by an attendant in doing so. Shortly afterward a shot struck his thigh, but he still refused to retire, remaining with his guns. A few minutes after a shell from the enemy's batteries almost annihilated the gallant officer. —Blackwood's Magazine.

Mr. Gradshaw on Fishing.

"I think," said Mr. Gradshaw, "that the talent for fishing, like many other talents, is a gift. No doubt the true fisherman, like the poet, is born, not made. Fishing is a faculty that can be cultivated, like many others; one can learn to cast about with flies and baits and tides and so on, but when it comes to actual contact with the fish there comes in the art of the fisherman. The fact is that some men can catch fish and some can't. I am one of those who cannot; time and again I have sat in a boat alongside of men catching lots of fish and caught none or next to none. But I love to go fishing, all the same."—New York Sun.

Oddities of Sight.

The two eyes really see two objects. If the two forefingers be held, one at the distance of one foot, the other two feet in front of the eyes, and the former be looked at, two phantoms of the latter will be observed, one on each side. If the latter be regarded, two phantoms of the nearer finger will be observed mounting guard, one on each side.

WORDS FROM THE HEART

DR. LEWIS' SOUND OBSERVATIONS ABOUT PROFESSING CHRISTIANS.

It Is Easy to Evade the Pastor and Deacon, but the Eye of the Lord Is On You Continually—Members Should Do Work.

Every seat was taken in the First Methodist church last Friday when the revival services were continued, and there was a marked spiritual interest. More so than at any previous service. A fifteen minute song service, under the direction of David E. Titsworth, and a fervent prayer by Rev. C. L. Goodrich, was a fitting preparation for that which followed. Dr. A. H. Lewis read a portion of the seventh chapter of Matthew, after which he took his text from Romans, eleventh chapter and twelfth verse: "Everyone shall give an account of himself to God." The doctor then said in part:

There is nothing so tender as divine love. The text takes in everyone in this church; everyone in a saloon. I have just as much right to be in a saloon as anyone there tonight. You say it wouldn't look well. It doesn't look well for those that are there now. It's very easy for you to evade your pastor and deacon, drift along and keep a good outside, chat in a flippant way about the meetings, but you can't keep God from knowing what's in your heart. We are always giving an account. Like a great camera, the lense is always pointed at you individually. I want to make you believe that you "shall give an account."

Anyone can float with the tide like a chip, but to stem the current will have to give a sharp account if they don't do more personal work. How many unconverted people have you brought to these meetings? If you don t know how to bring them in the Lord will teach you how if you want to learn. If you were going to make $50 you would do some very unpleasant things to secure it If the Christians are not up to your idea of goodness, neither are you. The divine love will not help you if you don't give your heart to God. You are not very good looking when placed alongside of the Ten Commandments.

After a strong appeal to the unsaved the doctor closed his discourse. A beautiful solo, "What Will You do With Jusus?" was rendered by Miss Bessie Blair, assisted by the choir on the chorus.

Dr. Barnes also made a few remarks urging all who felt their need to adjourn to the chapel where an after meeting was held. A very large number attended and the service was especially helpful. Dr. Barnes previously stated that he had received a letter yesterday with no name signed, in which the writer said "They had better stop the meetings now as any time and go into retreat." The doctor said in reply that if the person would make himself known he would be glad to hold a prayer service with him.

Owing to the illness of Rev. J. W. Richagison, the meeting this evening will be conducted by Rev. Dr. W. B. Richards, and the service will be one of great interest.

Regret Mr. Moffett's Retirement.

The Summit Record recently published the following concerning the retirement of Elmore D. Moffett from the County Clerk's office: He is a Democrat and no county in the State has ever had a more efficient or faithful officer. He has held the position for a number of years and is unusually familiar with the details of the entire office, and when the Republican tidal wave of 1894, has found it necessary to provide another place for a tried member of the G.O.P. No charge could be brought against Mr. Moffett and his efficiency is recognized by Republicans and Democrats alike, but he must make room to provide for the faithful.

FOR A COMRADE'S DEATH

SOMERSET COUNTY HAS ANOTHER MURDER TRIAL IN ITS COURTS.

This Time it is a Thirteen-Year-Old Boy Who is Charged With Shooting a Young Friend Through the Back.

The trial of Clinton Jackson, the 13-year old colored boy, charged with the murder of Florence Sullivan, began Wednesday before Judge Magie in the Somerset County Court of Oyer and Terminer. Prosecutor Nelson Y. Dungan, who has just finished the Johnson murder trial, will represent the people, and George W. Anderson will defend.

The story of the murder, which so shocked Somerville last Christmas morning is as follows:

About ten months ago Paul Beardsley, a prosperous farmer, living near Millstone, received from the Colored Orphans' Home in New York city Clinton Jackson, a thirteen year old colored lad. Jackson was strong and made a good farm boy, but had a quick temper and was quarrelsome. Florence Sullivan, a white boy, about 18 years of age, went to work on Mr. Beardsley's farm. There was constant quarreling between the boys, and before Sullivan had been on the farm two weeks Jackson threatened to stab him.

On December 13th, Douthard Mattison, Mr. Beardsley's farmer, saw Jackson and Sullivan shooting at a target with a revolver back of the barn. On December 24th, Asa Hoagland, a neighbor, saw Jackson with a revolver.

The day before Christmas Mr. Beardsley, leaving the two boys together at home, went to town. When he returned young Jackson came running out to the gate, breathless and trembling, and announced that Sullivan was lying in the stable with his head against the bars between two of the stalls and that something must be the matter with him. Beardsley found Sullivan dead, with the body still warm, and blood oozing from an ugly wound in the left breast.

Theodore Wagoner, of Somerville held an autopsy and found that a bullet had passed through Sullivan's heart and left lung, causing instantaneous death. He immediately had a warrant issued for the arrest of young Jackson, but no weapon could be found.

Jackson declared that he had found Sullivan lying there dead. They took him to the County Jail in Somerville, and on the way he said that they would find the revolver in the stable over the manger, where the body lay. They returned and found it just where the boy had said. All the chambers were empty, except one, which contained a blank cartridge. It was identified as a revolver stolen from a dressing room at a ball held at Millstone a week previous.

A PLAINFIELD ARTIST.

Mr. Edwards a Designer of More Than Ordinary Ability.

The Rochester Union and Advertiser recently published the following about George Wharton Edwards, the artist, who makes his home in this city:

Among the well-known illustrators who have turned their attention to the development of the poster may be prominently mentioned George Wharton Edwards, of New York city. Mr. Edwards is not only an illustrator of note, a painter of wide reputation, a writer of delightful prose, but, in short, he is also an author of more than ordinary talents. In this cosmopolitan taste of art he is not unlike F. Hopkinson Smith, who has written quaintly "Tides and Tell Sketches," his "Rivalries of Long and Short Cadine," and other short stories are favorably known to all lovers of good literature. The distinguishing characteristic of the poster as delightful as the stories themselves. As a painter Mr. Edwards is among the first of our American artists, and his masterpieces at the exhibitions in New York have always been a feature. Mr. Edwards does not hold the poster in disdain, as do so many of his brother illustrators and painters. He recognizes in the poster the essential elements that go to make beauty and originality. He commends it for the purpose which it serves. He thinks that it has a most prominent future. Mr. Edwards has contributed posters to the Century Magazine; and they are among those highly valued by collectors. They are remarkable for their pleasing color-effects and the decorative beauty of the designs. He possesses the decorative sense in an unusual degree, and his lines are always graceful and full of beauty.

CLERKS EAT TURKEY.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Connett Entertain the Freight House Clerks.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Connett handsomely entertained the clerks and employes of the freight depot to a turkey supper last night at their residence, 303 East Fifth street. Mrs. Connett was assisted by Mrs. T. R. Armour, Miss Cornell and Miss Connett. Covers were laid for ten, but the genial face of Mac was sadly missed. His absence can only be accounted for by his bashful and retiring disposition. Charlie Summers was too feeble to go. Among those present were: Messrs. George Smith, John Ackerman, Robert Wood, Henry Ryno, Joel P. Ryno, James Buckley and T. Hann. After spending a very pleasant evening Harry's fellow-employes left with the best of mutual good feeling existing.

EXTENSION LECTURES RESUMED.

Dr. Riggs Talks Particularly of the City of Constantinople.

The University extension lectures on the Eastern Question, by Dr. James F. Riggs, of New Brunswick, were resumed Tuesday night after an interval of several weeks during the holiday season. The lecture was delivered as usual in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, and was listened to by a large and attentive audience. The subject was "Constantinople," and the interest of the lecture was increased by a large map of the city upon which Dr. Riggs pointed out the places of importance as he described the unique eastern city.

In the six colleges which surround the mosque of Sultan Achmet, there are being educated the young men who in a few years will be the Mohammedan leaders. Constantinople has had an interesting history. Constantine, the first Christian Emperor of Rome, removed the seat of empire from Rome, with its old pagan civilization, to the city of Byzantium, beside the Bosphorus, thus cutting loose from old ideas. He was succeeded by Theodosius, then by Justinian, who was the builder of St. Sophia. He desired to out-do Solomon, and spend the revenues of his kingdom for several years in erecting the beautiful church. It is built in the shape of a Greek cross, 311 by 224 feet. It has been greatly disfigured by the Mohammedans who have added four ugly little minarets.

In 1075 Jerusalem was taken by the Selyook Turks and the Christian pilgrims from Europe were abused from that time on. The greatest excitement reigned in Europe, and the result was the Crusades. The story of the fourth crusade concerns the history of Constantinople. Through the machinations of Dandolo, Doge of Venice, the crusaders turned aside from their original goal and sailed against Constantinople, finally carrying it by assault and setting up what was called the "Latin Empire of Constantinople." In 1261 the Greek line was restored, but the mischief already wrought was fatal; it was impossible to restore the old vitality or unity. And now the Turkish armies were drawing nearer and nearer the fated city, cut off as it was from the rest of the Christian world. The Turks had much greater resources. The city was taken by regular siege by Mohammed II in 1453. From that date it has been the capital of the Turkish or Ottoman Empire.

Constantine, the last Greek Emperor, died like a soldier in the breach. Though the city as a whole became Mohammedan, Mohammed allowed the Christians to retain some of their churches and to pursue their occupations undisturbed.

Already a bill has been introduced in the Senate fixing the salary of the Clerk of the Supreme Court at $6,000, and turning all fees into the State treasury. A similar act for the Clerk in Chancery has also been introduced.

PASSED OVER THE DIVIDE A FEW MINUTES AGO.

A BETTER WORLD CLAIMS THE SOUL OF ISAAC W. LAING.

For Almost Four Score Years He Had Been a Respected Citizen of This Section —An Old Member of the Hicksite Society.

Isaac W. Laing, well known in Plainfield, died Thursday, about 12 o'clock, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Amelia Sandford No. 6 Washington avenue, corner of Park Place North Plainfield from paralysis. He was one of the oldest members of the Hicksite Society of Friends, having served as Elder and Overseer for many years, and he and his wife attended the Wednesday morning service at the meeting house on Watchung avenue, and later called at The Press office as was his daily custom. He seemed very well at the time and greatly enjoyed meeting many of his old friends and acquaintances who were present at the meeting. He was diligent in attendance at meetings, when his health permitted, and was always present with his wife.

Thursday morning he was driven to the office of his family physician, Dr. Probasco, and while engaged in conversation with the Doctor was suddenly stricken speechless and lost the power of his limbs. He was carried to his carriage which was waiting for him at the door and driven to the home of his daughter, and taken to his room and placed upon his bed. Dr. Probasco called soon after and informed his grief stricken wife and daughter of the nature of his illness—paralysis of the right side. He never regained consciousness after leaving the Doctor's office and died surrounded by his wife, daughter, daughter-in law, Mrs. Smith W. Laing, and his grandchildren. He was, however, fully prepared for the sudden call of his Heavenly Father, as he was an exemplary Christian man, upright in his dealings with his fellow-men, and the loved ones who are called upon to mourn his death are comforted in their sorrow by the fact that his soul is safe in the arms of Jesus, his Saviour, whom he had trusted for many, many years.

Mrs. Mary L. Force, nearly eighty-one years old, mother of the editor of this paper, is the only member of his family living.

Mr. Laing was in the seventy-ninth year of his age, and was born in the house in which he lived nearly all his life, on his farm in Middlesex county, only a short distance east of Campbell's Park Avenue Hotel.

Murderer's Wife Goes Insane.

Anxiety for her husband's fate has finally unsettled the mind of Mrs. Niccolo Orchetta, the wife of the man charged with stabbing to death "Jack No. 2," at Westfield last October. For a time after her husband was imprisoned waiting trial, Mrs. Orchetta tried to run the store, but her countrymen did not seem to care to deal with her. The trial of her husband was postponed last month because she was not in a condition to give her testimony concerning the murder. She has an infant about two months old.

A FINE POINT RAISED.

JOHNSON'S LAWYERS WILL INSIST THAT HIS TERM EXPIRES IN 1899.

Reed & Coddington, His Lawyers, Have Raised Technical Points That May Cause a Long Drawn Out Contest.

Collector Johnson has retained Reed & Coddington to represent him in the quo-warranto proceedings instituted by Elias Bird to oust him from his office of City Collector, and a new point has been raised by them. In a conversation with a Press reporter today Mr. Reed stated that he had not yet carefully examined into the case, but that it struck him that probably Mr. Johnson was entitled to hold the office for the next three years. "Johnson was elected in December, 1892," he said, "the term being at that time one year. Early in 1893 the Legislature passed an act making the term three years, but the act failed to state whether it was intended to apply to collectors then in office or was limited to those thereafter to be elected. Johnson was re-elected in December, 1893, and, of course, to fill a term to begin at the expiration of the term he was then holding. If the Court shall determine that the law of 1893 did not affect those in office at the time that law was passed, then it follows that the office next became vacant in January, 1894, and Johnson's election in December, 1893, for a term of three years beginning January, 1894, and which will not expire until January, 1897. In that case he has one more year to serve.

"If, on the other hand, the law of 1893 did extend the term of the collector then in office, then Johnson's term did not expire until January, 1896. In that event the term for which he was elected in December, 1893, did not begin until the office next became vacant, or in other words until January, 1 96; and in that event he would then take office for three years from that date, or until January, 1899

"What is there to prevent the election of an officer two years before the term begins? Sheriffs take office a few days after election. Members of the Legislature and the Governor take office a few months after election. Congressmen do not take office until the December next month after election. There seems to be no legal obstacle to an election being held one, two, three or more years before an office becomes vacant.

"Nearly all elections are held in anticipation of the time when will become vacant. Is it not clear then, that although when Johnson was elected in December, 1893 there was no vacancy, his term would begin when next the office became vacant? If that vacancy did not occur until January, 1896, why should he not then hold office for three years from that date?

"We will insist that such is his legal right?"

WILL TRIM THE TREES.

Foliage on Streets Prevents Good Service From Electric Light.

The Lights and Trees Committee of the City Council have under consideration many improvements in their department. In certain sections of the city the limbs of trees are so thick and hang so low that it is impossible to derive the best service from the electric lights. Another disadvantage is that where such trouble exists the ground is very damp, and during the spring and summer it is apt to breed malaria. It is considered a very wise measure to keep the trees well trimmed not only for the above reasons, but for the safety of pedestrians who are obliged to travel at night.

The Baby, the first appearance on any stage.

The Dog.....Grover

The play itself was excellent, and its many misunderstandings, humorous situations and climaxes pleased the large crowd and kept them in continual roars of laughter.

The plot was based on the mixing of the pug and the baby, and was exclusively published in The Daily Press sometime ago. M. J. Cashin as "Mortimer" was the hero and had his part down to a fine point. His agony was well feigned and his ravings delighted the audience.

No fault could be found with Mr. Ward. He was just suited to the character he played and managed to work in some original witticisms besides those of the play. His struggles to hide the pug and make love at the same time were laughable to say the least. Mr. Winn carried his part without trouble and made a romantic lover. Mr. Comerford especially delighted the young people and his every appearance on the stage was a sign for a roar of laughter. His antics as the English butler, brought down the house. Messrs. O'Brien and Guinee were up-to date and the scene between "Dr. Jones" and "Mortimer" when the doctor tries "the power of his eye," was one of the best. Another scene that took the popular eye was when "Rose" and "Christopher" plan to drown the pug and "Mortimer" over hears them and thinks it is the baby.

Among the young ladies, Miss Blatz deserves great credit. For an amateur her acting was remarkable and she never once forgot the situation, but kept in touch with the rest. The character of the sentimental wife was excellently represented by her. Miss Day was thoroughly up in her character and proved a splendid indignant champion for "Rose." One of the most difficult parts was acted by Miss Keely, but it did not seem to be much for her abilities. Miss Cullen was good, very good in fact, and deserves lots of praise as does Marie O'Connor, who certainly will be a great actress some day. Grover, Miss Blatz's pug, carried off the honors of the evening by yelping and squealing just at the right time.

During the play, the duett "Reuben and Cynthia," by Miss Keely and Mr. Ward, was introduced as well as the solo "Henrietta," by Mr. Comerford. They were both well rendered. The play closed with a song by Mr. Ward and a chorus by the rest of the cast.

Among the spectators there were none who enjoyed the entertainment more than a party that occupied one of the boxes. It consisted of Fathers Stafford and O'Neill, of Seaton Hall, Father Dunn, of Chatham, Father Carroll, of Elizabeth, Father Smith, of Cranford, Father Miller, of North Plainfield, and Fathers Symth and Murphy, of this city.

GOVERNOR GRIGGS' STAFF.

The Men the New Executive Has Selected.

The news comes from Paterson that Governor-elect Griggs has been making selections for his staff as commander-in-chief of the State's military and naval forces. Editor Sheffield Phelps, of Jersey City; Henry A. Potter, of East Orange; Wm. Barbour, of Paterson; Capt. Nathan Haines, of Paterson, and Col. A. R. Kuser, who is a member of Gov. Werts's staff, have thus far been selected. It seems also understood that Col. Joseph W. Congdon, of Paterson, who made the speech nominating Griggs in the Republican State Convention, will succeed Gen. Heppenheimer as Inspector-General of the National Guard. The Battalion of the West of the Naval Reserve and a detail from the Trenton Regiment of the State Militia will be on duty at the inauguration next Tuesday.

EYES.

Eyes that dazzle, eyes that dare—
Eyes that tempt and eyes that scare
Eyes that warble when I draw near
Eyes that frown and eyes that jeer
Eyes that assemble,
And all like eyes of unity I love.
Tell me, O! ye eyes of many a changeful chaconne,
Draw me to you with a look,
Bewitched and
Draw me to you with a kiss.

Eyes that weave for me turquoise spells,
Eyes that are like limpid wells,
Eyes that reveal Cupid's nest in their wells,
Eyes that I would die to kiss,
Tell me, O! ye eyes of many a changeful chaconne,
Of your secret baptisms,
Of your mysteries,
Me at last with love's bright prism,
Pure eyed
As fast asleep love's bright prism.

Eyes that soften and glint and glow
Like sun shafts on rose golden;
Eyes that could pierce me thro' and thro'
Like a sword of Damocles,
Pierce me and turn me and chill me,
And send me a million flames
Each and every one of which would kill me,
If they were not mine own.
Eyes eyes!
If they were not mine own.

A GLIMPSE OF HAVANA.

Everything In the Houses Made to Secure Comfort and Coolness.

The houses in Havana are mainly broad and low, three story buildings being rare and one-story structures quite common. The modern idea everything is made to serve comfort and coolness. Instead of having panes of glass, the windows are open and guarded by iron railings. In the daytime wooden doors are left ajar. You see into many houses as you pass along, and very cool and clean they look. There are tiled floors, matted walls, easy chairs and lounges, thin lace curtains and glimpses of courts in the center of each building, often with green plants and gaudy flowers. There is then between the parlor and the kitchen. You will find much the same plan at your hotel. You may have a big room with tiled floor, sliding outer windows just as you please, for the sides of the house seem capable of being all thrown open, while in the center of the building is a court open to the sky overhead. Equally cool do all the inhabitants appear to be, and the wise man who commits his own comfort will do well to follow the general example. Even the soldiers wear straw hats.

The gentlemen are clad in underwear of silk or fine linen, the latter suits of light drill or silk, and the ladies are equally coolly appareled. Havana is a dressy place, and you will be astonished at the number of carriages and the immense goods worn there are made to conform But come and see the apartment you are to rent every night. Yes to one who selling is higher than you ever saw or one in a private house, and the huge windows open upon a balcony overlooking a verdant lawn. There is no mosquito curtain or tilting and the bed is an ornate iron or brass affair, with a tightly stretched sheet of canvas or fine wire netting in place of the mattress usually found in the States. You would not sleep on a mattress with any proper degree of comfort in the tropics. There is a cane chair, the furniture, and not a single thing about the room is pretty certain to be scrupulously clean. Conspicuous there and everywhere else that you go is a rocking chair. Shall I describe a book. You could

At any rate Gov. Griggs had plenty of red fire at the inauguration.

Dinners for the outgoing and incoming State officials are all the rage now.

The Populist national convention will be held in St. Louis on July 22d.

Another month from today the cider joints will probably have no reason to be hypocritical observers of the seventh-day law.

Union county Assemblymen were fortunate in committee assignments. They all secured good places. Likewise Assemblyman Reed.

The bill introduced by Senator Johnson, of Bergen, in the interests of the preservation of the Palisades of the Hudson, will meet with no opposition.

The tariff question in the halls of Congress and the excise problem in the New York Legislature are two species of legislation that are never settled.

There seems to be a plethora of men who think the policeman's lot is a happy one. One hundred and sixteen applicants for three places would seem to indicate this.

Now that the Democratic National Convention has given New York the go-by, the metropolis is laying plans to secure the New York State Republican Convention. Something is better than nothing.

The selection of C. H. Bateman editor of the Somerville Unionist-Gazette, as secretary to Senator Thompson, president of the Senate, is a pleasing one to a large number of Mr. Bateman's journalistic friends.

When it comes to settling Uncle Sam to erect a building in any city it is just as easy to get him to put up a costly one as a cheap affair, and this no doubt is the reason why Elizabeth is not at all bashful in asking for a $250,000 government building.

A pretty western damsel, who has mastered Blackstone sufficiently to hang out a shingle, has emigrated to New York, and is confident that she can get a nice living along with the 10,000 other lawyers, good bad and indifferent, in the great metropolis.

New Jersey State Treasurer Swain and Comptroller Gibson, of Newark, have introduced an innovation in financial affairs which is receiving the commendation of all who know about it. It is the temporary loaning of idle State funds to the city of Newark at three and a half per cent interest.

The State agriculturists will go before the present Legislature and endeavor to secure such legislation as is possible for their interests. One of the matters to be pushed will be action to prevent the sale of oleomargarine, which it is claimed is now sold in the State in violation of the law.

Turkey stands today before Christian civilization self convicted. She has permitted, and left unpunished, crimes unspeakable against humanity and Christianity. Yet she dares to attempt to interpose her puny veto against a noble movement for the relief of the victims of a barbarity for which she and she alone is morally responsible.—Boston Globe.

Plainfield Common Council has legislated against the sale of all liquors on the Sabbath, including sweet cider. This is right, too. If it is wrong to sell liquor at all every kind should be included. If it is not right for a dry goods merchant to keep an open store on the Sabbath why should it be right for a liquor seller? We believe in having our laws enforced.—Somerville Unionist-Gazette.

The sudden recall of "Commander" Ballington Booth, chief officer of the Salvation Army in the United States, coupled with the fact that he was not consulted by his father on the subject, throws a curious light on the workings of this remarkable organization. It is a well-known fact that readiness to obey orders without question and without demur is demanded of every member, whether he or she be of high or low rank. Two of the monastic vows, those of poverty and obedience, are enforced with an almost mediæval strictness.—Evening Sun.

The exclusive publication in The Daily Press last night of the acquittal of the Jackson boy at Somerville and the important points raised in Collector Johnson's behalf by his attorneys demonstrates The Press to be the only paper in this city that can be depended on to furnish important events as soon as they transpire. Newspaper readers who have to depend on a foul mouth editor and sweat shop labor cannot expect to get decent service.

After murdering thousands of her Christian subjects and rendering the remainder of them destitute, Turkey has finally ended the chapter of her atrocities by closing her ears to the appeals of humanity and by rejecting a peaceful attempt to give aid to a distressed people. It is an act that will call forth the indignation of the Christian world, and may result in the downfall of the present Turkish Government.—Washington Times.

It is announced that Gov. Werts is a candidate for counsel to the Hudson County Board of Chosen Freeholders. The office was made vacant by the death of Judge McGrath. Ex-Judge Thomas Noonan, Assistant Prosecutor Joseph M. Noonan, Judge E. T. Paxton Norman L. Rowe, and John Griffin are also candidates. It is said that Mr. Griffin will probably be selected as he is backed by ex Sheriff Davis. The salary is $3,000 a year.

Congressman Bartlett deserves the hearty support of the people in his fight against the new form of efforts to enlarge the pension rolls. The country has been more than generous in its pension outlays. The reached in 1893 the enormous amount of $156,000,000 and last year they were about $140,000,000. Such annual sums thirty years after the close of the civil war, are prodigious, and it is unworthy of this liberality to try to carry pension outlays beyond reason and very far beyond need.—Sun.

The only way to rescue the Armenian people is to put an end to the Turkish Government. It is an abomination and an anachronism. It cumbers the earth and should be cut down. Now let England come to agreement with Russia and wipe out the stanic power of the Turks. Let Russia march her legions into Armenia. Let the British and French fleets force the Dardanelles and compell the surrender and abdication of the Sultan, and the utter overthrow of the power of the Pachas. There is a point where patience ceases to be a virtue. We believe that the world has arrived at that point. The Turk must go!—Springfield Union.

Every State in the Union except New Jersey, that had troops engaged in the battles of Chattanooga and Chickamauga has marked the position of its troops by suitable monuments on the battlefields now converted into a magnificent National Park. New Jersey is the sole exception. No appropriation has been made for the purpose by our Legislature and there is no money either to pay for services performed for the State Commissioners. There is no excuse for this neglect by a State that is more fortunately situated financially than any other of her sister States and the Legislature should hasten to remove the approach.—Newark Adver

In days gone by Editor Runyon, with his compound intellect and alleged college education, has penned white heat editorials catechising The Daily Press for printing advertisements of firms doing business outside of Plainfield, and at the same time growing red in the countenance with thoughts that he printed his paper for Plainfield business men only. But what a fall from grace and professed principles has humpy-dumpty journalism as employer of sweat shop labor has taken. Last Saturday he published a piece of alleged enterprise in the shape of a supplement booming a number of New York business houses. The supplement was printed in New York and sent here by freight or express and folded in the sweat shop sheet. The price he received for printing the advertisements was in conformity with the sweat shop wages which he pays his employes, and was a rank injustice to the Plainfield merchants who pay him good rates for advertisements.

There is a trite old saying that the truth is bitter to some people. That is just the effect that was produced on Editor Runyon when he read The Daily Press Thursday and had his attention called to the fact that he pays sweat shop wages to his employes and treats them with worse than sweat shop methods. The truth was not only bitter, but it made him mad. When the compound intellect of Editor Runyon, alleged graduate of a college, becomes agitated with passion it unburnt out soprano thoughts that are vivid synonyms of his feelings. Ordinary words fail to express his cogitation. He simply boils over and then, lo and behold, a phrase which still lingers in his mind from the anecdotes which he related when he was a sophomore, gushes forth and in due time the public are treated with tenderloin classic direct from the thumping cephalic extremity of Editor Runyon. Editor Runyon needs to again have his mouth washed out with soap.

Rev. Theodore Cuyler, who is well and favorably known in this city, expresses the following sound words with reference to the Armenian question:

I am always glad and willing to speak on a subject which concerns persecuted Turkish Armenia. A week ago last Friday I introduced a resolution at my church, urging first, the President to increase his efforts to protect all American citizens in Asiatic Turkey, and second, that the National Government should be urged to send supplies to the suffering and starving people by one or more men-of-war. I believe that if a fleet were sent to, say, Beyrout, it would have more influence than a mere declaration on the part of the Government our position in this Armenian affair. It would have an immense moral effect on Turkey and on the powers of Europe. The European powers have spent a tremendous amount of time in discussion and argument, but if the United States Government were to send men-of-war, laden with provisions, on that mission, it would not only relieve Armenia, but would incidentally increase our naval force. Of course, the intention would not be to fight with the guns of the fleet. Their relief would be an act of humanity. I decry war, because I don't think that it is right or necessary, and I think such a mission as I have pointed out would have a greater moral effect than a battle.

The annual reports of the State Comptroller and Treasurer are in. They show a marked increase in expenditures in most of the State departments. The militia cost the State $187,540.84 an increase of $56,458 10 over the previous year. Adding to this cost the sum of $1,329,520.23, paid respectively for the Jersey City and Paterson armories, the grand total is $402,786.33, or an increase of $182,6 2 61. Next to the big State Hospital the militia costs more than anything else in the State. The latter cost $21 ,95 .61, an increase of $85,666.55, which includes payments of $57,4 1.50 and $17,555.82 for the new buildings at Morris Plains so badly needed, and other extraordinary expenditures. The county lunatic asylums cost the State in addition, $114,8 5.05. The courts have only run a little over the previous year, their cost being $175 237.12. The disbursements on account of advertising were $141 511.23, an increase of $62,972.59. The State Prison maintenance cost $175 812 08, an increase of $13,203.89 What are known as extraordinary expenses for the year were: Public roads, $76,515.90; public "war debt," $ 5,000; completing State Capitol, $28,252.53; Senate investigation, $12 563.32; census, $3 143.87; school census, $2,002.73.

BROAD TIRES FOR PRESERVATION

Building Good Roads is One Thing. Preserving Them is Another.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—A great deal has been said and written first and last, upon the subject of good roads but so far very little on the other quite important point, viz: their protection. Union county was the pioneer in the construction and probably has the largest percentage of macadam roads of any county in the State of New Jersey, if not in the United States. It went heavily into debt to build them, greatly to the benefit of the public outside as well as inside its own borders. How important that benefit has been and still continues to be the following facts will partially indicate.

Before the use of macadam and under the old dirt road system a ton of 2,000 pounds, was considered a fair average load for two horses, except during the rainy season, when an empty wagon of itself was a big load.

Now a consultation of the weighmasters books at the stone crushers and coal yards will show that the load ranges from 2 to 3½ tons. The compensation of the teamster is doubled or thribled during the season when all roads are good, and he is now enabled to have constant employment, whereas before the time of macadam roads he was obliged on account of impassible roads to lose much time every year, when his team stood in the stable, "eating off their heads," and he was loafing at the store or what was worse, the saloon.

The man of moderate means is not the only one benefitted, all classes come in for their share, not omitting the bicyclist and the "four hundred" with their tandem and four-in-hand. Everybody is happy and pleased till the big bill comes around, the size of which makes some of the happy ones think that something must be done to protect and prolong the benefits. On that subject something may be said in the future and the burden of it will be "broad tires" for heavy loads.

Yours Respectfully
Thos. S. Young.

GRIGGS IS GOVERNOR.

BIG DEMONSTRATION BY REPUBLICANS AT TRENTON TODAY.

Union and Somerset Counties are Taking a Prominent Part—Judge DeMeza Marshals the County Clubs—Committees.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Trenton, N. J., January 21st.—Over a century ago the British were driven from the then fertile fields of Trenton and today, after thirty years of the most prosperous prosperity, the able, the defenseless Democracy of a State that they had learned to honor and to proclaim as their own is turned over to an enemy.

The session opened last night in both Houses in a slow and in an un-Democratic way. Never before in the past decade has there been a more slim attendance at an opening previous to an inaugural. The hotels are deserted and still the Republican party are not Prohibitionists. Governor-elect Griggs is receiving at the Trenton House and President of the Senate Thompson is entertaining friends at The Windsor.

The first bill introduced into the House of Assembly was made by that sterling Democrat of Old Hunterdon, Assemblyman John Queen, a brother of Paul Queen who is a member of the State Democratic Committee from that county.

The appointments of the committees that will most interest The Press readers is that Assemblyman Codington is chairman of the miscellaneous committee, a member of the education committee, the judiciary and also a member of the joint passed bills committee. The ex-Judge is in exceedingly good luck. That astute Corporation Counsel for the largest populated town in Somerset county, who occupies the only seat in the House of Assembly from that county, has more than fortunate. The President of the famous Park Club and "our" Assemblyman from "Old Somerset" is chairman of the committee on incidental expenses, on the revision of the laws, and also a member of the joint committee on the State Reform School grounds.

Little Will Sebring, who has been appointed a page through Assemblyman Codington's efforts, is a distinguished person by his activity.

The following Senate committees were announced:

Judiciary—Voorhees, Johnson, Daly.
Revision of the Law—Williams, Herbert, Kuhl.
Appropriations—Rogers, Ross, Gould.
Finance—Parry, Stokes, Vreeland.

In the Assembly Speaker Derousse announced the following standing committees:

Ways and Means—Hogan, Clauss, Jones, Ullman, Fleming.

Speaker Derousse also announced the appointment of Andrew J. Mailiette, of Camden, as his private secretary, and Johnson Cherry, of Camden, as assistant private secretary.

Mr. Queen, the Democratic leader, introduced an equal taxation bill, which provides that railroad companies shall pay tax at local rates, the State to get the amount equal to one-half of one per cent of the assessed valuation, and the different localities the remainder.

Mr. Fleming introduced a bill providing that railroads shall either elevate or depress their tracks at street crossings in first-class cities and bear the whole expense therefor.

Mr. Queen introduced a bill making the Supreme Court clerk's and Chancery clerk's offices salaried at $6,000 a year.

The Union and Somerset county delegations arrived here at about 10:30 and the members of the party immediately scattered over the city, going in parties of twos, threes and fours to various places where they were acquainted or else observing the big crowd that was present. Of course a great many people were there, but the hotel and saloon men had made preparations to handle a bigger crowd than was present and were consequently somewhat disappointed. Long before the hour of noon Taylor's Opera House was jammed full with G. O. P. adherents who were anxious to witness the inauguration ceremonies.

Several Plainfielders occupied seats of prominence on the platform where the impressive ceremonies were enacted. The programme was followed out as published in The Daily Press a few days ago. The oath of office was administered to the new Governor by Chief Justice Mercer Beasley, following which came the delivery of the great seal of the State to the new Governor by Governor Werts and the introduction of Governor Griggs to the members of the Legislature.

After the inauguration was ended and the Governor had delivered his address the Republican clubs formed in line and started over the line of march. It took the parade forty-five minutes to pass the corner of Green and Hanover streets. The clubs were led by the Essex county delegation, with the Frelinghuysen Lancers, of Newark, at the head, who presented a very military bearing, and received great applause from the multitude of sightseers.

The Union county clubs were led by the Republican county executive committee, J. F. MacDonald, of Plainfield, occupied the right of the line. Among the other Plainfielders in the executive committee were J. B. Coward, W. T. Kirk, and Councilman William West. Following them came the rest of the delegation of the clubs who were marshaled by City Judge DeMeza. The Somerset county delegation made a fair showing. The U. S. Grant Club was commanded by President Fountain.

One of the most notable observations about the hotel corridors and in the legislative halls was the manner in which John Kean seemed to be feted. Every one seemed possessed to grasp his hand and interest him as long as possible.

The Governor's inaugural address will be found on the second page.

—Friday afternoon at 3:45 the Junior Christian Endeavor Society of the Trinity Reformed church will hold an entertainment and sociable in the Sunday-school room.

—P. M. Decker has given up his barber shop and will devote his time exclusively to his intelligence office. He will occupy the same quarters in the Babcock building as before.

TELL-TALE FACES.

PINCHED AND CAREWORN,

As Worn by Many American Women.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

The "tell-tale face" is worn by many American women, and is a symptom of symptoms, a signal of distress.

While women do all in their power to hide their condition, the practised eye soon detects the trouble.

When pains and aches are felt in every part of the body, when faintness, dizziness, and the "blues" predominate, then the face is pinched, haggard, and careworn. No prompt relief is necessary, or a beautiful life will be sacrificed.

An American woman, Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., whose letters were permitted to print last year, writes that she hopes Mrs. Pinkham will continue to use her name, as the publication in newspapers of the secrets of her own wonderful cures and relief from years of misery has been the means of influencing many suffering women to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and become well like herself. Mrs. Wampler feels, and rightly, too, that in this way she is doing a great good.

In producing an absolute cure for all diseases of women, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound stands to-day as it did then, pre-eminent.

Mrs. H. Wampler, of Baraboo, Wis., whose letter was permitted to print last year, writes that she hopes Mrs. Pinkham will continue to use her name, as the publication in newspapers of the secrets of her own wonderful cures and relief from years of misery has been the means of influencing many suffering women to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and become well like herself. Mrs. Wampler feels, and rightly, too, that in this way she is doing a great good.

FUNERAL OF ISAAC W. LAING.

Consoling Thoughts to the Sorrowing Ones by Aaron M. Powell.

A large circle of relatives and friends gathered Sunday morning at eleven o'clock at the Friends' meeting house on Watchung avenue, where the funeral services of the late Isaac W. Laing were held. After a brief silence Aaron M. Powell spoke in part as follows:

Another one has left our narrow circle, which occasions our meeting here today. One of the last of a generation has gone to join the vast majority, and is now, entering more than he knew. For him it is gain, but to her who was his loving and tender companion, a great loss. He will be missed in a large circle of friends and at the Friends' meetings, as everyone is now missed as the changes go on. He leaves a worthy example. Of simple tastes and habits in life, he was less given to matters of excitement. He was a man of sterling honesty and uprightness. Such a one could not go away without being missed. These changes will soon come to us that we should be thoughtful and studious about the present life and the one beyond. Our simple form of worship seems strange and inadequate on such an occasion, but reflection brings to our mind the fact that mighty forces are silent ones, and remembering that our own spiritual natures are subject to the great divine law. While present day fashions and fancies are falling outside. Another change is impending, when the trees will be clothed with verdure. The change is so silent and gradual that one can scarcely note it, and it is in that our character changes. I hope that consolation will be abundantly realized by her who is left alone. If we could all realize this spiritual faith we would be relieved from burdens and cares. It is a sure foundation for us to build upon, and it is well for us to have the realization of the divine love, which is the greatest thing in the world.

At the conclusion of Mr. Powell's remarks those present were given an opportunity of looking for the last time on the face of the departed. Interment was made in the cemetery by the meeting house, in the family plot. The bearers were three grandsons, Fred Sandford, Percy Sandford, Isaac Laing, and granddaughter's husband, George VanNess.

Remark when you attend a play or concert how many people disturb the performance by coughing. One man begins and the cough seems to be contagious. The interruption is a great nuisance, and there is no need of it, for any one may cure a cough with the Pinecola Balsam, which costs 25c. It soothes the inflammation in the throat and loosens the mucus which clogs the air passages. A few doses of Ely's Pincola Balsam stop a cough and heal a sore throat.

A DAY OF GOOD SERMONS

BISHOP VINCENT OCCUPIES THE PULPITS OF M. E. CHURCHES.

Union Services Held in the Evening and Great Interest Shown—Dr. Barnes Talks of God's Treatment of the Sinners.

From The Press of Jan. 21.

There was not an empty pew in the First M. E. church yesterday morning when Bishop John H. Vincent preached a very interesting sermon. The congregation of the Grace M. E. church united with that of the First M. E. Church in the service and the united choirs of the two churches led the singing. The opening services were conducted by Rev. C. R. Barnes, D. D., assisted by Rev Dr. Whiting and Herbert F. Randolph.

Bishop Vincent took his text from Second Timothy 3:17. "That the man of God may be perfect." After introducing his subject by a comparison of the man who lives for the things of the earthly life and the one who lives for humanity and to improve his own character, he divided the growth in the Christian life into four stages. The first was the apprehention of the fact of sin, the consciousness of being a sinner, the loathing of sin so that it will make him leave it. "We live in a day," said he, "when it is very popular to depreciate sin, when we talk about inheritance and environment as lessening it. That is absolutely false, sin is sin, and inheritance and environment are only factors in our character. We are conditioned by them. When a man sees sin and appreciates his standing with God, he is on his way up. We are free but we do many things involuntarily. We choose between right and wrong once in a thousand times. With the constant knowledge of the terrible responsibility that rests upon us we would be unable to stand it. It is when a man comes to a knowledge of sin and lives under and recognizes its bondage that I have some hope for him."

The second stage was the conscious part. "There was a heavy burden but now it is gone. It is possible for a man who has known sin and felt its bondage to have the assurance of forgiveness. I could not give anything for a business man or a society woman who did not know what sin is and the joy of pardon."

Purity was the third, just as a man once knows sin but now loathes sin or any thought of it. "It is possible," said the Bishop, "for a soul that has sinned to become conscious of pardon and have a purity of motive. The church was established to destroy sin so that we may walk in the light."

"There is a fourth stage. In the Christian there still remains the personal defects of character which must be overcome."

He spoke of these defects that so often made the difference between the daily action and the public profession and said that a Christian, to be complete, must change his personal traits so as to be pleasant and kind to all his fellow men.

He closed by saying that Christians should cultivate culture as well as evangelical experience.

In the evening Bishop Vincent preached in Monroe Avenue Chapel. The Chapel was crowded to its utmost capacity to accommodate the large crowd that attended. The topic of his sermon was "Follow Christ" and his words were listened to with great interest.

Earnest words, heartfelt prayers, and unusually sweet music characterized the union service held last night in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church.

Dr. W. R. Richards conducted the service and read the Scriptures; Dr. A. H. Lewis offered the opening prayer, and the sermon was by Rev. Dr. Yerkes. His text was John 3, 7: "Ye must be born again."

By the new birth, he said, man becomes a new creature. The natural man has not been changed, yet a transformation has taken place. The man has new apprehensions of things. He sees in Christ beauties he never saw before, and finds companions in people he had never before cared for. He has been born of the Spirit. The difference between that which is born of the flesh and that which is born of the Spirit is the difference between life and death.

A man cannot create this life in himself by good works, any more than scientists can create life in the natural world. The life is unfolded within us by the living touch of Christ; then in our lives it unfolds, blossoms, and bears fruit. A man may try to live as Jesus lived, speak as He spoke, act as He acted; but that man is only a base imitator, he can never be like Christ till he has Christ's life within him.

We can't altogether understand this new birth, but we know that it comes to us through faith." It is just for us to cast ourselves upon the great heart of God.

Souls may be saved here tonight, if they will just come and let Christ put His hand upon them. "There is life for a look at the crucified One;" will you not look, tonight?

Several times during the service the regular choir of the church had rendered beautiful musical selections, touching the hearts of all by their sweetness. But especially impressive was the bass solo which immediately followed the sermon. The song was "The Haven of Rest," and the singer pleaded with his hearers to "anchor their souls" in that Haven where they would be "safe evermore."

At the conclusion of the regular service, a short after meeting of prayer was held in the chapel; a meeting of interest and helpfulness to all who attended it.

The churches on the north side of this city and of the borough held a union service in the First Methodist Episcopal church last evening, which was quite largely attended. A large chorus choir occupied the rear of the platform, while Rev. C. R. Barnes, D. D., Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Rev C. L. Goodrich, Rev. C. E. Herring and Rev. Herbert L. Randolph jointly conducted the services.

The meeting opened with a rousing song service led by Lewis H. Bond, after which Rev. Mr. Schenck led in earnest prayer. The collection was taken while the choir sang a hymn. After a short Scripture reading, Rev. Dr. Barnes preached a short sermon on God's treatment of the sinner, how He treated the sinner like another individual, an equal, instead of commanding him to do anything, as they do in the army.

What a magnificent tribute it is to us that God received us as equals. A visit of a perfectly voluntary matter and God visits us. He does not come with force. He comes in as if He does not know all our black record or He knows that there is some part that is savable. He told of the condition of the sinner when God's appeal came to him, how he felt and his answer. He followed the sinner through his struggles to free himself from the power of sin. The self complacent man was he said, the worst of all to deal with. He told of the awful future of those that hinder the sinner in his attempts to follow in the right path. He closed with an appeal to the unsaved to make a new start. A fervent prayer by Rev. Mr. Herring followed Dr. Barnes impressive remarks and then Rev. Mr. Randolph added a few others and a season of prayer followed. The meeting closed with a hymn. The benediction was pronounced by Rev Mr. Goodrich.

TO AID THE LIBRARY.

The Sewing Class of St. Stephen's Church Gives a Charming Tea.

A delightful tea was given by the sewing class of St. Stephen's church Saturday afternoon in the parish rooms and it proved very successful financially as well as sociably. The net receipts were $21.56, and went to the library fund.

Dainty little cups of tea were served to all the guests at the tea table at which Mrs. N. C. Finch presided. A table covered with a tasty display of home-made cakes was under the supervision of Mrs. A. J. Bell, while Mrs. E. H. Woodward looked after the table of useful articles, and two little girls attended to the fancy articles. The attendance was good and the articles were almost entirely disposed of.

GONE AFTER RED SKINS.

MESSENGER BOYS WHO READ DIME NOVELS SUDDENLY DISSPPEAR.

The Toss of a Penny Decided Their Fate as to Whether They Should Fight for Cuba's Independence or Kill Indians.

The independence of Cuba tested with the toss of a penny, and now all is lost. Almost lost, that is, for that struggling people have lost the aid of two young Plainfielders. Alba Smith, of West Fourth street, and John Devine, of West Front street, have been in the employ of the Western Union Telegraph Company as messenger boys. Most of their spare time has been spent in perusing the exciting adventures of Jesse James, Nick Carter and other dime novel heroes.

They decided to go either to Cuba or after Indians, as both presented great attractions, and let the penny decide for them. A revolver was borrowed from Sam Vail, a Postal Telegraph boy, and Friday night the lads disappeared from Plainfield.

This is not the first occasion that these boys have been after Indians, although they are only fourteen years old. Last year they went as far as Bound Brook, but the natives of that place were too much and they returned.

ABNORMAL CHARLEY HILL.

He Killed Four Calves and Doesn't Know Why He Did It.

Is Charles Hill, the 12 year-old boy accused of torturing and killing animals, an hereditary criminal? This question the Somerset Court tried to settle Saturday in its effort to determine to what degree the youthful prisoner is responsible for his actions. Hill is a frail boy and there is nothing in his bright, open countenance to indicate an abnormal disposition.

He was arrested two weeks ago at the instance of his employer, Farmer John W. Kuhel, of Centerville. During the past year hay stacks have been fired, cattle have been killed, and other malicious mischief done on the Kuhel farm.

Farmer Kuhel was led to believe that he was being persecuted by a mysterious enemy. One of Kuhel's blooded cows was recently taken ill, and its sufferings became so intense that it was killed. Then it was discovered that its skull had been crushed in a mysterious manner. Hill confessed to having struck the cow a blow in the head with an axe as she stood in the stable. Some time later, a cremation in the county jail he has also confessed to killing four calves, and committing other acts of cruelty on animals on the farm.

Mr. Kuhel said that Hill's statement that his father was dead is untrue. His father is Peter Hill, and he lives in Hunterdon county. Lawyer Frech told the Court that the boy's father had recently been imprisoned for smashing with an axe a costly carriage belonging to a neighbor.

The child prisoner, who did not look strong enough to hurt a healthy calf, stood before the Court unabashed, and said:

"I killed the old cow because she was a hard milker. I don't know why I killed the calves and did the other things."

The Court decided that he was not a safe person to be at large, and he was sent to the State Reform School.

GENTLE WILLIE AND HIS FRIENDS.

A Sunday Jamboree Ends With a Night Spent in the Hookery.

Two white men and a colored individual were arraigned before City Judge George W. DeMeza this morning on the charge of being drunk and disorderly around Coddington's stables on East Second street yesterday. Harrison Randolph was the dusky-hued prisoner and Michael McCarty and "Gentle Willie" Murphy were the other two offenders. They are all now employed by expressman Coddington. McCarty was the spokesman for the trio. They had all been drinking, he said, and he and the ex-Crescent base ball player began to argue over some thing. "Gentle Willie" slapped his face and McCarty and Randolph went to Sergeant Kiely to make a complaint. The Sergeant said that they were both so intoxicated that they could not walk straight and so he took them in and then went after Murphy and lodged him in the jail also.

Judge DeMeza spoke very severely about drunkan characters being seen on the streets, especially on Sunday. He gave each one his choice between a fine of $2 or going to jail for ten days.

SWEET JASMINE.

How This Fragrant Flower Became the Symbol of Marriage.

Long before orange blossoms became associated with weddings the fragrant jasmine was commonly used for the decoration of a bride. A very pretty legend of ancient Tuscany tells how this little blossom became the symbol of love. The jeweler returning from the warm countries of Asia, brought home with him a rare tropical plant—the jasmine—which was unknown in Tuscany. He gave a small slip to a certain duke, who set it among his most treasured plants, where it soon grew and throve. Under the care of the gardener and soon grew to be a good sized plant. The duke was so proud of his rare possession that he gave strict orders to his gardener to guard the plant carefully and on no account to give even a slip—not a flower—to any person.

The gardener was a good young man, and he would have been faithful to his charge had he not happened to fall in love with the sweetest peasant maid in all Tuscany. The maid was poor and her lover was not much richer, so they were unable to marry. On the birthday of the peasant the gardener, having nothing else to give the maid of his choice, presented her with a bouquet of flowers, and among the other clippings in the bunch there was one from the duke's cherished jasmine bush. Nothing could be too good for the gardener's maiden, so in this one instance he reached into the duke's flower garden. The girl, admiring the fresh buds of the sprig, wished to preserve it, and so placed it in the ground, where it rooted and remained fresh and green all winter, thus symbolizing her love for the gardener, and in the following spring it grew and was covered with blossoms. The little bush flourished and the flowers multiplied so under the maiden's care that she was able to sell many of the sprigs for a considerable sum, thus spreading the custom of flower shrubs; and in a short time, with a spray of the precious love token on her breast she was wedded to the happy gardener.

To this day the Tuscan girls preserve the remembrance of the gardener's gift to his sweetheart by wearing a bouquet of sweet jasmine on their wedding day, and they have a proverb which says a young girl wearing such a sprig is rich enough to make the fortune of a poor husband.—Philadelphia Press.

Cardinal Mezzofanti's Memory.

Cardinal Mezzofanti had a memory little short of miraculous. Dr. Russell, his biographer, says that the cardinal spoke with the greatest ease 30 languages; that he spoke fairly well 9; that he used occasionally, but not with any fluency, 11 more; that he spoke imperfectly 8, and that he could read 11 more. Taking in addition the number of dialects, some of which are diverse from the mother tongue as to constitute a different language, Dr. Russell says that the cardinal was master of no less than 111 different languages and dialects.

His German was so excellent that he was taken for a native of Germany, while his French and English were equally pure. Dr. Theluck heard him converse in German, Arabic, Spanish, Illyrian, English, Latin, Greek, Swedish and Portuguese, at one of the pope's receptions, and afterward Mezzofanti gave him a poem in Persian and left him to take a lesson in Cornish. He knew several of the American Indian languages and nearly all the dialects of India.

In spite of all these attainments, however, he was a very dull man, and himself said that he had 20 words for one idea. He was remarkable only for the number of languages he knew, but was not distinguished as a grammarian, a lexicographer, a philosopher, a philologist or ethnologist, and added nothing to any department of the study of language. —St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

An Imperfect Gold Coin.

Superintendent Beach of the street cleaning department some time since found a coin in the street sweepings, and it proved to be a curiosity, worth as much as two ordinary $5 pieces, on account of its having been "mint struck"—that is, it had not been placed separately in the dies, and the milling on one side was some distance from the edge, while on the other side there was none. On mentioning the fact to an employee in the San Francisco mint he was told that the coin was a counterfeit, and that it was practically impossible that a coin so disfigured could have been issued from any government mint. When the coin was produced, the mint employee, after putting it to all sorts of tests, had to admit that it was a genuine coin, struck at the Philadelphia mint, where every coin passes through the hands of four persons who examine it for defects, and he said he would not have believed it possible for such a coin to escape them had he not seen it.—Portland Oregonian.

Declining Our Pronouns.

In a collection of the possessions of the late Robert Louis Stevenson there is a letter showing the difficulties which even such a master of English as he experienced in writing our language. "When I invent a language," he writes, "there shall be a direct and indirect pronoun after declined, and then writing will be some fun." This idea he illustrates as follows:

Direct—He, him, his.
Indirect—Tu, tum, tus.

He adds in exemplification, "He seized him by the throat, but in at the same moment caught him by his hair." A fellow would write hurricanes with an inflection like that.—Boston Herald.

WHY THE SEA IS SALT

IT HAS BEEN SO EVER SINCE THE CREATION OF THE WORLD.

Of Great Benefit to Mankind—Continents Produced by the Skeletons of Animals That Could Not Have Lived In Fresh Water—Moses' Short Account.

The sea at present contains 90,000,000,000,000,000 tons of salt. If this salt could be gathered in a solid form and compressed into the shape of a cube, it would contain 10,173,000 cubic miles. Each edge of such a cube would measure somewhat more than 200 miles. This is enough to cover all the land on this globe with a uniform layer of salt to a depth of 1,000 feet.

This statement as to the saltiness of the sea is interesting enough in itself, but it is also suggestive. The questions may well be asked, Where did all this salt come from, and what is the use of it? Many scientific gentlemen have attempted to answer this first question, and their efforts are not entirely satisfactory. The second question is not so difficult.

According to the history of the creation of the world, as told by Moses in the Genesis, it is implied that the ocean existed before the land, for, on the "third day" the "water under the heavens" was gathered together and the dry land appeared.

This statement has bothered a great number of able philosophers, who, in their effort to stick to the letter of the Scripture and at the same time to reason out everything on perfectly natural principles, have in the puzzled to know how such a grand transformation could be accomplished in one day. And their perplexity was not relieved when learned geologists announced that it must have required ages for the waters that enveloped the earth to subside and reveal this land that lay beneath.

But when it was suggested that the word "day" as used by Moses meant, not a period of 24 hours, but an era of thousands of years, the difficulty was removed. This meaning of the word "day" is at present generally accepted by devout scientists, who now declare that there is nothing impossible in Moses' account of the creation.

This doctrine, to be sure, is lamentably brief. It was hardly adequate to pass over such a huge event as the creation of a world in a few lines. That was a big story from a newspaper point of view, and thoughtful persons must acknowledge that Moses did not take advantage of his opportunity.

Accepting the Mosaic account, Dr. T. S. Hunt, a learned writer on the physical history of the globe, supplies what is considered a good reason for doing it in a very good reason for the presence of the salt in the sea. Having arrived at the point of Moses' meager narrative where the earth was in a molten state and surrounded by an envelope of gases and of water, Dr. Hunt says:

"The carbonates, chlorides and sulphates (chemical combinations of carbon, chlorine and sulphur with oxygen) were changed into silicates. The carbon, chlorine and sulphur, being thus freed from their oxygen, separated in the form of acid gases. These, with nitrogen, vapor of water and a probable excess of oxygen, formed the atmosphere, which was very dense (and also very unlike ours).

"The surface of the earth was covered with lumps of molten rock (probably resembling furnace slag). The depressed parts of the surface were filled with highly heated solutions of hydrochloric and sulphuric acids, which ate into the surface and decomposed it. In this way the silicates were changed to pure silica, taking the form of quartz as the atmosphere cooled, and the condensation of the water vapor produced a universal ocean, holding in solution salts of sodium, calcium, magnesium and ammonium. The atmosphere, thus freed of its noxious elements, became pure and fit for man."

It is therefore evident that the sea has been salty from the creation of the world. The salt does not come, as is generally supposed, from friction of the water against salt "rocks" in the bed of the ocean. This, then, answers the first question. Where did the salt come from? The second question is pretty well answered by Mr. G. W. Littlehales in Appleton's Popular Science Monthly.

"It seems," he says, "that the sea was made salt in the beginning as a part of the grand design of the Creator to provide for the system of evolution which has been going on since the creation. Many distinct species of living organisms exist in the sea as a result of its salinity, and their remains have largely contributed to the growth of continents."

The minute creatures that have lived in the sea for ages past have left enduring monuments in the shape of islands, rocks and continents. If the sea had not been salty, these marine animals could not have existed and secreted the hard substance known as a "calcareous skeleton," which has largely contributed to the growth of continents. Among these early inhabitants of the sea were corals, crinoids, sea urchins and starfishes.

The saltness of the sea has also much to do with the ocean currents, which distribute the heat of the tropics over the colder regions of the earth. Currents are largely due to the difference between the specific gravity of sea water and the fresh water of rains. Thus, when rain falls on a certain part of the ocean, the effort of the heavier salt water of the ocean to establish an equilibrium causes a current. — New York World.

Chevalier Bayard.

The famous Chevalier Bayard, who is held up in all the histories and romances as a model of chivalry, was greatly opposed to the use of firearms, and always ordered his troops to put captured musketeers to death without mercy, as practicing a form of warfare entirely uncivilized and unlawful.

CAUGHT HIS TRAIN ON HORSEBACK.

A Runaway Locomotive Had Many Sleeping Passengers In Tow.

Early one morning the engineer and fireman of the Santa Fe overland train, bound east, when near Cajon pass, imagined they saw something on the track right ahead. Thinking the train was about to be wrecked they both jumped. The engineer was rather badly hurt, but when the fireman picked himself up out of the dust he found that the engine had made kindling wood of a wagon to which two horses had been attached. Their driver had seen the headlight of the engine and had jumped in time to save himself, and the animals themselves were cropping the dried grass along the roadside, which showed that they had not been greatly disturbed by the accident.

But the train, with nobody at the engine's throttle, was plunging away through the darkness, the passengers asleep in their berths, utterly unconscious that they were being drawn by a wild locomotive.

The fireman, who had been left behind, thought he would try to overtake the flying train on foot. Then he changed his mind and, jumping astride one of the horses, he set out after the runaway train. He knew it must stop shortly, as it had to climb a very steep grade, and if the fire under the boilers was not kept up the supply of steam would not furnish sufficient pressure to keep the wheels going around. The vagrant train did stop a mile and a half from where the accident occurred. There did not seem to be any reason for an interruption of the journey just at that point, and so the conductor and brakeman hurried ahead with their lanterns to ask the engineer what had given out.

When they found the cab empty, of course the trainhands were very much mystified. They asked each other a good many questions, and were engaged in looking up theories to account for the mysterious disappearance of the engine crew when the fireman came loping along on the horse he had borrowed. After explanation had been made, he turned his horse toward this city and brought the first tidings the railroad people had of the missing train. A back was sent out to the scene with another engineer, and as soon as steam was raised the overland went on over the hill through to Cajon pass. The same carriage brought the injured engineer to the city.—San Francisco Examiner.

ARTISTS AND TRADESMEN.

In the Early Days the Former Had a Struggle to Live.

Among the artists resident in Glasgow who had acquired before 1840 somewhat of a reputation Graham Gilbert, Horatio Macculloch and Daniel Macnee are those most widely known to general fame. To these men fell the prizes of the profession such as they were at that time. Prices were then on a scale that would not be thought handsome for landscape and portrait painters of today.

The smaller men—not very numerous, it is true, and yet some of them most deserving—had a tolerably hard struggle for existence and had to eke out their income by other work than that of regular picture painting. Macculloch and Macnee themselves made money in their younger days by decorating the lids of snuffboxes. The average painter was frequently pretty much of a bohemian, living from hand to mouth and glad to clear off a tradesman's bill by painting the portraits of the worthy shopkeeper and his wife.

One of our best known artists talks how from time to time long years ago when he was engaged at a sitter's house on the portraits of a successful clergyman and his family the dinner hour arrived. He was not considered "genteel" enough to be asked to take a place at the table, but the mistress of the house kindly sent to the parlor, where he was working, a plate of stewed rhubarb to keep him from wearying while the family fed.—Magazine of Art.

In a Countess and a Brewer.

A unique occupation for a woman is reported from Berlin. The proprietor of a large brewery there received a request to allow a woman to see the interior arrangements of the brewery. After looking at various processes through which the golden beverage has to go the lady inquired for several details of the peculiar machinery in the malthouses, which proved to the brewer, to his great surprise, that she was perfectly familiar with every detail of the entire complicated machinery. Upon inquiry it was learned that the lady, a Russian countess, had a large acreage of barley growing on her estate, and in order to increase her revenue from this source she had built a brewery, which she managed all alone. She was interested very much in the pneumatic malting apparatus, which she could not get skilled labor necessary for the production of malt on her Russian estates. Tasting the product of the Berlin brewery, she stated that her own beer was not much inferior to the German product. When a few days later the brewer received some samples of the lady's Russian beer, he pronounced it excellent and not inferior in any respect to the best Bohemian or German beer. The lady is believed to be the only woman brewer in Europe.—Philadelphia Record.

Cloth Made From Peat.

Peat fiber can be bleached to snowy whiteness and will dye any color. One of the great advantages of cloth made from peat fiber is that it is entirely antiseptic and possesses properties which render it inimical to parasitical organisms. In appearance the finer makes are quite equal to the best tweeds and closely resemble the camel's hair cloth.

"Is this your pug dog, madam?"

"Yes, sir."

A PLUM FOR FIVE YOUNG MEN.

At Last They Get the Money They Found in a Stocking When They Were Boys.

A decision was handed down Thursday by Vice-Chancellor Emery by which about $1, 00 will be divided equally among five young men. On August 27, 1 70 William Cashman, Thomas Fox, Robert Devine Charles Fox, and William Crawford were roaming along the banks of the Elizabeth river, near the Pennsylvania railroad when Crawford picked up an old stocking tied at both ends and full of something. Crawford, then nine years old, was the youngest of the five. He began to swing the stocking as a plaything. He says Cashman took the stocking from him, but the others say he threw it down and then Cashman picked it up. However that was each took a turn hitting the others with it.

Finally it burst and some rags and ribbons fell out together with a roll of bills. The boys counted $755. They started to divide the cash, but were interrupted, and finally they took it to Fox's father, who turned it over to John Keron then Chief of Police, with a request that he find the owner. No owner ever appeared Crawford wanted it all on the ground that he found the money. The others demanded that it be equally divided, and the case came into court. After various complications it got into chancery, where it lay for a long time.

When they found the money they were mere schoolboys. Now three of them are married, while the division of the money, which has been increased by interest, will probably lead to the marriage of a fourth.

A LEAP YEAR EUCHRE PARTY.

The Game Was Followed By a Leap Year Dance.

Leap year with its accompanying ceremonies was remembered at the meeting of the Young People Progressive Euchre Club of Dunellen and North Plainfield, last Friday. The club met at the home of Miss Janie Churchill, of Dunellen, where they were delightfully entertained. Progressive euchre occupied the first part of the evening. Miss Blanche Marlow was the winner of the first prize among the young ladies, while Charles English and Charles Coriell tied for the other first prize. Mr. English won on the play off. Miss Mattie Barrett and Miss Charlotte Williams were also tied for one of the second prizes, but on the play off it was awarded to Miss Barrett. Miss Janie Churchill took the other prize.

A leap year dance followed and made the evening pass very quickly to which the collation found a pleasing interruption.

A MISER'S HOARD IN DISPUTE.

Officials of Union County and Linden Township Claim It.

The money found in the hovel of Peter Schwar, the miser, who died a few days ago, is claimed by both Linden township and Union county. The township officials have the cash, which is said to be $1,034.88, and refuse to give it up.

County Physician O'Reilly visited Linden yesterday and made a demand on Health Officer Wilton C. Soden for the money, which the latter refused to hand over. The County Physician went away indignant. The amount was then turned over to the Overseer of the Poor, who once took out the necessary papers to act as administrator for the property of the dead miser. The widow will receive $200, and the balance will be turned into the town ship treasury to pay for the keeping of the miser and his wife during the years they were dependent on the township for support.

MRS. VENINO GETS A DIVORCE.

The Action Was Brought, in a Spokane Court by Reed & Coddington.

Reed & Coddington have received notice that a divorce has been granted their client, Mrs. Matilda Venino, from her husband, Alfred S. Venino. By the terms of the court decision she is made custodian of the children and receives $30 a month alimony. The action for the divorce was commenced in the courts at Spokane, Washington, where it will be remembered the husband went and commenced proceedings against his wife. As soon as the papers were served on her, Messrs. Reed & Coddington set up a counter claim in her favor and the result is as above. While they were residents of this city they lived on Seventh street. Venino deserted his wife several years ago, and at the time it caused a great deal of talk in this city. He is a music teacher.

High School Notes.

The question of drilling during the winter at the Columbia Cycle Academy has been presented to the High School Cadet Company for action. A majority of the members have expressed themselves as in favor of it, although no definite action has been taken.

THEATRICAL.

The people demand a change. They wish something new all the time. In all walks of life this is demanded, and especially so in the amusement world. Minstrelsy has been plodding along in its time worn grooves for years; always the same. Black faces, singing and fares. It remained for Al. G. Field to leave the old-time ruts and adapt himself to the times, the progressive times in which we live. The people wanted a change, and after a year of laborious labor the Al. G. Field Big White Minstrels is presented for their approval. It is the largest legitimate minstrel company in the world. It is a new show in every thing. Over a half a hundred minstrel stars are engaged with this company. At Music Hall next Thursday.

Every turn of the vaudeville kaliedoscope at Proctor's Pleasure Palace reveals a new and colossal combination of varieties and novelties. Mr. Proctor has shown great energy and ingenuity in the securing of attractions and his new music hall continues crowded to capacity. Those whimsical and hilarious entertainers, Weber and Fields, return with their droll songs and dances and imitations of German sharpshooters. The Twin Sisters Abbott, the two pretty waifs of "1492" make their vaudeville debut, singing ballads to their own mandolin accompaniments. Lottie Gilson has new songs, Billy Emerson, the famous minstrel appears, George Lockhart's comedy and cycling elephants are in their twentieth week. Acrobatics are illustrated by the Flying Dillons and the Four Mosers, who are jugglers as well as gymnasts. Marletta and Belloni exhibit trained white cockatoos. The Acme Four have a very funny sketch.

A MEMORIAL SERVICE.

ENJOYABLE ENTERTAINMENT GIVEN BY THE A. O. U. W.

Music and Recitations Were Part of the Programme, While the Past Grand Master Made Good Remarks on the Order.

It is probable that Plainfield never had such a favorable opinion of the Ancient Order of United Workmen as at present. The entertainment given last Friday at Y. M. C. A. Hall by Columbia Lodge, No. 68, A. O. U. W., was largely attended and everyone went away well pleased with the programme as with the order itself. The programme was an excellent one and included several selections by the Young Men's Symphony Orchestra led by P. Ludwig Conde.

Just as the opening strains of the Dramatic Overture were rendered by the orchestra the electric lights suddenly went out and the hall was plunged into complete darkness. The gas was lighted at once, however, and the musicians started over again. A short opening address by Edward C. Peace followed, in which he welcomed the visitors and spoke of the entertainment as partially a service in memory of the two comrades who had been called away in the past year. He also remarked that the order was a beneficient one. Rev. Herbert F. Randolph offered prayer, and then a quartette, composed of Elmer H. Runyon, George O. Stevens, Alfred Holmes and William H. Runyon, sang a selection and responded to the applause with an encore. Miss Etta Raybert gave a very pathetic reading entitled "Connor," after which the audience was favored with Schubert's "Grand Serenade" by the orchestra. Past Grand Master Workman John W. Diefendorf, of Newark, made an address on the order, telling of its history, its present condition, its benefits and its enjoyments. After his discourse, E. E. Runyon sang a pleasing solo and then Miss Raybert read a very amusing sketch, entitled "Miss at Play." The quartette gave another selection and replied with two encores, one of which completely brought down the house. Rev. C. E. Herring then gave a short, but very interesting talk on the priciples of the order. He remarked the fact that while competition was a great natural law, cooperation was also, and he spoke briefly, but to the point, on the the main principles of the Ancient Workmen, Charity, Hope and Protection. An operatic selection from "Fanchon" by the orchestra ended the programme.

The committee, in whose hands the management of this very successful evening lay, consisted of W. A. Woodruff, chairman; J. A. Baersachs, Eugene M. Laing, Henry Lütke and G. T. Dunham.

CLOSING SESSION OF THE RETAIL MERCHANTS ASSOCIATION.

Officers and Committees for the Ensuing Year—A Banquet Ended the Convention —Toast Given by Mayor Alex. Gilbert.

The afternoon session of the Retail Merchants' Association of New Jersey was called to order promptly at 3.30 o clock Thursday by President James P. Sullivan.

The first order of business was that of electing the remaining officers of the association, which resulted as follows: First vice-president, W. Wilkie, Harrison; second vice president, J. W. Smith, Plainfield; recording secretary, John C. Hendrie, Paterson; financial secretary, W. W. Gilby, Westfield; treasurer, P. S. Atkinson, New Brunswick.

After the election of Mr. Hendrie the Paterson delegation presented him with a large box, which he was requested to open. Upon doing so he discovered a large handsomely decorated "Tea" gown, a bouquet of flowers and a small box of choice nuts and fruit. The former article was presented by the ladies of Paterson, in view of the fact that the popular Secretary had failed to bring one with him. Mr. Hendrie responded in a very happy manner.

The committee, composed of J. G. Paton, J. E. Banks and John Love, to whom the President's message and Secretary report were referred, then reported. They recommended that the one cent postage be adopted and that opposition be made to the proposed increase to 2 cents; to reduce the rates of postage on packages, also that an effort be made to secure cheaper telephone rates, and that the proper committee be authorized to settle all difficulty with the printer in regard to the "Black List." The above were all concurred in by the members and adopted.

Then came the battle of the convention, namely the recommendation that the sale of the Lily brand of condensed milk be pushed by the State Association. It appears that some time ago the merchants were handling the Lily brand as manufactured by a man named Doyle. An effort was made on the part of the Hudson County Association to secure a reduction in the price, which they failed to do. In the meantime the association made a contract with a Maine concern for the supply of milk, the same to be called the Lily brand.

Meanwhile Doyle had his brand registered, which would apparently prevent the Hudson people from using a brand by that name. Owing to a misunderstanding the Paterson Association took up the Doyle milk and have been selling it ever since, causing a difference between the associations which was far from pleasant. The matter was discussed pro and con yesterday afternoon for two and one-half hours, and was finally settled by the Paterson association voluntarily agreeing to concede all rights and give up the milk to the State association at the same figure for which it was being purchased. The reports of the local associations were not read, but handed to the Secretary, who will have them printed with the minutes. The legislation, insurance, trades interests, transportation and executive committees all made brief reports. There was, however, nothing of any great importance brought out in the statements. The advisability of the association placing several special brands of goods on the market was discussed, and all thought it an excellent plan.

The secretary read a letter from the National association, in which the latter urged the State association to join with them. There was no action taken, however, in the matter. The matter of the association's indebtedness was referred to the trades interest committee, and it was suggested that assessments be made on local associations to meet the same. It was unanimously adopted that the trades interest committee secure and place a trade mark flour on the market. The resignations of the Hackettstown and Deckertown associations were placed in the hands of the executive committee, with power.

It was decided to revise the minutes and have them published in The Trade Review, the official organ of the association. The following amendment to the constitution was offered and adopted: That the officers consist of a president, first and second vice-presidents, recording secretary, financial secretary and a treasurer, and that they be elected yearly by ballot, and hold office till their successors are elected.

Mr Meyers offered a resolution that the hearty thanks of the association be conveyed to the local association for the magnificient reception accorded, with due appreciation of the efforts made to make their stay a pleasant one. The committee on decoration was also thanked. The resolution was adopted by a rising vote. The president then appointed the following standing committees:

Executive Committee—W. H. Everett, Newark; W. V. Munson, Paterson; J. W. Beach, Jersey City; A. Greenfield, Kearney; William Blake, Westfield.

Transportation Committee—G. C. Manson, Paterson; F. W. Dunn, Plainfield; W. W. Lyon, Newark; J. Newton, Jersey City; J. R. Gaskill, Trenton.

Trades Interest Committee—J. A. Smith, Plainfield; William Smark, Trenton; J. G. Paton, Paterson; J. E. Banks, Jersey City; D. E. Miller, Westfield.

Insurance Committee—J. E. Banks, Jersey City; P. S. VanAngien, New Brunswick; J. M. Dillistin; Paterson; C. J. Witt, Paterson; Franklin Cort, Newark.

The seventeenth semi annual convention then adjourned and after a short recess all were invited to the Camera Club rooms where the most pleasant portion of the convention was enjoyed, the banquet. It was an occasion to be remembered for its completeness in every detail. The tables were spread to please the fancy of most anyone, and the body of men that surrounded them was certainly a most noteworthy and representative one.

At the head were seated President James Sullivan, and to his left was Mayor Gilbert and Assemblyman W. R. Codington, while following in succession on each side of the room were the delegates and invited guests.

To the left of the president was Charles M. Ulrich, who acted as toastmaster. For one hour and a half those present enjoyed the menu which for excellence and service could not be surpassed by any dinner at Ludwig Conde and orchestra rendered a choice programme that was heartily encored. The music in no small measure gave a decided finish to the event and put everyone in the best of humor by the time cigars were lighted.

Toast Master C. M. Ulrich then called for order and in a few words expressed his gratification on behalf of the Plainfield Grocers' Association in having the honor to entertain such a representative gathering of business men and hoped at some future time they would again have the pleasure. He then introduced Mayor Gilbert, who responded to the toast "The Issue of the Hour." He replied in substance as follows: after indulging in a few witty remarks:

If a man has a large business experience it is very easy for him to make an after-dinner speech. I have had more of that kind to eat than it was twenty years ago. Today we have no such men as Webster, Calhoun and Randolph. We don't catch the bright flashes of wit that used to be seen. Take the spirit of patriotism manifested in Congress thirty years ago. At that time there was no Senatorial courtesy, no debate on the question whether we would adjourn from day to day. On the Fourth of July, 1861, President Lincoln called Congress together. War had broken out between the north and south. In the President's message 50,000 men were asked for and $5,000,000 in U. S. bonds. It was referred to the committee of ways and means, whose chairman on the next day, at which time one hour was allowed for discussion. When it came up one Congressman spoke for one hour in opposition, another occupied the same time in favor of the bonds and Senate unanimously. That was patriotism. The Senate of today is composed of men who are more or less interested in their party than the country's needs. You are business men and the currency question affects you. The country is paralyzed owing to a disordered currency, with no ability to correct it. Is it necessary to admit this? I am sorry to say it is. We stand today great in everything except ability to correct the error. The United States Government is today embarrassed. We are threatened because the United States, instead of performing her duties is trying to carry a gold reserve which should be carried by the banks. This condition of affairs will continue until we can get the Government out of the banking business. If the matter was left to the people to settle it would not be long before it would be fixed speedily. What can we do? A well-defined policy should be adopted. The Government should state that at $50,000,000 indebtedness and our credit would advance rapidly. An established policy should be adopted and it should be prepared to vote to accomplish that object.

The Mayor closed his remarks, which were heartily encored, by relating a humorous story.

Vocal selections were then rendered by Messrs. Wm. N. Runyon, E. E. Runyon, Alfred Holmes and Geo. O. Sprenk.

President James Sullivan was then called upon and responded to the toast, "The State Association." He reviewed in a general manner the work of the past year and threw out many valuable suggestions for the coming one. He thought that the department and cut-rate stores that were springing up throughout the State were exerting a harmful influence in that section and depreciating the value of property in the cities and towns.

After several selections by the quartette and a few remarks by Mr. Everett, of Newark, the event closed.

Marriage of Miss Dimock to Mr. Dudley.

Cards have been issued by Dr. and Mrs. Alonzo Pettil, of Elizabeth, announcing the marriage of their sister, Miss Juliet Elizabeth Dimock to John Mason Dudley, on Saturday, January 11th. Miss Dimock is well known in the cities of Elizabeth as the popular helps of Sunday-schools, used in the primary departments, and many in this city remember her effective and instructive talks before Sunday school conventions. When in her trip around the world she introduced the different nations in costume, and won the interest of her audience for the world's evangelization.

BISHOP VINCENT'S WORK

THE FAMOUS DIVINE WAS ONCE A RESIDENT OF THIS CITY.

He Comes Next Sunday and Will Occupy Pulpits in Two of the Local Churches —He Will Receive a Warm Greeting.

The older residents of Plainfield will remember when that leading divine, Bishop John H. Vincent, was living in Plainfield. On Sunday he returns to the city that was his home for twenty-one years, and will preach in the First M. E. church where he labored so hard and so faithfully while a resident of this city.

The Bishop, then Rev. John H. Vincent, D. D., came to Plainfield in 1-67 from Chicago, having just been elected head of the Sunday school department of the Methodist church. Here he lived on the corner of West Fifth street and Arlington avenue, then called Union street, across Arlington avenue from the High School, until his election to the office of bishop necessitated his removal to Buffalo. His present official residence is in Kansas.

While in Plainfield Bishop Vincent was a great feature in the church life of Plainfield and did more than anyone else toward bringing about the feeling of unity and friendship between the different churches. He was one of the organizers of the minister's association which so aids that spirit at present, and also arranged union meetings of Sunday school teachers. Bishop Vincent was instrumental in the formation of the international Sunday school lesson and is president of the committee that selected them. In 1888, he was elected one of the sixteen bishops of the Methodist church.

While residing in Plainfield he started the Chautauqua movement that resulted in the organization of the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle which is so widely known all over the country at the present day. He also started a branch of the same society in Plainfield. For four years he served very efficiently on the Board of Education.

He now comes from Cambridge, Mass., where he has been preaching at Harvard University for the past six weeks, being one of the six leading preachers who share the pastorate together of that ancient institution. His son, George E. Vincent, graduated from the Plainfield High School in 18 0, at the same time as Ernest R. Ackerman, Winfield S. Angleman, Franklin S Smith and twelve others, and is now professor of sociology at the University of Chicago.

Sunday morning, Bishop Vincent preached in the First M. E. church in the morning and at Monroe Avenue chapel in the evening. The Monroe Avenue chapel can be reached by the trolley cars as it is directly along the line.

Borough Real Estate Transfers.

The following transfers of real estate have recently been made in Somerset county:

Fidelity Title and Deposit Co. to Irenaeus P. Allen, North Plainfield, $1; Irenaeus P. Allen et ux. to Josephene Boyce, North Plainfield, $800; Winifred Van Winkle and husband to Lewis M. Codington, North Plainfield, $1,800; Lydia A. Dilts, Bound Brook, to John H. Marsh, North Plainfield, $1,000; Alfred Westerfield to Anna D. Nelson, North Plainfield, $1,850; Henry F. Forker and Wm. Forker et ux. to Maria P. Allen, North Plainfield, $1; Irenaeus P. Lena Linbarger and husband to Hobart E. Rider, Plainfield, Union Co., $2,700; John P. Marsh et ux. to Geo. B. White, North Plainfield, $1,800; Lydia A. Ferris and husband to Henry S. Zimmerman, North Plainfield, $2,500.

Editor Runyon proclaims that $10,000 a year is not a cent too much to pay the Governor of New Jersey. Of course it is not, but when Editor Runyon compels his compositors to work for $2.50 a week, and docks them at the rate of $12 a week for lost time, he poses as a man who preaches liberality in properly compensating labor and practices the most niggardly penuriousness with his own employes.

PUTTING UP A STOVE.

A Version of the Operation That Rarely Happens In Real Life.

This is about a man who put up a stove.

It is unnecessary perhaps to go further with it. You know in advance just how he swore and tore and spoiled the carpet, and the pipe didn't fit and he skinned his knuckles and cut his finger and spilled soot down the back of his neck and finally went up town and got six men to finish the job.

"Johnson," said Johnson's wife at dinner yesterday, "I want you to come home early this afternoon. I want that sitting room stove up and going by Sunday."

"All right, my dear," said Johnson. "I'll be home at 4."

So that afternoon Johnson's wife sent the children over to visit on the other side of town and stuffed rags in all the cracks to deaden sound. After a fervent prayer that all the neighbors would be out of town for a few hours that afternoon she was ready for Johnson.

He arrived promptly.

"The stove is out in the wood shed," said his wife.

The stove was not very large, and after Johnson had dressed himself for the occasion, with the help of Mrs. Johnson, who had taken care to have his old clothes and gloves handy, he got the stove to the back porch without much difficulty.

It must be blackened," said Mrs. Johnson as she mixed the blacking. It blackened to a beautiful finish with very little rubbing, and Johnson whistled as he work.

Then he tacked down the oilcloth and the zinc and kept on whistling.

He took the stove in carefully and put it in the right place.

There was plenty of the old stovepipe, and while he cleaned it in the alley with a stick Johnson sat on the back porch and listened to him whistle.

The first joint went on all right, and the damper staid in place. The next joint fitted so well that Johnson almost stopped whistling in sheer admiration for it, and so did the next one. The elbow fitted admirably, and the collar and last joint went on like a top. The seam was on the right side all the way up.

Then he went out

Too Much Extravagance.

Mrs. Blubbud was describing the arrangements for her daughter's wedding.

"After that," she said, "the wedding epithalamium will be"——

"The what?" asked Mr. Blubbud.

"The wedding epithalamium."

"I won't pay for it!" he exclaimed sharply. "You've spent all the money on flowers that wedding that I can afford."—Chicago Post.

A Sudden Reformation.

"Charley is getting so economical!" said young Mrs. Tocker.

"That is quite an unusual trait in him."

"Yes. I have only observed it in him this week. He insists on wearing his old 50 cent necktie so as to save those for which I paid $1.50 apiece."—Washington Star.

Unanimous.

"How does it happen," remarked the captain to the lieutenant, "you didn't marry old Richman's daughter?"

"Oh, the family was dead against it!"

"But what about the girl?"

"Well, you see, she happened to be one of the family."—Tit-Bits.

Plainfield's Evangelist.

Rev. Arthur Crane, of Carleton avenue, left Monday afternoon for Franklin, N. H., where he will conduct a series of revival services.

"Give me a liver regulator and I can regulate the world," said a genius. The druggists handed him a bottle of DeWitt's Little Early Risers, the famous little pills. L. W. Randolph, 143 W. Front St.

A SUNBEAM BROKE A BANK.

The Faro Dealer Thought Its End Was a Wet Cloth.

"That piece in your paper 'bout the guy that cleaned up the faro banks out in Seattle," mused Bettam High, the Chicago gambler as he told the waiter to "bring on three for a half," "ain't in it with my personal experience. This war cat in Cripple Creek when the boom was way up an a good play again a right bank, see, was worth more to the banker than a split in the best claim you could get if they broke even. Do you know Eatem Up Jake? That was his name of course, but the gang give him the handle 'cause he could chew so fast, see? Well, Eatem Up got hold of a piece of money in Chicago—he win on a roll eff'n short money, see, an he goes out to Cripple Creek an starts to dealin. De lay out was in a little frame, pine board joint 'bout's big's a dry goods box. Jake gets a good play, you know—took a minute to settle after every turn, see? But I didn't tell you 'bout the knothole. You see, Jake's knothole in a board right back of the dealer. Jake, he's in the lookout chair, see? Jake don't have no clock there, see, so nobody minds the daylight, only it makes the dealer a little sleepy, an Jake, he's kinda sleepy.

"Well, there's a tin horn from over in another joint—a plugger in the stud game, see? He blows in an buys two red checks, waits for cases, fergits the copper cue play an gets whipsawed. Then—loses both bets. Then he buys half a stack of whites an keeps the seat, playing mostly cases. He keeps his checks in his hands, an Jake don't keep cases on him. Well, he goes broke, but Jake doesn't know it.

"The Jack's in case, see, an the sunlight's coming through the knothole over the dealer's shoulder, hits the jack right in the center, an it looks like a white check. The jack wins. Dealer pays a white check on the jack. Tin horn pushes the sleeper over between the queen an the king, an it wins again, see? An, on the level, the guy win and win, an nothin can stop him. Five deals afterward he has the check back out, an Jake says:

"'I can't deal for you no more. Me roll is gone.'

"Next day I stake Jake in the poker game an tell him how it happened, an he says:

"'Well, wat yetchink of that? Wouldn't that skin you? I've heerd of guys winning out de bank roll off'n eat money, but I never heard of winning out on a shadder.'"—Elmira Telegram.

PERCENTAGE OF POOR EYES.

Only One Person In Fifteen Has Both Eyes In Good Condition.

Only one person in 15 has both eyes in good condition, and in 7 cases out of 10, one eye, generally the right, is stronger than the other. It is found that as people use right or left handed so they are right or left sighted, and while apparently looking with both eyes they often really use only one. Out of 20 persons whose eyes were tested by a German doctor two only were found to be left sighted.

The reason of the greater strength generally possessed by the right eye is not altogether understood, but probably the natural tendency to the greater use of the right side of the body has something to do with it. In using weapons, for instance, mankind has been taught to assume for ages attitudes in which the right hand and side have most exercise, and this discipline has undoubtedly had effect on the eye.

Old sea captains after long use of the telescope find their right eyes much stronger than the left—the direct effect of exercise. This law is confirmed by the experience of artists. If a person who has care of equal hearing power has cause to use one ear more than the other for a long period, the ear brought into requisition is found to be strengthened and the ear not used loses its hearing in a corresponding degree.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

He Wanted a Plumber.

"Man you sent to fix that range of our'n a poet?" asked a rural looking customer of the proprietor of a down town plumbing establishment.

"I—I—really, I don't know," responded the startled proprietor, with a look of sober inquiry.

"'Tain't as I got anything particular 'gainst poets, 'cept enough in their place, and I reckon there's nicks in the world for every sort, but when a cookin range is out of gear one wants a plumber."—New York Sun.

A Little Encouragement.

J. L. Toole was once entertained by a party of Edinburgh gentlemen at dinner. After the cloth was removed a little sociability was indulged in, and Mr. Toole was asked to give a recitation. This the veteran comedian sternly declined to do. A worthy bailie, whose knowledge of things theatrical was somewhat primitive, approached Toole, patted him on the back and said in a fatherly way: "Come awa', my man; dinna be bashfu'. We're no ill to please."—Household Words.

What Color Kind?

"What a nasty smell burned powder has!" said Johnny.

"Powder!" exclaimed his elder sister, Miss Maud, looking up. "Why, it hasn't any sm—oh, you mean gunpowder!"

And she turned a lovely, creamy shade of vermilion and became absorbed in her fashion magazine again. —Chicago Tribune.

ANTI-GARB BILL AGAIN.

SENATOR ROGERS INTRODUCES THE MEASURE IN THE LEGISLATURE.

Prevents the Wearing in Public Schools of Any Dress or Insignia Indicating Membership in a Religious Order.

The Legislature adjourned for the week Tuesday for want of business. The Senate went before noon and the House after sessions lasting about fifteen minutes each, morning and afternoon. Assemblyman Bullock of Passaic county, who claims to be the special representative of the workingman, has a grievance because he was not assigned to the committee on labor and industries. Monday night he approached Speaker Derrousse and asked authority to exchange one of his committee assignments with Mr. Skinner of Essex. The Speaker refused to sanction the trade and Tuesday Bullock sent in his resignation as member of three unimportant committees.

Speaker Derrousse took no action, saying it was a private communication. Bullock soon turned down for renomination last fall by the Republicans of Passaic county, but ran as an independent candidate and was endorsed by the Democrats and elected. He has been ignored in the make-up of committees, having received last place on three. Neither the Republican nor Democrats take him into their counsels.

A concurrent resolution was introduced by Mr. Barton tendering to Congress New Jersey support in any action that Congress may take to suppress the Armenian outrages. Bills were introduced as follows:

Limiting the season for hunting game in this State to between Nov. 10 and Dec. 10. Providing that no debt shall be a lien against a builder unless it be for labor or material and the claim be filed within four months and unless the claim be prosecuted within a year it shall be discharged.

The Senate confirmed as Prosecutor of Pleas for Gloucester county, Lewis Starr, whose appointment was made by the Governor Monday night. Mr. Starr will be the first Republican prosecutor for a quarter of a century. Senator Rogers of Camden introduced his "anti garb" bill of last year, with a few changes. It prevents the wearing in the public schools by any teacher of any dress, insignia, marks or emblem indicating the fact that such teacher is an adherent or member of any religious order, sect, or denomination, and imposing a penalty upon the Board of Education or trustees permitting violations of the act, for the first offense the penalty is $100 fine, and for second offense the same fine and loss of office, with disqualification to election or appointment for five years. Teachers offending are liable to suspension for one year for first offense, and for second offense they are to be forever disqualified from teaching in this State.

The bill was referred to the labor and industries committee, of which Rogers is chairman. President Thompson explained that this reference was made that it might be reported soon. Other committees would hold it, and the Senate would be besieged by the advocates of the bill. A similar bill was defeated last year in the Senate by a vote of five to sixteen, but Senator Rogers says it will pass this year as all the councils of American Mechanics in the State will urge the legislators to vote for it, and south Jersey councils requested its introduction.

Good Skating at Smalleys.

Although the weather is not the best for skating, Smalley's pond is in excellent condition for that most delightful of winter sports, a large crowd gathered there yesterday afternoon and evening to find the ice as smooth as glass, and very hard. It might be stated for the information of those who do not know the location of the pond that it may be found by following West Seventh street out toward New Market and taking the first road to the left beyond Clinton avenue. It may also be reached by Clinton avenue.

Many merchants are well aware that their customers are their best friends and take pleasure in supplying them with the best goods obtainable. As an instance we mention Perry & Cameron, prominent druggists of Flushing, Michigan. They say: "We have no hesitation in recommending Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to our customers, as it is the best cough medicine we have ever sold, and always gives satisfaction." For sale at 25 and 50 per bottle at Reynold's pharmacy, Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, manager.

MRS. ELWELL'S LECTURES.

The Last One Attended By Representative Women of Plainfield.

The third and last of Mrs. Maria Huntinton Elwell's course of lectures was given before a representative and deeply appreciative audience at Mrs. Kirtland Myers Tuesday afternoon. The subject was "King Lear." Mrs. Elwell first spoke of the difficulty most readers find in understanding the play, owing to the strongly intellectual conception and to its style being as it were "over-packed with meaning." Modern criticism throws much light on these difficulties. The chief characters were carefully analyzed, even the accessories of the play were shown to add to the ethical import of the whole. The following ladies have been present: Mrs. H. B. Opdyke, Mrs. Charles Fiske, Mrs. Runkle, Mrs. Newhall, Mrs. Case, Mrs. Lowe, Miss Lowe, Mrs. M. H. Eaton, Mrs. Rowland, Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, Miss E. E. Kenyon, Mrs. Gilbert, Mrs. L. V. F. Randolph, Mrs. Wright, Mrs. Baker, Miss Baker, Mrs. Souther, Mrs. Saunders, Mrs. Talmadge, Mrs. Henderson, Miss Henderson, Mrs. D. W. Pond, Mrs. Wills, Miss Cozad, Mrs. Kimball, Mrs. Edgar Mumford, Mrs. W. L. Brown, Mrs. Booth, Mrs. Harman, Mrs. Stillman, Mrs. Hedges; Mrs. Burlingham and Miss Langworthy, of New York, and others.

MUNYON GOING TO EUROPE.

He Leaves in a Few Days to Open Branch Stores in London.

The marvelous growth and great success of the Munyon Homoeopathic Remedy Company is an object lesson well worth studying. This company has been in existence only four years. They launched into a business which seemed already overcrowded, where the sharpest competition had to be met, yet we are told that this company earned last year over a quarter of a million dollars, and that the remedies are used in every civilized country. This shows what merit, backed by ceaseless energy and liberal advertising, can accomplish.

Mr. Munyon says he attributes his success to two reasons: First, making sure that his remedies were just what he claimed for them; second, telling the people the truth about them by liberal newspaper advertising.

"Onward, in some times in the history of this company," said Mr. Munyon, "when prospects looked pretty black, but I summoned the great army of newspapers to my aid. I told the people about my remedies. I asked them to believe me. I kept everlastingly telling the truth, and today these remedies can be found in every town in America, and the demand is so great in foreign countries that I leave in a few days to open branch establishments in London, Paris and Berlin."—Philadelphia Record.

Attending the Grand Lodge.

The annual session of the Grand Lodge of Masons of the State of New Jersey is being held in Trenton today. Those present from this city include C. O. Howard, H. W. Marshall and W. A. Coddington, of Anchor Lodge, No. 149; C. H. Rugg, W. A. Freeman, Stephen Beeching, W. H. Sebring, D. C. Adams and W. F. Bartlett, of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26. This evening W. H. Sebring, who has been appointed by the Grand Lodge, will make an official visit to Corson Commandery, of Lambertville. He will be accompanied by D. C. Adams and H. W. Marshall.

Mr. Hibbard for Senator.

Director Hubbard of the Board of Freeholders has been very favorably spoken of as a candidate for State Senator. He would make an excellent senator but what would we do for a man to take his place as director? No man has ever filled this position more conscientiously, more impartially or more satisfactorily—Elizabeth Journal.

They Desire to Thank Them.

The District Deputy Grand Master, his staff and all of the members of Queen City Lodge, No. 226, I.O.O.F., wish to extend their heartiest thanks to the members of Rebecca Degree Lodge, No. 4, I. O. O. F., for their donations of cake, etc., for the collation served after the installation Monday night.

Not a few who read what Mr. Robert Rowe, of Hollands, Va., has to say below will remember their own experience under like circumstances: "Last winter I had la grippe which left me in a low state of health. I tried numerous remedies, none of which did me any good, until I was induced to try a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The first bottle of it so far relieved me that I was enabled to attend to my work, and the second bottle effected a cure." CHANCE FOR A HOME.

THE PLAINFIELD RELIEF ASSOCIATION APPEALS TO CHARITABLE PEOPLE.

A House and Lot Given to the Association Subject to a Mortgage of $3,000—Members Anxious To Cancel This Mortgage.

The circular letter of the Plainfield Relief Association read on Sunday last by the pastors of most of the churches to their congregations was in the following form:

The Plainfield Relief Association has for nineteen years pursued its quiet way, and has each year, with careful and systematic management, done much in helping, cheering and encouraging the poor and miserable. It has now an opportunity to secure a permanent place for its offices, stores and work rooms. It asks aid in seizing this opportunity.

The gift of a house and lot, No. 241 West Front street, has been offered the Relief Association, subject to a mortgage of $3,000. The ladies of the Association ask in the honored name of Christian charity for contributions which will pay the mortgage, so that they can take the premises free of debt. The Relief Association will then be saved $180 from the present rent, and the income and the burden and danger of debt.

It asks, also, for help toward the amount of the mortgage to fit the house for its occupancy, making the total all subscriptions for this has been started by the pledges of five gentlemen, aggregating $600. Thus only $2,400 more will be required.

To the members of the churches, all of which the ladies have canvassed on the Relief Board, appeal is made, and opportunity is given to the congregations to assist in the early completion of the subscription, so that the Relief Association may go to work in its new home with renewed assurances of usefulness and success.

The Board of Managers of the Relief Association, by acquiring this property, will be able to relieve the rents paid by the various public charities of our community.

By order of the Board.

Emily C. F. Randolph,
741 East Front street. President.

The first attempt at organized charity in Plainfield was made by the ladies of the Relief Association in 1878. Prior to that it was quite possible for any impostor to be drawing "relief" or money from the City Poor Fund, from private individuals, and from a half dozen or more churches or benevolent societies. Lazy beggars in some cases lived on the fat of the land" at the expense of the industrious and charitable. Ex-Mayor Randolph in 1881 appointed an Overseer of the Poor with the distinct understanding that he would co-operate with the Relief Association. Since then through co-operation with the churches and the benefit societies in part through the "Organized Aid" movement the distribution of alms and the ministering of relief has gone on in a more considered plan. Nobody starves in Plainfield, and at the same time beggary and idleness are discouraged.

The operations of the Association have been carried on at some disadvantage, owing to their quarters being rented, and thus held under temporary arrangements. The chance is now open to secure permanent quarters at small cost. The Press is informed that nearly half of the sum needed has already been promised. It is a cause that speaks for itself—one in which every citizen and householder as well as every personal of charitable disposition should be interested, and one which therefore should need no pleading or urging. The ladies of the Relief Association give freely of their own time and means, and the whole community should cordially participate in this enterprise. Subscriptions may be sent to the president or to Mrs. H. P. Reynolds, the treasurer.

TO TRY IT AGAIN.

A 78 Year Old Widower Weds a 40 Year Old Divorcee.

John Smalley and Mrs. Hattie Fisher, both of Bound Brook, were married Monday night at 7 o clock at Mrs. Fisher's house on Front street. Rev. Dr. Thomas Elwood Davis, of the Presbyterian church, performed the ceremony. The bridegrooom is a wealthy widower, 78 years old. The present Mrs. Smalley is 40 years old, and is the divorced wife of Jeremiah R. Fisher. Among the gifts which Mr. Smalley gave his bride was a deed for a handsome mansion and grounds in Middlebrook.

Mrs. Smalley is a daughter of Isaac Colthar, of Grandview avenue.

A Dangerous Practice.

The habit of jumping from a train before it stops is a dangerous one and now a man lies in Muhlenberg Hospital suffering from injuries received by a two hurried leaving of the train. The injured man is Morris Laduski, a Pole who keeps a little peddler's shop at 58 Somerset street. He was returning to Plainfield on the train due here at 7:34 o'clock in the evening. He attempted to step off the train before it came to a standstill and was thrown heavily to the ground. No severe injuries resulted, but "Con" Guinee, the hackman, took him home. The ambulance soon after carried him to the hospital.

A SPIRIT OF DEVOTION.

AS THE REVIVAL MEETINGS CONTINUE INTEREST IS MAINTAINED.

Dr. Rodman Preached Last Night on Paul's Sermon to the Jews and Drew Admirable Conclusions for People Today.

There was an earnest spirit of devotion noticeable among those attending the service in the Crescent Avenue church Tuesday.

After the song service, Mr. Lewis sang very tenderly "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight," the choir joining in the chorus. Rev. Dr. Richards read the twenty-fourth chapter of the Gospel of Acts, commencing at the seventeenth verse. Prayer was offered by Rev. Jocelyn Johnstone. The sermon was preached by Rev. E. M. Rodman. He announced his text as Act 8:24: "And some believed not."

He spoke of the peculiar circumstances surrounding Paul's notable discourse to the Jews on this particular occasion, when some believed not the Word he preached. Continuing, in part, he said: We can almost feel the glow of his soul and catch the earnest words he spoke. There was no man better qualified to handle the Jews than Paul, who was also a Jew. He knew just what to say, how to say it and what not to say. The fact that the preacher belonged to the Hebrew race accounts for the fact that some believed and some did not. There were many strong barriers that had to be torn down, and Jesus did not come the way they had expected.

They scorned at Christ and Nazareth, and in consequence felt justified in rejecting him. If almost persuaded as we believe some were, we could almost understand their actions. Christ who had not a place to lay his head was despised by them. No one reason would account for their rejection of the truth. They probably had many excuses, such as pride, family position, and a nation ality which they were ashamed to own. And when Paul got through preaching they absolutely had no excuse. God worked by ordinary means, just as he does now through his servants.

It makes me tremble sometimes when I hear such words as we sang tonight. "I Will Follow Jesus." It means a great deal, and to test it, Christ often places a trial in our lives that we may make the declaration stronger. Then in our rebellion we say "I could stand anything but that!" It's our place to defend the truth and die for it if necessary. It is dangerous to postpone action as some are doing now. God has prepared a place in us for the reception of his truth, and nothing else will fill that place. Without it we are incomplete, and he has sent his spirit to lead us into all truth. Many persons pass their lives in learning, yet never able to come to the truth.

It is high time that the community was awakened, it will not hurt the Christians and there are a number of unsaved people who are only waiting to have you speak to them about their soul. In closing, Dr. Rodman related one or two very touching incidents in his experience, which were followed with a solo, "One Sweetly Solemn Thought," by Mr. Lewis.

Dr. Richards then announced that Dr. Lewis would have charge this evening. He also stated that a special service would be held tomorrow evening for the Christian Endeavor, Epworth League and other kindred societies. Everyone is invited, however, to be present.

The after meeting last evening was in charge of Dr. Barnes, and was especially helpful.

The revival service at Hope chapel last evening was very largely attended and there was a deep interest manifest. Rev. G. Kennedy Newell conducted the service, using the words "Thou hast the words of eternal life" for his text. He gave a brief, earnest talk. Rev. W. C. O'Donnell followed with a few remarks along the same line of thought. The meeting was then thrown open and a large number testified. When the invitation was given several raised their hands, thus signifying a desire to become Christians.

A HAPPY SURPRISE.

Miss Maude Kinsey Passes Her Twenty-First Year Very Pleasantly.

One of the most enjoyable birthday surprises of the season was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Kinsey, 22 Duer street, last Monday when their daughter, Miss Maude Kinsey, celebrated her twenty-first birthday anniversary. The event was arranged by the Misses Jennie and Jessie Saxton, of 215 East Fourth street, and those invited met at their home and then proceeded to the home of Miss Kinsey. The latter had no knowledge of the affair, and when the jolly party of young people walked in she was completely surprised.

During the evening games and dancing helped to pass the time, which seemed very short. Miss Kinsey received another surprise when her little sister presented her with a gold watch and chain. The watch was the gift of her father and the chain was given by Miss Saxton. Other handsome presents were received by the young hostess. At a late hour excellent refreshments were served and the guests departed wishing Miss Kinsey many years of joy and happiness. Those present were: Misses Jennie and Jessie Saxton, VanFleet Giles, Holder, Morris, Dayton, Eggerding, Coriell, Messrs. Abram Holder, John Holder, Edhraim Vail, Rolland Dunbar, Henry Eggerding, Mr. and Mrs. Saxton, Mr. and Mrs. Elliott, of Plainfield; Mr. Clark, of Bound Brook.

LIBRARIANS TO MEET.

The New Jersey Association Will Hear Addresses by Talented People.

An important meeting of the New Jersey Library Association will be held in the Free Public Library of Newark, Thursday, January 30th.

At this meeting action will be taken looking to the introduction in the Legislature of a bill authorizing the appointment by the Governor of a State library commission, similar to those of Massachusetts, New Hampshire and other States. The State library commissioners have a general oversight of free library interests throughout the State, and, when composed of men well fitted for the position, such a commission is capable of doing a large amount of good.

Among the speakers at the meeting in Newark will be Melvil Dewey, of Albany, Secretary University of State, New York, Samuel Swett Green, of Worcester, Mass., of the Massachusetts Library Commission, Miss See, of the New Brunswick Library, and Miss Emma L. Adams, of the Plainfield Public Library.

A number of persons from Plainfield will attend this meeting, and any others who are interested in the subject are invited to be present. The morning session will begin at 10:30, the afternoon session at 2:30.

MAY INDICT OFFICIALS.

Union County Grand Jury to Come Into Court This Week.

The Union County Grand Jury, it is believed, will come into court this week with a big batch of indictments. The jury have been out three weeks. It is persistently reported that the jury will either bring in an indictment against the Mayor and Chief and the Board of Excise of Elizabeth, or offer presentments against them all because of the alleged liquor law violation, in accordance with the charge of Judge Van Syckle of the Supreme Court.

Engagement Announced.

The engagement is announced of Miss Sadie E. Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Smith, of Grandview avenue, to Harry T. Baglin, of Newark. The wedding will take place at the home of the bride's parents on April 12th, and will be quite a large event. The couple will probably take an extended bridal tour, after which they will take up their residence in Newark.

Famous Riders.

William Gabriel, one of the rough riders of Buffalo Bill's Wild West, is visiting his old comrade William Brace, who is spending some time in Plainfield. Brace has just been appointed chief of the department of cow boys and rough riders in the show and starts for London next month to see about obtaining some English cavalry men for the show.

SPORTSMEN WANT BETTER HUNTING AND FISHING IN JERSEY.

Sportsman's Game and Fish Protecting and Propagation Society Organized—Members to be Taken in Three Counties.

The adjourned meeting of sportsmen for the organization of a society, whose object is to provide means for co-operating with land owners and farmers, and to purchase game for restocking and propagating purpose, thereby insuring good sport to its members, and benefitting the property owners by stocking their lands with game and their ponds and streams with fish, and strictly enforcing the laws of trespass and any violation of the game laws, that may occur on the land given under the control of the society. Percy C. Ohl, at whose office the meeting was held, called the meeting to order and on his motion John Goff was chosen to preside. Mr. Henry Haurand acting as secretary, The committee for drawing up a constitution reported, and the constitution was adopted as read.

The organization is to be known as The Sportsmans Game and Fish Protective and Propagating Society of the Counties of Union, Middlesex and Somerset. The meeting was well attended and enthusiastic. Representatives from all the counties were present.

Many assurances were given by property owners and farmers, pledging their support. Several large tracts have already been secured. F. C. Phoebus, of the Green Brook Kennels, informed the meeting of a large consignment of live quail from Northwestern Virginia, now intransit to his address in this city, which would be liberated under the society's direction.

He also gave information as to the procuring of rabbits and other game. Other communications on the subject were read from various parts of the country, making it apparent that the success of this organization simply depended upon the efforts of its members.

The next meeting for the election of officers, etc., will be held Friday evening, February 7th, at 8:30 o'clock at the same place.

LAST TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Funeral Services Over the Remains of the Late W. H. Wilcox.

The home of the late Wm. H. Wilcox was filled with relatives and friends Tuesday afternoon who had come to pay the last tribute of respect to the departed. The Plymouth Brethren, of which the decedent was a member, had charge of the services, which were opened by the singing of a hymn. Paul J. Loizeaux then read the fifth chapter of First Thessalonians. This was followed with prayer by Alfred Jennings, after which he made a few remarks in testimony of the high Christian qualities of the departed. He said that the last time Mr. Wilcox attended meeting he asked to have his favorite hymn, "When We Meet Face to Face," sung, and it impressed all very much. At this point the above hymn was sung by the Brethren. James Parker then read the fourth chapter of First Thessalonians.

An opportunity was then given all to view the remains. Interment was in Hillside cemetery. A large bouquet, a bunch of roses, the gift of friends, rested on the casket during the service. Members from the Brethren acted as bearers.

THEATRICAL.

"One of the Bravest" will be the attraction at Music Hall next Saturday night. The play is a story of New York life, and deals with characters familiar to us all. It is a clever modern drama, the entertainment being meritorious and deserving. While it has its serious aspects, there is a rich vein of comedy running through the play. The situations are thrilling and follow each other in rapid succession. The specialties introduced by the members of the company, together with the singing, is a special feature. The scenic effects are decidedly realistic to life.

Women.

A free illustrated lecture will be given by Madam Swanstead, of New York, on "Woman, Her Mental and Physical Needs, Her Present and Future Possibilities," at the Y.M.C.A. hall, on Friday afternoon at three o'clock.

The days of the cider joint in its old-time form of prosperity are numbered.

DIDN'T GET WHAT SHE WANTED.

Bent of a Young Woman Who Undertook to Squelch a Grocery Clerk.

Two pretty young women entered a large up town grocery one evening last week. From their conversation it was evident that they belonged to some boarding school in the neighborhood and had stolen out for a few moments to buy dainties which they meant to smuggle to their rooms.

"There's one thing I don't like about the clerks in this store," said one of them, while they waited for the salesman, "and that's the way they insist on selling you that you don't want what you do want and that you do want what you don't want. Every time I come in here I have the same experience, and I'm just tired of it. The next time it happens I'm going to tell the clerk just what I think of him."

At that moment a clerk approached and asked the young women what they wanted. The one who had so much to complain about pointed at one of a row of cracker tins and said:

"I want a pound of those."

"Oh, no, you don't," said the clerk suavely; "you want some of these, or these here; they're all very nice."

The young woman threw a glance which said, "What did I tell you?" at her companion, and turning to the clerk said fiercely:

"No, I don't, anything of the kind. I want these and no others."

"I beg your pardon," he began, "I thought—"

"Never mind what you thought," said the young woman. "I guess I know what I want. Now just let me have a pound of those, please." And she turned to her companion with a look of triumph on her face which plainly meant, "Didn't I squelch him?"

"Very well, madam," said the clerk humbly, "but may I ask whether they are for yourself?"

"Well, of all the impertinent questions"— began the young woman, when her companion interrupted, and, turning to the clerk, said:

"Why do you ask?"

"Oh, because they're dog biscuit," replied the clerk indifferently. "Still, of course, if you want them, you can have them."

"Never mind," faltered the young woman who had insisted on having what she wanted. "I guess I don't want anything at all," and she strutted out of the store looking very much ashamed and followed by her companion, who was struggling to hide her laughter.

The clerk didn't say anything, but there was a satisfied smile on his face as he banged the cover down on the can of dog biscuit and walked away to wait on another customer.—New York Sun.

The Actress and Her Train.

The English stage has certain customs which greatly hurt a Frenchman who is not used to them. The last scene of every act is constantly interrupted, and sometimes in the most interesting part, by the tinkling of a little bell, which apprises the music to be ready to play in the interval between the acts. The actresses who perform the principal characters drag long trains after them, which have but four corners, like a carpet, the breadth prescribed by the importance of the character, and they are followed by a little boy in quality of a train bearer, who is as inseparable from them as the shadow from the body. This poor child, scarcely cropped and muffled up in a livery made to suit his stature within two or three inches, keeps his eye constantly fixed upon the train of the princess, sets it to rights when it is ever so little ruffled or disordered, and is seen to run after it with all his might when a violent emotion makes the princess hurry from one side of the stage to the other. This he does with all the phlegm and seriousness natural to the English.

In one play in the scene between the king and the queen—"in the moment which is to separate them forever the king flies into the arms of the queen, who embraces her royal consort, and they continue exchanging such ardor in transport, which excites in the whole audience the strongest emotions"—who can be affected to so high a degree as not to take notice of the attention of the little boy, who to repair the disorder which the queen's train unavoidably receives as she stirs and moves with impassioned attitudes in the arms of the afflicted monarch?—Grasley's "London in 1766."

They Are Professional Guests.

Some gentlemen of family who are clever at story, jest and repartee are following a singular business in London. There is a man there who entertains amusement and entertainment for all kinds of social gatherings, having men of family on his staff, who in the guise of guests manage to insure an enjoyable evening for the invited guests, and thus set the anxiety of the hostess, fearing a dull time for her guests, at rest. A couple of guineas will engage the services of a person of "good social attainments," who will so exercise his art of entertaining others as to put everybody at once into the brightest of spirits. Five guineas will command the services of an individual of "higher standing in the social scale," while the proportionately large will lay at $50 will secure those of a gentleman with a handle to his name.

Precious Perfume.

Scores of bottles which once contained perfumes have been found in Pompeii. In one jar having a capacity of two gallons there was a very delicate and ethereal perfume, the composition of which is not known. There was over a gallon of the liquid left in the receptacle, but upon being exposed to the air it began to evaporate so rapidly that the bottle was hermetically sealed in order to retain it.

The manuscripts of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries are, in many cases, almost illegible on account of the fading of the ink. At that time the lampblack inks passed out of use and chemical inks became popular.

SKETCHES BY M. QUAD

Speaking of Mr. Tompkins.

I had come out of the Fifth Avenue hotel and turned into Twenty-third street when a well dressed middle aged man overtook me and exclaimed:

"I beg your pardon, but how do you do, Mr. Tompkins; how do you do? I just caught sight of your face as you turned the corner and wasn't quite sure it was you. And how are things in Akron?"

"Moving along all right," I replied as I shook hands with him.

"How long have you been in town?"

"Oh, a couple of days."

"Here on business, of course? You were always a busy man. How's my brother Dan? You know Dan, of course—president of the First National bank?!"

"Certainly. Dan is all right and as hearty as a buck. He said I would be apt to run across you in New York."

"He did, eh?" queried the man, seeming to be quite surprised. "Are you going to remain long?"

"Three or four days."

"Then I'll call to show you around a little. I don't think you exactly remember me, do you?"

"N-o, not exactly."

"I saw you in Akron often for three or four years, and I made many purchases at your store. I think we were introduced by my brother Dan."

"No doubt. Your brother Dan is a keen, sharp fellow, isn't he?"

"Yes, pretty sharp," he replied in a noncommittal way and looked at me very sharply.

"Yes, he's a sharp one. The day I left Akron I met him on the street, and he said to me, 'Tompkins, if you meet my brother Bunko down in New York, tickle his chin for me.'"

"He said Bunko, did he?" queried the stranger as he began to draw off.

"That's what he said, sir. How is business in your line?"

"You think yourself quite one, don't you?" he sneered as he looked me over.

"Well, Tompkins of Akron is no spring chicken. Do you make mistakes of this sort often?"

"None of your business."

"No, of course not, but I just thought I'd inquire, you know. I'll tell your brother Dan I met you, but that you were off your feed. Good day, Bunko."

I went back to the hotel and found, sure enough, that Tompkins, of Akron was registered there. The bunko man had gotten the two of us mixed.

He'll Top the Crowd.

He entered the car on which I was seated on the Sixth avenue elevated, and after a while he leaned over and whispered in my ear:

"I'll be banged if they haven't done it!"

"Done what?" I asked.

"Got my watch!"

"Who?"

"Dunno. Some feller picked it out of my pocket!"

"Well, that's too bad. You ought to have been more careful. Are you a stranger in this city?"

"Yes, perfect stranger. Got here only two hours ago. Say, it's immense, ain't it?"

"I don't exactly understand."

"Don't you? Wal, I do."

"Do you know what'll happen when I git back home?"

"The folks will laugh at you for losing your watch."

"Will they? Not as I knows of. You jest let me git down alongside the stove in White's grocery and tell the crowd that some feller down here in New York picked that watch often me and I never felt a touch, and I'll be the biggest man in town for the next two weeks!"

"And if you lose your wallet you'd be a bigger man yet?"

"You bet I would! Here she is, stickin right outer my pocket, and there's $9 in her, and if somebody'll sneak her out and let me feel 'em I kin go home and knock the stew off'n the feller who was clubbed by a policeman and run over by a cable car down here!"

Caused by a Boy.

The other afternoon a boy of 10 years of age who was crossing Broadway at Murray street fell down and hit his head on the cobblestones. The result was a trifling scalp wound, but the boy burst into tears and sat down on the curbstone. Inside of 60 seconds a crowd of 100 persons had gathered. In another 60 the crowd blocked the street.

"What is it?" yelled one.

"Who's been run over now?"

"Has a call been sent in for the ambulance?"

"That's the third man killed right here."

For five minutes the crowd held the fort. The whole cars had to run slow, the mail wagons and trucks came to a dead stop, and City Hall park was black with people streaming across it to find out what had occurred. I saw a dozen men have their hats knocked off or their heads punched while trying to crowd to the front, and I followed four policemen into the mass, expecting to see nothing less than the mangled remains of three or four persons. When we reached the boy, one of the officers demanded:

"Here, what's the matter with you?"

"Got hurt," blubbered the lad.

"How? Where?"

"Fell down and hurt my head."

"Is that all? Get along with you! Come, now, gentlemen, scatter. Away you go! Nothing but a boy got a funk on the cocoanut."

"Oh! Ah! Um!" exclaimed the crowd, and the next minute Broadway had resumed its normal condition.—M. Quad in Detroit Free Press.

RETURNED AT LAST.

One of the Youthful Runaways Had Enough of Wandering.

One of the young adventurers that started for the West to kill Indians last week, returned Tuesday perfectly willing to stay in Plainfield for a while. According to John Devine, who was the lad that returned, they had some exciting adventures. After they left Plainfield, the two boys worked their way to Philadelphia and from there took a place about fifty miles South, according to Devine's reckoning. They returned on the Pennsylvania railroad to Newark. Here Smith, who was the other would be Indian fighter, made the acquaintance of a genuine "knight of the road." Devine was not particularly struck with his appearance, and when Smith and his new friend went into one of the free lodging houses in Newark to spend the night, Devine started for home. He finally reached home safely.

The revolver which was borrowed from Sam Vail, was given away in Philadelphia, as the boys were afraid that the police might discover it. Smith is still missing.

PRIDE OF PIONEER

A New Council of the Daughters of Liberty Instituted at Bound Brook.

A council of the Daughters of Liberty was instituted at Bound Brook Friday to be known as Pride of Pioneer, No. 66, by State Councilor Wilcox, of Long Branch, assisted by Deputy State Councilor Yard, of Newark, and Lucetta Council, No. 28, of this city.

The following officers will serve the council for the ensuing term: Junior ex-councilor, B. T. Clark; junior ex-associate councilor, Miss Anna Mott; councilor, J. Mousley; associate councilor, Miss Carrie Deihl; vice-councilor, J. L. Dura; assistant recording secretary, Miss Apgar; treasurer, Miss Clark; guide, Mrs. Carrie Lair; inside guard, Mrs. Baker; outside guard, V. Brown; trustees, B. T. Clark, J. Mousley, J. L. Dura.

The initiatory work of Lucetta Council was highly complimented by the State officers, as it was their first appearance in public since the team was organized.

FRIGHTENED AT A WHEEL.

Turn the Horse Ran Away and Collided With a Passing Vehicle.

A runaway occured at Washingtonville Thursday afternoon, that ended with an accident which came near being fatal to a resident of Mt. Bethel. Mr. Stiglitz, of that place, was returning from Plainfield that afternoon in his two-seated gig. A passing bicycle frightened the horse which became unmanageable and ran away. Zeller & White's delivery wagon was coming in the opposite direction, and the runaway crashed into it. Stiglitz's wagon was almost demolished while the owner was thrown violently out. The harness of the frightened horse was torn off and the equine ran home. George Mobus, of Washingtonville, took Mr. Stiglitz to the same place. He was stunned and somewhat bruised by the fall, but luckily escaped serious injury.

A New Cycle Industry.

Horace J. Martin and Philip Zimmer, of the borough, have formed a partnership under the name of the Plainfield Cycle Manufacturing Company, and will commence at once the manufacture of a bicycle called the "Plainfield." There will be several new features in the wheel, and strictly high grade. It will sell for $75, and the usual guarantee will be given.

An Art Department Added.

The Plainfield Business College in the Babcock Building will open an art department on Wednesday, Feb. 12th, with competent instruction in a variety of lines. Visitors will be cordially welcomed.

WHERE IS THY BROTHER?

Rev. Dr. Barnes Discourses on Cain and Abel.

An Interesting Sermon, Full of Truth, Listened to by an Attentive Audience—Next Week in Crescent Avenue Church.

There was a continued deep interest in the revival service at the First Methodist church last Friday, and though the audience was comparatively small, the services were very helpful.

Horace J. Martin had charge of the song service which was a soul inspiring one. Following this L. S. Bond sang effectively "Over the Line," the choir singing the chorus. Prayer was then offered by Rev. C. L. Goodrich, after which Dr. Barnes gave one of the best talks that I have listened to at the series of meetings. His remarks were based on the text "Where is Thy Brother?" as taken from Genesis, 4-9. In substance he said:

All men go down unless they are in communication with God. Without His power they are helpless. In the case of Cain and Abel we see how they started to work out the problems of life. Like most men they wanted their own way. You never find a good man who thinks of himself first. He may build railroads, because there is money in it. His great desire is the cup of prosperity and amusement, but never the cup of death for others' sake. Abel represents the obedient element of humanity, the law of righteousness and God. Cain and Abel came to worship. Cain had the air of self-complacency in offering his sacrifice. Like some people he never had a keen sense of sin so it hurt him. Never felt that he had broken the law and that he was unworthy of God's mercie.

There are men, who when they pray, thank God that they are not like other men. They are so filled with self, amusements and the world that they have no use for God. In fact, they would rather there was no God. One thing is certain and that is God knows us through and through, better than we know ourselves.

Cain's nature was self assertive, while Abel was conscious of his sin. They stood as representatives of a race of sinners. Look at these two characters and see if you cannot picture yourself.

We must worship in spirit and truth You believe this, but you have never offered one bit of yourself to God. You hold on to your money as if it belonged to you, when in fact it doesn't. The words that comes to us tonight is, "My son give Me thine heart, thyself and all that thou hast." Jesus Christ wants the loving loyal service. We are partakers of the divine nature and Christ wants to see us changed from death unto everlasting life. I want you to join God, not the church. This is no club or society where you are in good standing if you pay your dues. We see in our subject tonight one man without grace and the other with God for his ideal. The great question now is, "Where is thy Brother?" Don't you, like Cain, feel a disrelish for righteousness? Why is it that you are continually picking flaws in your fellow-workman?

Cain possessed jealousy, which is the twin brother of hate and hate is the mother of murder. You are trying to kill someone's reputation to fortify yourself against God. "Where is thy Brother?" You have a brother, the incarnation of the word of God. This brother of yours suffered, drank the cup and gave himself to die. Has he the chief place in our hearts? My brother and friend peace and joy are nothing but a tomb without any risen Christ. You cry, "My Lord! My Lord!" but there is no response.

Dr. Yerkes then took charge and made a few remarks in which he earnestly besought all to give their hearts to Christ. He said that the audience present was larger than the one in the upper room in Jerusalem, and that they could receive just as large a blessing. He referred very tenderly to the death of a young woman, a member of his church, which occured yesterday, and said that he knew she was a child of God, having given her heart to him when a young girl. Only a short time ago her mother remarked that he hoped she would get well, when she replied, "I hope so too, but if I don't, I am ready to go." The doctor brought the lesson out very plain and strong, and it had a remarkable effect on the audience. In the after meeting the results were very encouraging and many expressed a desire to give up their life of sin and serve God.

A Scripture Cake.

A feature of the social to be given next month by the Ladies Aid Society of Grace M. E. church will be a "Scripture Cake." Every ingredient in the cake will have a scripture name.

Library Not Quite Completed.

The new library at Trinity Reformed church will not be ready for use tomorrow as there is yet considerable work to be done in arranging the books.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 25 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher is on every wrapper.

NOW IT'S "BICYCLE COOKERY."

Plain Bread and Cinnamon Buns Must Give Way to Wheeling Compounds.

The second lecture on Cookery was given by Miss Bedford in the Y. M. C. A. Hall Thursday afternoon before a good-sized audience. The lecture related to the making of various kinds of breads and cinnamon cakes. The work was demonstrated by Miss Bedford in her usual interesting manner. There is a desire on the part of some of the members to have Miss Bedford give a lesson on pastry and one on chafing dish work. If a sufficient number of women will signify their willingness to enter the class these lectures will be given next week. "Lectures on "Bicycle Cookery" will also be added to the course if the requisite number join.

It is very necessary that those wishing to join should notify Miss Bedford at once. She has been engaged to give the last named lectures before the Michaux Club, of New York, which is the swell cycle club in that city, and no effort will be made to interest the Plainfield Lady Cyclers. The expense for the additional lectures will be small.

These lectures are purely for the benefit of Miss Bedford, and not in any way connected with the Woman's Suffrage movement. "An Easy Company" dinner will be given this afternoon.

You're Another.

The initials J. E. M. to the following letter in "The Plainfield Press" probably represent the name of that hard-shell Democrat, James E. Martine:

Does any one doubt to whom the Republican party of this State belongs, after witnessing the free distribution of railroad tickets given out for the inauguration of Governor Griggs? Senators Sewell and Hobart are the real dispensers behind the screens. Who in New Jersey ever knew or heard of free tickets to the inauguration of a Democratic Governor?

That would be interesting, if true. Perhaps some opulent and enthusiastic Republicans around Plainfield bought tickets for their poorer Democratic neighbors who wanted to see the show, but all through the rest of the State the visitors to Trenton bought tickets for themselves. As to railroad influences, it is a matter of history that those and all other corporations obtained most of their privileges and concessions from Democratic Legislatures.—New York Tribune.

This is the old argument, when cornered. You are another. Still the above does not deny that the Republican party in New Jersey belongs to Boss Sewell and other corporation influences.

JAMES SEEING THINGS.

The City Clerk Confabs With Notabilities at Washington.

City Clerk James T. MacMurray has been in Washington, D. C., since Thursday, visiting the nation's capitol for pointers on the proper way to conduct large bodies of various proclivities. While at the Capitol yesterday Congressman Fowler piloted him about and exhibited the various curiosities on hand. Mr. MacMurray heard Senator Frye's great speech against Great Britain during the day's visit.

Metuchen's Postmaster.

Nathan Robins, of Metuchen, has been named as postmaster of that town by President Cleveland, and his name was sent to the United States Senate on Wednesday last. Mr. Robins is well known in this city.

JUNIORS HAVE A GOOD TIME.

And Give a Goodly Sum Toward Supporting a Missionary.

The Junior Christian Endeavor society of Trinity Reformed church enjoyed themselves immensely Thursday afternoon when a regular social was held. The attendance was very large notwithstanding the stormy weather. Martie Anthony had the programme in charge which included piano solos by Emma Line, Bessie TenEyek, Lucy Cortell and recitations by Bessie Randall, Emma Line and Jennie Thorn. The balance of the afternoon was enjoyed playing the latest games, after which refreshments were served. Mrs. Cornelius Schenck was in charge of these and she was assisted by the following members of the society: George Reynolds, Martie Anthony, Grace Emmons, Jennie Thorn, Bessie Martin and Fred Dunavan. The members contributed $11.94 toward the support of their own missionary, Miss Leila Wain, who is laboring in the town of Aomori which is located in the island of Japan. She is supported by all of the Junior Christian Endeavor societies, each having a share in the work.

BUTTERMILK FALLS RAILWAY.

An All-Rail Route to Chimney Rock to Be Built at Once.

Sometime ago The Press told of a proposed railroad from Bound Brook to Chimney Rock that had been surveyed by Sylvanus Ayers, Jr., and of that gentleman's endeavors to persuade the officials of the Central Railroad to build the same.

Mr. Ayers has received word from President Maxwell that the Board of Directors of the New Jersey Central Railroad Company has agreed to build the branch to Chimney Rock, running for a considerable distance over the Herbert farm. Work will be begun as soon as possible.

The line will be constructed for the primary purpose of reaching the trap rock quarries, as the demand for crushed stone is constantly increasing. Furthermore the quarries at the foot of the Palisades, which supply a large quantity of this stone, are liable to become Government property, and will thus be forced out of business.

The Parliamentary Club Supper.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—I fear that the article in yesterday's Daily Press relative to the suppers to be given by the Parliamentary Club at the Y. M. C. A. may convey the idea that the ladies are to give all the members of the Y. M. C. A. a supper on Sunday evening. What the club really purposes is to serve tea to those attending the Evangelistic Bible class which meets every Sunday at 5:30 p. m. This class is for those who are non-Christian and is almost exclusively attended by such. The class has been taught by Messrs. A. C. La Boyteaux, William D. Murray, E. L. Suffren and Capt. Morrison.

J. W. Gavett.

The Sanitarium to Open.

There is a possibility that the Netherwood Hotel will be opened at an early date as a sanitarium. A new company is now being organized under the direction of Mr. Crossman, of New York, for the above purpose.

EFFECTS OF CHRISTIANITY

THIS IS REV. MR. NEWELL'S SUBJECT AT LAST NIGHT'S REVIVAL.

Some People Are Hard to Reach With the Word of God Because They Are Perverse in Not Wanting to Hear.

There was not room enough in the First Methodist church on Thursday for all who desired a seat, and a great many were obliged to stand. The service of song was under the leadership of Joseph Moon. After Miss Grace Carroll sang effectively "Lamb of God I Come," Dr. Carroll offered the opening prayer, then Rev. G Kennedy Newell read a portion of the third chapter of the Gospel of John. His text was taken from the seventeenth verse: "For God sent not the Son into the world to judge the world; but that the world should be saved through Him." His remarks in part were as follows:

In the Garden of Eden we see for the first time where "He came to His own and His own received Him not." Disobedience made us want to hide ourselves from God. There are some special truths which some persons never like to hear as they stay away from the church and the Sunday-school for fear they will hear them.

They pick up a newspaper and their eyes meets this truth in some item, and they stop reading. The idea is that they want to escape this particular sin, and cover it up. How many persons there are that remain away from church and prayer meeting just because they are afraid they will hear something that don't suit them, then there is others who can attend services and not be affected in the least, no matter what the minister may say. I remember a professor in the Seminary I attended whose very manner of walk was an inspiration. He was a godly, upright man and yet he never talked to the students that he did not confess his own unworthiness. A man feels his sins most when he feels God's presence most. How many really desire his spirit and power to rule within and heart. Jesus Christ came to awaken us out of our sleep, and to save us from sin. "If we confess our sins he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and cleanse us from all unrighteousness." If we could realize how the Lord Jesus Christ suffered for us on the cross, when he cried, "God why has Thou forsaken Me?" we would be willing to give him our hearts. Don't let your sins separate you from God, but give your hearts to him now.

Mr. Kennedy closed the remarks with a fervent prayer. Dr. Richards then announced that upon request the after meeting would be held in the chapel. He then gave a short earnest talk to those present, urging them to consecrate themselves to God and to give their hearts to him. A large number accepted the invitation and went to the chapel, where a most profitable service was held and many gave evidences of a desire to lead a better life. The feature of the first meeting was the presence of about thirty members of H. R Munger's Sunday-school class from Hope chapel who occupied reserved seats in the front of the church. They were also present at the after meeting and assisted in making the service one of blessing.

BIG FIRE AT WESTFIELD.

W. W. Gilby's Mercantile Store Totally Destroyed Last Night.

Shortly after 2 o'clock on Thursday J. H. Schmidt, who runs a bakery on Broad street in Westfield, noticed flames issuing from the store of W.W. Gilby on the opposite side of the street. He immediately gave an alarm and the volunteer fire department quickly responed and did their best to extinguish the flames, but their work was useless as the fire had got too much under way when they arrived on the scene. They devoted their energies to saving the surrounding property and were successful in this, although at one time the flames worked their way through the rear end of the building into the store of Decker.

The flames are supposed to have caught from a stove in the store. The loss will be about $10,000, as the entire stock of goods were destroyed and only the walls of the two-story brick building remain standing.

Mr. Gilby was one of the biggest merchants of Westfield and carried a large stock of general merchandise. This morning he immediately rented another store and is putting in another stock and will resume business at once. At one time the fire became so threatening that it was thought that the fire department of this city would have to be called on.

EMBRYO EDITORS.

High School Students Will Issue a Paper of Their Own.

It is the custom in most all the large preparatory schools to issue an Annual. The Plainfield High School has developed so much during the past years that the school has grown into a first-class preparatory school in which a student may obtain a preparation for any of the higher schools of learning. The matter of a High School Annual has been talked over in the meetings of the Kappa Delta Phi society, and it has been debated by the members of this society, who consider it to be a very good plan and have decided to take the matter up definitely by putting it into the hands of a board of editors. The following Board was elected: Editor-in-chief, Chas. Noble; associate editors, Wilbur F. Cornwell, Charles M. Dolliver and J. Hazlewood Craig. There will be a meeting of the Board of Editors this week, at which meeting, if it is decided to go on with the Annual, arrangements will be made and the work begun in earnest, and the society will work toward the end of making the High School Annual superior to the annuals of the neighboring preparatory schools. The Annual will be issued by the Kappa Delta Phi society, but will contain all interesting school matter, and will not be confined to setting forth the work and doings of the society alone.

A BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY.

Miss Millie Terrill Entertains Her Young Friends at a Party.

The anniversary of Miss Millie Terrill's birthday was pleasantly celebrated Tuesday evening at her home on Arlington avenue. The young people present had lots of fun trying to put a tail on the donkey, but Millard Aitchison succeeded in receiving first prize, while Morris Sutphen was awarded the booby prize. Miss Etta Raybert then entertained the audience with a few pleasing selections on the piano, after which games and dancing were enjoyed, concluding with refreshments.

Those present were: The Misses Cora Seuli, Lillian Thorn, Edith Vail, Florence Bagg, Minnie Ulrich, Mattie VanHorn, Fanny Mills, Etta Raybert; and Messrs. Clarence and Will Thorn, Percy McVoy, Morris Sutphen, Millard Atchison and Walter Hetfield, Jr.

A License to Preach.

The business meeting at the First Baptist church was a short one, owing to the desire of the members to attend the revival meetings. Chas. B. Brown, who is now associated with the Minneapolis Y. M. C. A., applied to the church, of which he is a member, for a license to preach. Dr. Yerkes presented the application and spoke a few words in relation to it. He said that Mr. Brown was often called upon to preach, and if he was licensed it would be a material help to him. He was voted unanimously to grant him a license. Two young men came before the church for membership, and after they were admitted the meeting adjourned.

RARE OPPORTUNITIES.

Talented Men Giving Lectures in This City at Low Prices.

The lectsire loving public has no excuse to find fault with the facilities for attending lectures in Plainfield this winter. The University Extension lectures given by Dr. Riggs, of Rutgers Theological Seminary, New Brunswick, are full of instruction and entertainment. Dr. Riggs is a thorough scholar with an entire mastery of his subject, "The Eastern Question," and his style of delivery is fluent and graceful. Now we are told that arrangements may be made for a permanent course of University Extension lectures, in which the low price of admission will place them within the reach of all.

In addition to these, the lectures delivered before the Monday Afternoon Club at the Casino, have been reduced to 25 cents each. The large audience that listened to the Art lecture given by Kenyon Cox, on Monday, showed the appreciation of the Plainfield public, who will doubtless avail themselves of the opportunity to hear the lectures that will follow on the subjects under consideration by the club.

Works of Art.

Several dainty pieces of china, decorated and fired by Miss Beatrice D. Craig, are on exhibition in the show window of S. Hervey Doane, the Park avenue jeweler. Miss Crane is giving lessons in painting and has a modern kiln and does the firing for herself and customers.

Thieves Active at Westfield.

Thieves Tuesday night stole a horse worth $100 and a set of harness valued at $15, from Ira Lambert, a milkman who lives on Broad street. A set of harness, a buffalo robe, a coachman's overcoat, and a new pair of rubbers, in all $50 worth, were also stolen from Mrs. Brieb, on Summit avenue.

A New Librarian.

Clement E. Morgan is now filling the position of librarian at St. Stephens' church.

EVENT OF INFORMALITY.

DELIGHTFUL TIME PROVIDED BY THE LADIES OF GRACE P. E. CHURCH.

Several Well Known Entertainers Made Up a Pleasing Programme of Singing and Recitations—Those in Charge.

The ladies of the Grace P. E. Church Guild held a delightful reception and entertainment in the chapel Thursday evening. Previous to the entertainment light refreshments were served in one of the rooms. The affair was notable for its absence of formality and every one present had a thoroughly pleasant time. A small admission fee was charged and the proceeds will be devoted for church purposes.

The entertainment opened with two finely executed piano solos by Miss Sprague, following which William N. Runyon delighted the audience with a choice selection of topical songs for which he is noted. He was the reigning favorite as usual and received several encores. Miss Meredith, who is a soprano soloist, and has become a favorite, rendered two pleasing solos for which she won hearty applause. Arthur Freeman, accompanied by Mrs. Freeman on the piano, sang several topical selections in his usual excellent manner. The closing number was a pleasing tenor solo by Charles Angleman. He received an encore and rendered a favorite selection.

The women who had the affair in charge and presided over the tables were: Mrs. VanBuren, Mrs. Watling, Mrs. Mayer, Mrs. J. W. Rhinehart, Mrs. Mitford, Mrs. Brooks, Mrs. Lawson, Mrs. Fleming, Mrs. Stockton and Mrs. James T. Scott. Those who assisted as waitresses were: Mrs. E. M. VanBuren, and the Misses Langeton, Rodman, Smith, Morgan, Peterson, Crane, Fender, Harriott and Waring.

NOT AS INDOLENT AS PICTURED.

Miss Carter Says That the Red Men Are Industrious as a Rule.

The afternoon session of the Women's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions of the Upper Division of this State, held Thursday in Grace P. E. church, was a most interesting one and Miss Sybil Carter, who is laboring among the Indians in the far west, gave the address of the afternoon. Those who have heard Miss Carter, need not be told that she is a very able speaker. She has her special line of work very much at heart and the entertaining manner in which she related her experience was a pleasure to all. She made an earnest appeal to those present to assist her in the work by generously contributing useful articles of clothing for the Indians. She said that the Indians were a lazy and indolent race was dispelled by Miss Carter when she told about the genius that had developed within the past few years. They are very anxious to learn trades, receive instruction, and be able to earn their own living. The women are also industrious, as was shown by the samples of elegant lace, which were on exhibition.

Her remarks were the means of enthusing all present to do more than ever in the branch of the Lord's work. Miss Carter now has charge of eight missions.

Mrs. Roberts, of Riverton, Vice President of the Indian work, followed with a helpful talk on giving. She urged all to exercise more system in their beneficience. Mrs. White and Mrs. Williams, of Elizabeth, and Mrs. Ryder, of this city also made short addresses along the lines of systematic giving. Miss Carter received a number of gifts of money for her work as the result of the earnest words spoken. After a vote of thanks had been extended to the women of Grace church the meeting adjourned.

NEW TELEPHONE COMPANY.

A Trunk Line for North New Jersey Has Been Organized.

The articles of incorporation of the New Jersey Trunk Line Telephone and Telegraph Company have been filed at the office of County Clerk Howard. The incorporators are: George H. Bruce, William A. Topping, Arthur S. Cutler, all of New York; William J. Lansley and Benjamin A. Lawrence, of Elizabeth. The capital stock is given as $50,000. The routes of the proposed company are through Hoboken, Jersey City and other places in Hudson county; Kearney and Newark in Essex county; and Elizabeth, Rahway, Plainfield, Westfield, Roselle and other sections of this county. The company will build and equip telephone and telegraph lines.

Willow Avenue Improvements.

J. H. Manning & Son are now engaged in building two large houses on Myrtle avenue, for William J. Roome, which are nearing completion. Messrs. Manning have purchased the triangular plot of ground at the junction of Myrtle and Willow avenues, upon which they will soon break ground for three large houses, with all modern improvements.

THE OLDEST OBELISK.

It Stands on the Banks of the Nile Not Far From Cairo.

The oldest of all the obelisks is the beautiful one of rosy granite which stands alone among the green fields on the banks of the Nile not far from Cairo. It is the gravestone of a great city which has vanished and left only this relic behind. That city was Beth Shemesh of Scriptures, the famous On, which is memorable to all Bible readers as the residence of the priest of 'On, Potipherah, whose daughter Asenath Joseph married. The Greeks called it Heliopolis, the city of the sun, because there the worship of the sun had its chief center and its most sacred shrine. It was the seat of the most ancient university in the world, to which youthful students came from all parts of the world to learn the occult wisdom which the priests of On alone could teach.

Thales, Solon, Eudoxus, Pythagoras and Plato all studied there; perhaps Moses too. It was also the birthplace of the first historian of Egypt, whose were written on papyrus leaves the original chapter of the oldest book in the world, generally known as "The Book of the Dead," giving a most striking account of the trials and triumphs of the life after death, a whole copy or fragment of which every Egyptian, rich or poor, wished to have buried with him in his coffin, and portions of which are found inscribed on every mummy case and sarcophagus of every age. In front of one of the principal temples of the sun in this magnificent city stood, along with a companion long since destroyed, the solitary obelisk which we now behold on the spot. It alone has survived the wreck of all the glory of the place. It was constructed by Usertesen I, who is supposed to have reigned 2800 B. C., and has outlived all the dynastic changes of the land and still stands there, after the lapse of nearly 47 centuries ago. What appears of its shaft above ground is 68 feet in height, but its base is buried in the mud of the Nile, and year after year the inundation of the river deposits its film of soil around its foot and hides it still deeper in its sacred grave.—Pall Mall Gazette.

LONDON'S GREAT PARK.

The Hum of the Metropolis Penetrates It With Ever Varying Cadence.

The great attraction of Hyde park is one which Londoners and most visitors fail to discover and appreciate. It is a unique and subtle charm whose meaning only those can know who have fallen under its spell. Hyde park, be it remembered, is the only great park of verdure in the world set in the very center of a great city. Boston Common is but a garden compared with it, Central park may soon be hemmed in by New York houses as millions, but not yet. Hyde park is a grateful refuge of silence in the midst of turmoil. Only upon its outer borders does the restless mob intrinige. Within, away from Rotten row, away from carriage drive and fashionable promenade, there is deep rest, tranquillity, silence—no, not silence, but in its place the thing which is the mysterious charm of the spot.

Find a seat upon a bench in the midst of the wide expanse, open green where the eye sees only grass and trees, with no sign of the vast city on any side. Sit for a few moments and listen—listen, and there will come to your ears the most wonderful sound in the world. It is the voice of London—a voice changing, inarticulate, pregnant soliloquy. One day it will be the gentle murmur of a sea shell. Again it is the harsh grinding of the mill of the gods which human agonies beneath its upper and nether millstones. The mighty but distant reverberation is sometimes a triumphant harmony, sometimes a minor note, melancholy and despairing. The myriad tones which reach you from the east is sullen, protesting, enduring; that from the west is a careless chorus of pleasure and prosperity; that from the north is a hopeful strain of patient progress; that from the south is a cadence of struggle and sorrow, and the whole is a symphony of human life, majestic, inspiring, infinitely pathetic.

Nowhere save in this spot does the greatness of London impress itself upon me.—Boston Transcript.

A Genius For Farming.

Miss Annie Dennis of Talbottom, Ga., is a fine looking young woman of 25, who seems to have a genius for farming. According to a Georgia paper, she owns a handsome estate of 1,000 acres, which she cultivates with great skill and success. Upon it she conducts a dairy, a truck garden, a cannery, a preserving establishment, a vinegar and wine distillery and a piggery. Each of these is prosperous to a high degree. The owner is public spirited and exhibits her products at every fair and exposition. Since she began this work in 1868 and in seven years has carried off nearly 100 prizes. She ascribes her success to a good education and careful reading. She makes a special study of the application of science, especially chemistry, to her fields of industry and utilizes every new idea which appears.

Wasted Energy and Expense.

A new advertising wagon introduced in New York is fitted up with two cylinders which keep revolving, giving a momentary view of various business announcements. There are people who would have spent $10 to catch the eye of 2,000 or 3,000 people with a contemplation of this kind than invest 50 cents to reach 100,000 readers in a good newspaper.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

North Carolina has risen rapidly in the line of manufacturing states. At present her factories employ 36,314 hands and turn out $40,375,450 worth of product.

It is not true that equality is a law of nature. Nature has no equality. Its sovereign law is subordination and dependence.—Vauvenargues.

TO MAKE A FORTUNE.

DISCOVER OR INVENT A SURE CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA.

Who Does This May Live Like a King and Be Sainted—Hundreds of Thousands of Sufferers In This Country—Talks With Several Unfortunates.

If ever a man discovers a sure cure for dyspepsia, he may live thereafter in a marble palace, keep a Jersey herd and own a steam yacht—and be canonized after his death. The world is waiting for a dyspepsia cure. It is a pity that while Mr. Forker was taking Dr. Hamlin's pills he didn't find out how many dyspeptics there are in this country, but in the absence of exact information it may be safely said that the number runs up into hundreds of thousands. They all want to be cured.

Anybody can see that this country is full of dyspeptics. I have had the trouble to make a list of his friends and then put crosses against the names of those who suffer or have been dyspeptic.

The testimony of all the dyspeptics is that neither doctor nor medicine cures them. Whenever a new man enlists under the dyspepsia flag, he has only to get advice from one of the veterans something like this:

"Keep away from the doctors. They can't cure you. I've had more than 50 doctors myself, and I might as well have saved my money."

Then come the statements from neophytes, inveterates and fortunates who have escaped from the tyranny and torture of the disease:

"Dyspepsia? You ask me if I've ever had it? I should think I had had it."

It's a young woman of 30 who is talking, and she goes on to tell how she has suffered.

"Always when I don't want it it comes," she says. "Get an invitation to dinner, and it's sure to attack me at about 5 o'clock. If father buys tickets to the theater, I'm bound to stay at home because just about the time for starting that horrible sensation of dying and sinking 'I guess I wouldn't go to the play tonight. You'd better remain in the house and enjoy my society!'

"Do you know, I really believe that I should have married long ago if it hadn't been for this dyspepsia. Wouldn't it be nice to have the wedding fixed for 4 o'clock and then have one of my attacks come on at about 3:45 and be compelled to spend the rest of the afternoon saying, 'Oh! oh! I wish I was dead!' And then the papers would come out and tell how the groom was at the church, and the ushers, and the invited guests, and that all hands waited two hours and then went home without seeing the bride."

This young woman's uncle is an exDyspeptic. He says that dyspepsia so badly that in his agony he would throw himself upon the floor and writhe there.

"What gave it to me," said he, "is more than I know, and at it I know very well. I went to doctors and took medicine, and I dieted and exercised, but, like the girl in the swing, the more I said 'Whoa!' the faster I went. Let her go, and I kept having the thing worse all the time. All of a sudden it stopped, and I've been free ever since. I've been grouped to more than I know. I wish I did know; it might be worth millions to me."

This sudden abandonment of a victim after torturing him for months or years is one of the peculiarities of the disease. A woman who is in the same social circle as the two already quoted tells her experience thus:

"After having had dyspepsia steadily for three years I came to New York from the mountains and found my mother-in-law ill. I began taking care of him and worked day and night superintending the nurses and managing the house. From that time to this I've been absolutely free of dyspepsia."

"How do you account for it?"

"Why, I quit thinking of myself and worrying about my digestion. I suppose that that was what cured me."

"I don't see how that can be," said the person to whom the remark had been imparted. "My attacks are quite likely to come on me when I am thoroughly forgetful of myself. For example, I had one yesterday while I was enjoying myself very much. I just had to run away from my friends and get home and go to bed. It seemed as though I'd die riding up in the street car."

"Well," said a barber, who has been in the dyspepsia business off and on for the last 30 years, "they's a good many kinds of dyspepsy."

He said this when he was asked to explain the apparent inconsistency exhibited in the various symptoms spoken of.

"Yes," continued the barber, "they's several kinds of dyspepsy, and the only thing for a person to do is to study his own case and govern himself accordin. Now, I've spent a fortune on myself, but I ain't got no cure. I can relieve myself from dyspepsy for a time, but then comes on, I get a crust of rye bread, and I chew it and chew it till it's as fine as powder. That makes saliva, and that's what the stomick wants. The crust of bread is my regular cure, that and bein careful about what I eat. Never eat no pastry, nor potatoes, nor anything starchy. The reason I'm in my regular cure, that and bein careful about what I eat. Never eat no pastry, nor potatoes, nor anything starchy. The reason I'm in a swell business, dyspepsy is, but they's lots of 'em that's got it."

Talk about dieting is something that comes in for considerable of it, but it is seldom that one meets a person who has hit upon a diet that agrees with him and guarantees him exemption from the attacks he has been subject to.

There is, however, a current prescription in regard to diet which dyspeptics generally agree to be of service. It describes a constant diet of chopped beef, dry bread and warm water for a whole year. It is seldom, however, that one finds a victim of the disease with sufficient backbone to persevere in this prescription, and when a person does adhere to it, his fame travels far and wide.

Personally, Jack Manning man, the inventor of sure cure for dyspepsia, has the field to himself. He will not be required to furnish a machine with a sign over it, "Insert a dime in the slot and get rid of your dyspepsia;" he may take a week, two weeks or even three months, to cure his patients. All that is required of him is to prove a thing that will do the business in a reasonable time, and his name is Astor, Vanderbilt and Gould, all three in one.—New York Times.

A Collision of Aristocrats.

"My good man," said the titled gentleman who had been violating a municipal ordinance, "I am not subject to the laws here. I belong to the nobility."

"Well," replied Mr. Terence Flynn, "for the number of that, narther am Oi. Oi belong to the police force."—Washington Star.

The word tomboy, now applied to a rude young woman, formerly meant a rude young man or boy.

An Unusual Language.

Messrs. Allen and Sachtleben, who made a bicycle tour around the world, describe their journey from Samarkand to Kulja in The Century. Of one city on their route they say:

Tashkent has long been known as a refuge for damaged reputations and shattered fortunes, or "the official purgatory following upon the emperor's displeasure." One of the finest houses of the city is occupied by the Grand Duke Nicholai Constantinovitch Romanoff, son of the late beloved admiral of the Russian navy and first cousin to the czar, who seems to be cheerfully resigned to his life in exile. Most of his time is occupied with the business of his silk factory on the outskirts of Tashkent and at his farm near Hodjent, which a certain firm in Chicago at the time of our sojourn was stocking with irrigating machinery. All of his bills are paid with checks drawn on his Petersburg trustees. His private life is rather unconventional and even democratic. Visitors to his household are particularly impressed with the beauty of his wife and the size of his liquor glasses.

The example of this grand duke illustrates the sentiment in favor of industrial pursuits which is growing among the military classes, and even among the nobility of Russia. The government itself, though of the severe school of the Crimean war, has learned that a great nation must stand upon a foundation of something more than aristocracy and nobility. To this influence is largely due the present growing prosperity of Turkestan, which, from a military importance, is rapidly giving away to Asiabad, "the key to Herat."

A Lesson From the Chicago.

Nelson once saw an American squadron in European waters. Whether it was Captain Richard Dale's squadron, in 1801, Captain Richard Valentine Morris' squadron in 1802-3 or Captain Edward Preble's squadron in 1803 I do not know, but it is said that the great chief paid much attention to the vessels, and that his verdict was, "There is in the handling of those transatlantic ships a nucleus of trouble for the navy of Great Britain."

The trouble came in 1812. Great Britain had waged for many years a naval war of unexampled proportions, and by devotion and valor had broken the back of the most vigorous maritime combination that in all her history she had been arrayed against her. The fleets of France, Spain, the Netherlands and Denmark had, once or oftener, together or singly, been met and beaten as fleets had never been beaten before, and although hostilities still dragged on Great Britain was entitled, if ever in her career, to consider herself supreme mistress of the ocean. But from the remote west, where Nelson had detected the premonitory warning, there arose a long cloud quickly overspread the horizon, and in a short space grew so black and threatening as to make it appear to many capable observers that the colossal power which had been built up with so much labor, time and treasure at the cost of the old world was destined to be suddenly, and even easily, shattered by the prentice lightnings of the new.—Fortnightly Review.

Highway Strategy.

"I don't want nothin to eat, ma'am," said the tramp, "but would you mind tellin me who lives next door south?"

"A family named Higgins," replied the woman of the house.

"Do you know anything about 'em?"

"No; they've only lived here a little while. They came from Kansas City."

"That's all I want to know, ma'am."

A few moments later he appeared at the kitchen door of the Higgins mansion.

"I don't suppose you want to be bothered by beggars, ma'am," he said to the woman who came to the door in response to his knock, "but I ain't no perfessional. I'm a poor man that's been tryin for 10 years to make a livin in St. Louis, and I've had to give it up. There's too dead. I'm makin my way now to Kansas City, where a man's got some chance, and if you can give me a bite o' cold victuals and a kind word I'll be ever so much"—

"Why, certainly! Come right in. It won't take five minutes to fry you a slice of nice ham, and I'll put the coffeepot on right away. Ten years in St. Louis! Well, well!"—Chicago Tribune.

Novel Advertising.

In a Maine seaside town a man who kept a toy and paper store hit upon a clever advertising dodge. He noticed that strangers who came there invariably amused themselves by walking along the beach and picking up shells, so he procured a wagon load of unused shells, had their edges and interiors stamped in red ink an advertisement of his business. Every morning he sent out a boy with a basketful of these shell circulars to distribute them along the sandy roadways. The visitors eagerly picked them up, and the toy dealer's ingenuity was rewarded by frequent calls for children's shovels, pails, etc. Brains will win every time.—Lewiston Journal.

Dog or Snake Bite.

If you or a companion should be bitten by a dog or a snake, suck the wound as hard and as long as you can. You would not be likely to swallow the blood, but if you were to do so it would not hurt you, for such poison is serious only when injected into the veins or arteries. The life of an English king, Edward I., was once saved by his brave wife, the good Queen Eleanor, who sucked the wound made by a poisoned dagger.—New York Times.

The Constitutionalist.

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.

PUBLISHED AT

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms—$2.00 per year.

A. L. Force, Editor and Proprietor

It is safe to say that there are now more anxious men over political preferment in Plainfield than has been the case in a long time.

The United States pays $300,000 for its weather service. This is cheap. Louisville alone gets more than $900,000 worth of weather a year.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

New York is throwing any number of bouquets at Chicago for capturing the Democratic Convention. Why shouldn't she? She threw her the convention.—St. Louis Star.

The silver leaders in secret session at Washington have decided to hold a national convention next summer, no matter what action is taken by the Republican and Democratic conventions.

Frank Deboe, of Crittenden county, Ky., has been arrested because he gave his sweetheart a glass of eggnog. She was a minor. The course of true love is rocky there as elsewhere.—Buffalo News.

Equal taxation is generally regarded as a good thing, but if steam railroads should pay full local taxes on the lands covered by their right-of-way, how much should the electrical railroads pay on their main stems?—Newark News.

"The valuable function of political parties in Republican Government is too well established to be questioned."—Gov. Griggs at Trenton.

Yet there is a satisfaction in having your own side in office. It is easy then to recognize the value of the other fellows as useful critics.—Evening Sun.

Henry C. Corsa is not eligible for the position of the captaincy of the police force. Mr Corsa lost his residence in New Jersey when he accepted a position in the New York street cleaning department. He will have to reside continuously in the State for one year before he will be eligible for the office.

No single act ever conferred more honor upon Governor Werts than the graceful, courteous and dignified speech with which he turned over to his successor the great seal of the State. It was admirable in its tone, lofty in its sentiment, refined in its diction and undoubted sincere. The last act of Governor Werts was one of which he may well be proud.—Newark Advertiser.

Speaker Reed's smile is thus described by a New England admirer of the Maine statesman: "The Reed smile is a revelation. It is the very apotheosis of geniality. When it comes, not by gentle gradations, hesitatingly, as smiles sometimes come, but in a sudden burst of effulgence, overspreading that rotund, hairless countenance and dispelling the shades of care, it would compel a responsive tribute from dumb brutes."

Since Plainfield has but recently gone through the throes of a campaign for Sunday closing of barber shops, the following from the New York Tribune this morning is opportune:

The barbers of Jersey City want the Legislature to pass a law requiring all barber shops to be closed at noon on Sundays, and providing severe penalties for violation." That sounds exceedingly funny when it is considered that the existing law requires the closing of barber shops all day on Sunday. The Jersey City barbers can't afford to stir up that question, unless they are prepared to rest one whole day each week.

Assemblyman Samuel Bullock, of Paterson, announced yesterday that he intends resigning from the committees to which he was appointed by Speaker Derousse. Bullock last fall was refused a renominations by the Passaic county Republicans and ran independent with a Democratic indorsement. He was purely a labor candidate, and was undoubtedly elected by the members of that party. He was anxious to be made a member of the labor committees in the Legislature, but that position was denied him.

Gov. Griggs finds out very early in his official life what kind of opposition he is going to encounter in living up to his ideal of a Governor's duty. In its comments on the inaugural the Trenton Gazette, the Republican organ at the Capitol, which has so long shared the chief Capitol plunder and was smirched before the Voorhees committee last summer, says: "It is gathered from the tone of the address that Gov. Griggs does not intend to be guided by partisan influences in making appointments to public office. This is a determination which may be carried to a dangerous extreme, to a point far beyond the approval of the people, and it is slippery ground for a man to tread upon. . . . The people want the management of the affairs of the State to rest in the hands of the Republicans, and they will not be satisfied with any act that may neutralize or weaken the strength of that party."

The information comes from Hudson county that Assistant Secretary of the Navy Wm. McAdoo has practically made up his mind to enter the lists for the Democratic Congressional nomination in that county next fall.

It seems to be recognized on all sides that this country in preparing for or in preparing to prevent war should, as much as anything, assume necessary protection for the sea coast cities. It is estimated that it will cost $80,000 000 to properly fortify the sea coast.

Unable to resist the temptation to play politics with a simple question of international conduct and policy, the statesmen in the Federal Senate have begun to chop logic and split hairs over the Davis resolution, which proposes to confer upon the Monroe Doctrine, as popularly understood, a warrant of formal Congressional sanction. In the lack of substantial unanimity in regard to such a resolution, debate over it might well be intermitted. It is ridiculous, no doubt, for our public men to hurl the challenge of fierce defiance in the faces of all nations, but it would be contemptible to wave the white flag of capitulation in advance of a threatened hostile movement.—Newark News.

Philip D. Armour, the Chicago millionaire, carries into his business the working habits he learned as a boy on his father's New York farm. He rises with the sun every morning, has his breakfast at 6 o'clock, and is at his office at 7 o'clock. At noon he has a simple luncheon, usually consisting of nothing but bread and milk, after which, of late years, it is his custom to take a short nap. He is in bed usually by 9 o'clock every night. He belongs to several clubs, but rarely visits them. He thinks a young man stands as good a chance to make a fortune now as at any time in the past. "There was never a better time than the present," he says, "and the future will bring even greater opportunities than the past."

If some, who might be written heroes, are losing the chance of their life time, one heroine has not lost her's. The eyes of the civilized world are turned with admiring interest on Clara Barton, the founder of the Red Cross society, as she sails from American shores on her mission of love and kindness to the suffering Armenians. Had she gone by the invitation of the Sultan of Turkey, there would be much in her attitude to compel admiration, sympathy and co-operative interest, but startling as the step is, under the protest of the Sultan, her position is unique, showing the stuff of which heroes are made. But Miss Barton's heroic act is done in a way that is "pure womanly." Disclaiming the idea that there is anything heroic in her attitude, she makes no rash resolutions or promises, but simply goes to be near the scene of danger that she may avail herself of the first opportunity to minister to dire need. Trusting in her Samaritan-like kindness that puts shame the priest and levite in authority, and depending on the judgment that will not fail through rashness, she carries with her not only relief for a suffering nation, but the hopes, wishes and prayers of the best people in every land, that she may find an open door for her humane ministrations.

The Daily Press does not stand as the sponsor for any candidate for the office of captain of the police department and it fails to see the necessity, any more now than a year ago, for a change of incumbents. A year ago Editor Runyon was prolific in his disgraceful attacks on Captain Grant in his endeavor to influence the action of the police committee in making the nomination for the office. But the members were not men to be influenced by the arguments of one who was seeking to have Captain Grant retired simply that he might take personal gratification and vindication in the action, and like the conscientious and just men that they were, they made the nominations of Mr. Grant and the Common Council promptly confirmed the appointment. Now there seems to be a tacit understanding that there is to be a change in the office this year. The Press fails to see the impropriety of the argument that if Mr. Grant was fitted for the position one year ago he is equally as well qualified this year. It is a recognized fact that the police department of this city is an efficient one at the present time, so far as the limited number of men are able to make themselves efficient, and that the services of Captain Grant are generally satisfactory to the people, with the exception of an element which is always bound to maintain an adverse sentiment against some administrative portion of the local government.

THREE UNION SERVICES

HELD IN THE FIRST BAPTIST AND TWO PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES.

Excellent Sermons, Inspiring Music and a Very Large Attendance Make Them a Power for Good—Services for the Week.

From The Press of Jan. 27.

The First Baptist church with its large seating capacity was unable to seat all who attended the union revival service last evening, and in consequence many were obliged to stand.

The service opened with prayer by Dr. Yerkes, the reading of the seventh chapter of Matthew by Dr. Lowis, an anthem by the choir and prayer by Rev. Herbert Randol h After the choir had rendered another anthem, Dr. Lewis took charge. His text was taken from Matthew 7:20: "By their fruits ye shall know them." In part, he said: If any person in this audience has come here tonight because they have no other place to go, I would advise them to go home. If you have come here carelessly your service will only be a mockery. If you decided at 7:15 tonight to come because you had nothing interesting to read or because you couldn't find the right sort of a company to play whist, you had better leave at once and go home. "By their fruits ye shall know them." There are two great forces at work tonight, one at the Crescent Avenue church and one here. There are other forces at work that are evil. What I want you to do is to contrast the good and evil and find out where you are bearing fruit. You are with God or against him. What the saloons want represents their fruitage. They call for men and women who have lost their purity and forgotten God. They are calling for the boys and girls. Their is not a saloon that does not bid for the boys and girls. They rejoice in their downfall. There is not an evil influence in this city that does not in some sense hate these meetings. The church wants earnest, noble, pure men and women to undo this evil I saw two such young men put on Christ this morning never to place where I am standing. The evil one wants those young men, but we want them too. Young people are needed in our Christian Endeavor and Epworth League societies and our churches. The business world wants good pure men and women, but they don't go to Baxter street for them. It wants sober coachmen who can take home people who are not sober enough to get home. I have drawn these pictures tonight so that you could locate yourself. You are exposed in fact. you are already located. The Recording Angel has checked you off during the past two weeks and knows just where you stand. This is a time for great opportunities. Don't think you can escape. What sower you sow, you must reap. Jesus Christ comes to you with something far better than the world can give, and yet you refuse. Oh, the folly and wretchedness of it. May the Lord help you to take the step tonight.

Miss Bessie Blair then sang "What Shall We Do When We Die?" after which Drs. Yerkes and Barnes made a few appropriate remarks. A short after-meeting was held in which several confessed Christ.

Plainfield church unity was very evident at the union meeting of Monroe Avenue and Hope chapels, held at Hope chapel last evening. A soul-stirring song service opened the meeting, led by Rev. G. Kennedy Newell. After the Lord's prayer and a hymn, Rev. Mr. Newell spoke about the excellent beginning of the series of union meetings, and said that the way to increase the attendance was not to find fault with those who did not attend, but ask them kindly to come. James Mackie led in prayer and Rev. W. C. O'Donnell read a Scripture selection.

For his sermon that followed, Rev. Mr. O'Donnell took his text from a part of Luke 5:20 "Man, thy sins are forgiven thee," and Luke 5:24. "The Son of Man hath power on Earth to forgive sin." He said in part:

Perhaps some people may think it strange that we hold so many meetings, but with such a Gospel as this, it is not a wonder we do not hold more. There is not any nobler work of God than man. A man is never a complete man until he has taken Jesus Christ as his ideal, and has approached as near that ideal as possible. What is a complete man? A Christian, perfect in all ways. There are people whose souls are blacker than Egyptian midnight that would be insulted if you said they were not men. They are not men! We preach to you so that you may become men and women.

Christ's statement was direct. It has been a weakness in Christian people that they are too general in their statements. Christ places first the spiritual nature of man. The soul is the first thing to be taken care of. You have a soul, how is it today? You don't have to wait until tomorrow, you can tell now. We don't want you to have religion to die by but to live by.

TAKING CHANCES.

WOMEN ARE CARELESS.

They Over-Estimate Their Physical Strength. Advice to Young Women.

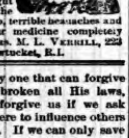
[JOURNAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

Women are very apt to over-estimate their strength and overtax it.

When they are feeling particularly well, they sometimes take chances which in the long run cause them much pain and trouble. This is due largely to their not fully realizing how delicate their sensitive organism is. The girl who has just become a woman can hardly be expected to act wisely, everything is so new to her. She, however, should be told; and every woman should realize that to be well her "monthly period" should be regular. Wet feet, or a cold from exposure, may suppress or render irregular and fearfully painful the menses, and perhaps sow the seed for future ill health.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will ever be the unfailing remedy in such cases as well as all the peculiar ailments of women. Millions of women live to prove this. Mrs. N. A. Verrill tells plainly what it has done for her:—

"I will write you a few lines to tell you what my troubles were before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It was the same old story,—pain back and bearing down, my abdomen and painful menstruation. Of course I was female weakness. The doctors (I have tried three different ones) called it chronic inflammation of the womb. "I had leucorrhœa for over eight years, ulcers on the neck of the womb, terrible headaches and backaches. Your medicine completely cured me." — Mrs. M. L. Verrill, 223 Newell Ave., Pawtucket, R.I.



Christ is the only one that can forgive sin. We have broken all His laws, but he will forgive us if we ask Him. We are here in influence others to turn from sin. If we can only save one poor soul, let us do it, no matter if others do call us undignified. He ended with an earnest appeal to all to take Jesus as their Saviour and an impressive period of prayer and testimony closed the meeting.

The union service held in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church last night was very largely attended, and was one of the most solemn and impressive that have been held during this period of special interest.

The choir sang a beautiful arrangement of the hymn "Art Thou Weary, Art Thou Languid," after which there was Scripture reading and prayer by Rev. C. L. Goodrich. The sermon was by Rev. Cornelius Schenck, on the story of the prodigal son, from the text Luke 15:18—"I Will Arise and Go to My Father."

When the prodigal son said that, Mr. Schenck began, the victory was practically won. What followed was the natural consequence of his determination. There are certain experiences which in almost every case precede the determination of a soul to return to its Father, and this story outlines the steps which are usually taken by the soul. First, there is the wandering from the Father's house. We have all wandered from God; we have all sinned; and some short of the glory of God; there is no exception. We may not have taken the same course, or traveled in the same vehicles, but there has been a general centrifugal movement away from God. Our wickedness may have been of the refined sort, of the Chesterfield type, but very likely we are further away from God than some of those whom we tonight look down upon and despise. We have wasted our substance; we are wasting it tonight, unless we have given ourselves to God in loving obedience. Perhaps we have given precedence in our thoughts to business and pleasure, and pushed aside those things which are of immortal importance to every child of God.

We have said to our souls, "Wait, the affairs of this life must be attended to first." We have said to the Lord Jesus, "Wait, just wait, till a more convenient season, when I will call for You."

A realistic sense of sin must precede the return to the Father. The prodigal knew that he was in want. Do you know that you have come short of the glory of God? You must know it. The Spirit of God is here tonight, convicting you of sin. Your want can be satisfied, your craving for love and sympathy stilled, by the presence of the loving Saviour. Perhaps you have imagined Him awfully severe; you have seen Him through the distorted medium of your own sinfulness. You will find Him gracious, kind, and loving when you turn to Him. His face has been toward you all the while; it is only you who have turned your back.

If you know that you have sinned, just arise, and go to your Father. Say, "I will." Destiny hangs upon that little hinge of your will. Whether the door shall swing in, and admit you to joy and light, or whether it shall swing out, and shut you into loneliness and outer darkness, depends upon yourself. Will you, or won't you? Jesus comes to you tonight with the entreaty to receive Him as your Saviour. Why not settle it now, by an active, absolute choice of Christ? It is a little thing, yet a tremendous thing to do, simply to arise and go to God. Will you accept Christ?

The bass solo which followed the sermon echoed the same appeal: "Stand over the line; why wilt thou remain with a step between you and Jesus?"

The service was closed by the benediction, pronounced by Rev. Cornelius Schenck, but an after-meeting of prayer was held in the chapel.

OBITUARY.

William Henry Wilcox.

A large circle of friends and acquaintances will learn with profound sorrow of the death of William H. Wilcox, only son of Mr. and Mrs. James C. Wilcox, which occurred Saturday afternoon at his home on Fairview avenue

In his death a loving, dutiful son and brother is missed from the home, while North Plainfield will lose a valued citizen. He was a noble, conscientious Christian young man, held in the highest esteem by everyone who knew him, and he leaves a vacant place that will never be filled. The bereaved ones at home have the deepest sympathy of all in the loss of their loved one. He was in fellowship with the Brethren, and was a constant attendant at their meetings. His Christian qualities and disposition had endeared him to the hearts of all with whom he was associated, and especially was this evident in his business relations.

Mr. Wilcox was born in Somerville 27 years ago, and when quite young moved with his parents to North Plainfield, where he attended the public school, and graduated from there June 27th, 1884, with high honors. After that at odd times he carried papers for W. H. Williams, the Park avenue newsdealer, was employed by Cook Bros., at their lumber yards, and worked a short time for B. R. Force in his shoe store, until he secured a position in the First National Bank where he remained for several years. His health was then very poor, and about three years ago in July, he went to the Rocky Mountains for a month. When he returned to Plainfield he felt much better until the following spring, when he found it necessary to return to the mountains. He remained there about two years. A year ago he came home and secured a position in the Bank of the Manhattan Company, New York, which is the second bank in the city. His health was very good, and he seldom complained of feeling ill. A week ago last Wednesday while on his way to the train for the city, he was taken ill and had a very severe hemorrhage, the only one he ever had. He was taken home and medical assistance summoned at once. As soon as an examination was made, little hope of his recovery was entertained. He grew weaker each day until the end came. Through his illness he was perfectly conscious and ready to go whenever he was called.

MOLLIE STEVENS BACK AGAIN.

She Has to Answer for One of Her Old Offences.

About a year ago, one of the most prominent characters to figure in the city court was Mollie Stevens. She was constantly getting into trouble which had to be settled in court. Her last escapade in this neighborhood was at Roselle. In company with two men and a woman, Mollie went into a saloon and finally started to clean it out. The constable appeared and arrested and handcuffed the women. The men showed fight and did up the officer of the law, while the female revellers ran away with the handcuffs on.

Mollie went to New York after that, and Plainfield was bothered no more. Yesterday morning she appeared in town and the police, remembering the Roselle incident, promptly arrested her. She was arraigned before Justice of the Peace Newcorn who gave Mollie her choice between a fine of $15 or twenty days in jail. Some of her friends paid the fine last evening and Mollie is free again.

WELLS RUNNING DRY.

Water Scarce in Plainfield Wells, and Scotch Plains Wells Dusty.

An unusual dearth of water is noticeable in this city and surrounding towns at the present time, although the recent heavy rainfall has improved the situation wonderfully. Many wells about town that have never been known to run dry are now useless, and those depending upon their supply have been forced to put in city water.

At Scotch Plains, water is being carried by some people for a quarter of a mile and more, while one or two residents have made a regular business of furnishing water to those whose wells have been drained dry. The question arises as to the cause of the unusual absence of water from localities long accustomed to a certain and bountiful supply. Can it be possible that the report of an immense quantity of pure water underneath Plainfield is a myth and that the city's best natural product is being gradually used up and for the benefit of other towns less fortunate?

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

J. W. Pierce, Republic, Ia., says: "I have used One Minute Cough Cure in my family and for myself with results entirely satisfactory that I can hardly find words to express myself as to its merit. I will never fail to recommend it to others, on every occasion that presents itself." L. W. Randolph, 143 W. Front St.

It Costs Little and Does Much.

Remark when you attend a play or concert how many people disturb the performance by coughing. One man begins and the cough seems to be contagious. The interruption is a great nuisance, and there is no need of it, for any one may cure a cough with the Pineola Balsam, which costs 25c. It soothes the inflammation in the throat and loosens the mucus which clogs the air passages. A few doses of Ely's Pineola Balsam stop a cough and heal a sore throat.

A MIRACULOUS ESCAPE.

Herbert Chamberlain Falls 25 Feet and is Not Injured.

Herbert Chamberlain, lineman for the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company, narrowly escaped fatal injury Saturday afternoon while working at Col. John F. Wilson's home, Tunlaw. He was running a telephone wire through the yard and in order to pass a certain point with the wire he was obliged to climb an electric light pole. When he neared the top the pole broke at the base, very suddenly. Mr. Chamberlain attempted to save himself by catching the limb of a tree near by. He missed his aim and fell a distance of 25 feet to the ground. Mr. Johnson, the company's inspector, was not far off, and hearing the noise hastened to the place and assisted Mr. Chamberlain to a resting place, and later he was brought to Fire Headquarters in one of Mr. Wilson's carriages, where he was met by Manager Charles W. Runyon, of the telephone company. He placed him in a bath tub, examined him thoroughly, and finding that no bones were broken gave him an alcohol bath. He then sent Mr. Chamberlain home. Aside from a few bruises and scratches it is not thought he is injured. He is able to be out, though he feels very lame. An examination of the pole disclosed the fact that the wood was rotten. In view of this it seems that there are other poles in the same condition and they should be replaced by new ones.

SETTLED WITH FISTS.

Two Young Men Tried to Decide a Quarrel When the Police Appeared.

There was a quarrel in the borough Saturday night between two young men and they decided to settle matters on the outskirts of town. Accompanied by a crowd of friends they walked out to Farragut avenue and East Front street and the fight began. Residents in the vicinity heard the noise and notified the police. Officers Frederickson and Cooney immediately started for the scene of the fracas. Officer Saunders was there first, however, and captured Thomas Fahey, who was looking on. The other officers made three of the crowd prisoners, but before they could capture any more the rest ran away. The names of the participants in the fight could not be learned and all of the prisoners when arraigned before City Judge DeMeza, in the city court this morning, claimed that they were simply spectators. The Judge, however gave each man his choice between a fine of $3 or ten days at Elizabeth. The other three that were arrested gave their names as Thomas Scully, John Coster and Charles Williams.

SKIPPED WITH $33.

Wm. Dalton Absconds With His Employer's Cash.

Wm. Dalton, who has lately been in the employ of Mrs. James Burke, of Plainfield avenue, as a hay carter, was sent with a load of hay to sell at Newark, Friday, sold the hay, brought the horses as far as Fanwood, stabled them there, and then skipped out with the money he had received for the hay, $33 in all. Mrs. Burke's son James went for the horses and he had to pay $2.50 for their board. This is only one of Dalton's various number of petty thefts.

PLAINFIELD VS. NEW BRUNSWICK.

Tally One, a Small One, For New Brunswick.

Plainfield is to have a tally-ho running to Morristown and Newark. But, thanks to John Wills, this city has had a tally-ho for several years and is therefore ahead of Plainfield.—New Brunswick Home News.

Yes, New Brunswick has a tally-ho, and it has also a city full of hoodlums. Only a night or two ago the captain of the Salvation Army was brutally beaten by canal toughs, and driven into hiding. Armenia isn't in it with New Brunswick. In Armenia the Americans are protected from personal injury, but in New Brunswick the rough element rules the streets. Tally-ho, indeed!

A FORCED MARRIAGE.

NOW MRS. BOATE, OF TERRILL ROAD, IS TRYING TO SECURE A DIVORCE.

Mr. Boate Fell in Love with Her, Compelled Her to Marry Him, and Now He Refuses to Support Her.

The initiatory step in what promises to be one of the most interesting divorce cases on record, has just been taken. The case is that of Mrs. Anna Boate, recently of Terrill road, against Thomas W. Boate, of Ocean Grove, for divorce, on the grounds of non-support, cruelty and desertion. On motion of Mrs. Boate's lawyer, W. K. McClure, testimony was taken in the case Jan. 17th, before Justice Nash. Mr. Boate was represented by his lawyer from Ocean Grove. A Daily Press reporter interviewed Mrs. Boate in relation to the case and found that she was very free to talk. She said that while living in Ocean Grove in 1888, for her health, she met Mr. Boate's sister and through her became acquainted with Mr. Boate. He became infatuated, and after he returned to Philadelphia, where he was then working, he repeatedly wrote love letters to her. Miss Anna St. Lamade, that being her maiden name, paid little attention to them until she received one that was very insulting.

She showed the letter to a friend, who advised her to demand an apology. Accordingly she went to Philadelphia on March 8th, 1889, and met Mr. Boate. He apologized for what he had written, and she thinking everything was satisfactory started for the train to return to Ocean Grove. He offered to accompany her to the depot, and while on the way he stopped her and demanded that she marry him. If she refused, he said, he would have her arrested. To prevent any disturbance she went with him to Camden where they were married. That night she returned to Ocean Grove, packed her trunk and went to New York where she remained for awhile. Mrs. Boate says that he has never supported her, and she was compelled to work for her living. A residence was leased in Philadelphia already furnished, she purchasing the furniture. While out one day he sold my furniture, she continued, and compelled me to go to Ocean Grove and live with his mother. His cruel treatment and neglect forced me to leave him. Since then I have heard nothing from him until last spring, when Mr. Boate's mother came to my place and said that if I would pay for the balance of the furniture which he had sold, and the cost of the divorce proceedings he would be willing to grant the divorce My lawyer informed me that I could not obtain a divorce on those grounds, and I sent word to Mr. Boate asking him what he was going to do. He replied that he never intended granting me a divorce unless I wound give him $10,000. Otherwise he would compel me to live with him. My lawyer advised me to go to Fargo, North Dakota, and apply to the court for a divorce. Tomorrow I leave for that place and will attempt to secure a divorce from my husband. Mrs Boate has been residing in her house on Terrill road for sometime. Mr. Boate is a prominent baker in Ocean Grove and is well known both there and in Philadelphia.

The Organized Aid Association.

As the work of this Association is frequently misunderstood, attention is called to Article II, Section 2, of the constitution, which reads: "The Association shall not directly dispense alms in any form." The objects of the Association are as follows:—

To be a centre of intercommunication between the various public, private and individual charities in the city. To foster co-operation between them, and to check the evils of the overlapping of relief. To investigate cases which call for relief and to advise relief societies and individuals of the result of such investigation. To study the best methods of providing work for the unemployed, and to obtain for the worthy unemployed assistance from benevolent individuals, societies, churches, etc.

To discover frauds and impostors, who live by begging and to aid in framing laws to stamp out professional begging.

Ancient Scotch Plains.

The Mail and Express of Saturday has an interesting article on "Ancient Scotch Plains," signed "Prescott." We guess his other name is David, and as an Englishman would say, "That is hall there is about it." A pleasant description of the quaint old place is followed by mention of some of its famous residents; a loving tribute to Rev. Charles L. Sykes, according to the writer, "One of the best Christian gentlemen I ever knew." Honorable mention of Charles Kyte, Esq., and family and a history of the public library and its needs.

Don't invite disappointment by experimenting. Depend upon One Minute Cough Cure and you have immediate relief. It cures croup. The only harmless remedy that produces immediate results. L. W. Randolph, 143 W. Front St.

MORE TROLLEY TALK.

A LINE FROM ELIZABETH TO THIS CITY STILL DISCUSSED.

It is Said That the Consolidated Traction Company Will Apply for the Franchise—Elizabeth Capital In It.

Barnard M. Shanley and David Young, of the Consolidated Traction Company, visited a number of the leading capitalists of Elizabeth Saturday afternoon, in the interests of a big trolley scheme, says the Newark Advertiser.

The Consolidated Traction Company, aided by local capitalists, will propose to the cities of Elizabeth and Plainfield and connecting points the extension of the company's line through Elizabeth, Cranford, Westfield and Roselle to Plainfield. The company will ask that a franchise and the right of way be given without expense to itself.

This will be an offset, the projectors of the scheme say, to the large amount of money they will inevitably lose during the first ten years or so of the operation of the road.

Accompanied by several well-known men of Elizabeth, Messrs. Shanley and Young went over the proposed route on Saturday. They said that it was their plan to begin the construction of the line at once, if the franchise was granted.

It is the intention of the projectors of the scheme to build a trestle over the Sound from Elizabeth avenue and connect Elizabeth with Staten Island by trolley.

Several similar propositions have been made to Elizabeth in recent years, but the city has not received them favorably. Of late there has sprung up a feeling among the citizens that the city's interests may have been retarded in growth by such conservatism, and it is thought that the application for a franchise, which is soon to be made, will be granted.

In 1892 the Suburban Traction Company, of Elizabeth, headed by Senator Foster M. Voorhees, made application for a franchise similar to the one which the Consolidated Traction Company desires. It was denied.

The proposed line is to run into Elizabeth by Westfield avenue. It is thought that the other points to be touched will be as ready to grant the franchise as Elizabeth is supposed to be.

Elizabeth's Board of Trade will discuss the new trolley scheme at its annual dinner on Washington's birthday.

"One of The Bravest."

"One of the Bravest," will hold the boards at Music Hall, Saturday evening, February first. This play was intended primarily as a melodrama but has in its composition a generous dose of specialties, which rather make the "trimmings" its mainstay. The fire scene in the second act is one of the best ever seen, and virtually makes the climax of the performance. Larry Howard as the life-saving hero, is a typical type of a fireman. The other characters are familiar to the Bowery, and include a Chinaman, newsboy, negro, tough, villian, policeman, Irish women, the banker, fireman, etc.

Caught in the Act.

William H. Bohl, the contractor and builder, of Stone street, has of late missed a considerable amount of lumber, which he keeps in an adjoining lot. Saturday morning Mr. Bohl and a friend detected a woman taking the lumber, and she confessed to having removed lumber on previous occasions. Mr. Bohl warned her that if it occurred again he would have her arrested and make her pay for the lumber.

Buy one package and try it. If it isn't what we say it is, take it to your grocer and get your money again.

WORK OF THE RIGHT KIND.

The Street Committee of the Borough Deserve Much Credit.

Councilmen Smith, Lounsbury and Schutt, composing the Committee on Streets and Public Health, of the borough, certainly deserve great credit for the work they have accomplished in these departments during the past year. The health of the borough has never been better than at the present time, and every precaution is taken to keep it so.

In regard to the streets and avenues they are in the best of condition, while a big stride has been made in the improvements of sidewalks. During the past twelve months over 9,000 feet of sidewalk has been put down under their direction, and the work is not yet completed. With all these advantages the tax rate remains the same, and the residents of the borough are to be congratulated on having such an excellent body to govern these matters for them. The mayor and the other members of the council also deserve praise for their earnest efforts.

New Roads.

Next year Middlesex county will build the road from Stelton to Dunellen, a distance of six miles. The road will be fourteen feet wide and eight inches thick.

HIS SMILE DISAPPEARED.

And So Did He, Taking a Price See Along With Him.

The old man in the "L" smoking car was absorbed in his newspaper when the burly youth entered. A pasteboard box was on the seat beside the old man, and with the air of a man who knew his rights and was prepared to enforce them, the youth sat down on it.

"I beg your pardon, sir," said the old man politely, "but you're sitting on my box."

"I know it," replied the burly youth as he took a cigar from his pocket and prepared to light it. "Why didn't you get it out of the way? You only paid for one seat, I guess."

"If you had spoken to me," explained the old man, "I would have made room for you. I was reading the paper and did not see you."

"It ain't my business to keep your things off the seats," retorted the burly youth. "I paid for a seat and took it."

"But I have something in that box that I wouldn't have injured for a great deal," expostulated the old man.

"Well, I guess it's done for now," said the burly youth, with a taunting laugh.

"Perhaps it isn't," urged the old man. "If you'd kindly get up for a minute"—

"But I won't," returned the youth shortly.

By this time some of the other passengers were becoming interested, and one or two of them evinced a desire to throw the burly youth out of the car. A faint smile that seemed to lurk around the old man's mouth, however, made them hesitate. He looked like a man who thought he had the best of it, and in spite of the other's calm assurance.

It was perhaps two minutes later when the burly youth emitted a wild yell and bounded from his seat into the aisle. Another yell followed, and he bounded down the aisle toward the door with both hands in the vicinity of his coattail pockets. On the platform of the car he began making frantic endeavors to take off his coat, but before he succeeded the train pulled into a station, and the young oaf dashed into the waiting room.

The old man had thrown a paper over the box when the burly youth got up, and now he carefully raised the lid of it and inspected what was underneath.

"Confound him!" he exclaimed at last.

"What's the matter?" asked one of the others.

"Why, he's run off with one of my prize bees," said the old man ruefully.—Chicago Post.

Buying and Selling.

Connoisseurship is beset with temptations, and it is better to buy than to sell. It is clearly fair to buy a young man's work at its market value, say a Rossetti in the pre-Raphaelite days, for £50 or £60, but to purchase below the known value, say, a Shakespeare quarto from an ignoramus for a crown is trading beyond reason on another's ignorance. Some considerations apply as in betting. In fair betting a man buys a chance, but when the chance you sell is no chance at all, and you know it, you swindle. Betting on certainties, which are vague, forbid betting on a certainty, but really the morality of the matter is that a man should get his money's worth in the article exchanged. Still it is not fair to trade on another's ignorance one may profit in reason by one's own knowledge.

For instance, a well known writer picked up in a twopenny barrow at different times the only two known copies of a Shelley pamphlet. The pamphlet was unsigned, and perhaps only another man in the kingdom would have identified the book, so that the purchaser almost created the value of what he purchased, for the selling caveat emptor is taken in its widest sense, yet even in buying horses cases may arise where the buyer should not take too good care of himself. We doubt in such bargains as well as in connoisseur purchases one has to take into account all the times one is "done," and the professional horse coper or the horse dealer can only live by his trade to sell, not at a fixed price, but at the largest possible profit, so that the ladies may fairly be turned on him.—London Spectator.

His Wedding Fee.

The pastor of a prominent church in a city of New York was discussing with some of his country pari hioners the subject of ministerial salaries. The parishioners insisted that the pastor must be having little a great portion of his salary—and that in the way, was not large, as city salaries go —and when the minister attempted to explain that the expenses of his household for money on a man in his position the farmer intimated that the wedding fees for a year would amount to a tidy sum. Unable to disabuse the farmer's mind of this impression, the minister asked him what he would give for the first four marriage fees.

The farmer replied, "I will give you the best cow on my place." It was a year when cows were worth two or three times the price they have been bringing this season.

"It is a bargain," said the minister.

In a few weeks the first wedding party arrived. As soon as they were gone the minister drove out to see his parishioner.

"I have come to pay the first installment on the price of that cow." The preacher went out to the cowhouse, returned with a covered basket, and, opening it, disclosed two small puppies.—New York Press.

Compensation.

"One of the things that irritate me," said Mr. Glimmery, "is to have the man whom I sit down next to in a street car perslee to sing about. I found so that he takes up more room than belongs to him and deprives me of some that belongs to me. One of the things that rejoice me is the expression on the face of the man who has been occupying three-fifths of a cross seat on the elevated, and who looks up, but fails to move when somebody comes along looking for a seat, when the big man sits down beside him, and, calmly, irresistibly and conclusively, crowds him over to where he belongs."—New York Sun.

Mr. Slowgo—No, sir; my neighbor next door put in one of them things last Monday, an before night the hull force had struck for higher wages.—New York Weekly.

THE POTENT PEANUT.

ONE WOULD HARDLY THINK THE HUMBLE GOOBER SO IMPORTANT.

About Four Million Bushels Raised In This Country Every Year—The Most Nutritious and by Far the Cheapest of Foods—Substitute For Olive Oil.

But little is known of the peanut outside of localities in which it is grown, and even where it is most largely grown its possibilities are for the most part not at all realized, and it is not by any means made to yield the highest results it is capable of. Taking into account all its sources of value, the peanut ought to be one of the most profitable of the general farm crops in the south. The following facts about it are in the main condensed from a bulletin of the United States department of agriculture prepared by R. B. Handy of the office of experiment stations.

The yearly production of peanuts in this country is about 4,000,000 bushels of 22 pounds, the bulk of the crop being produced in Virginia, Georgia, Tennessee and North Carolina. These 4,000,000 bushels, while fully supplying the present demand of the United States, constitute but a small part of the peanut crop of the world, as the exportation from Africa and India in 1892 amounted to nearly 400,000,000 pounds, of which 222,000,000 pounds went to Marseilles for conversion into oil.

The largest part of the American crop is sold by street venders, but small amounts are used by confectioners, chocolate manufacturers and for the manufacture of peanut oil is used for lubricating and soapmaking and is a good substitute for olive oil for salads and other culinary purposes and as a substitute for lard and cottolene and butter in cooking. The residue from oil making, known as "peanut cake," is a highly valued cattle food in the countries of Europe and is also ground into fine flour and used as human food. It makes good soup, griddle cakes, muffins, etc., and is one of the most nutritive of foods. The vines, when dried, become a very nutritive hay, readily eaten by stock, though requiring care in the feeding lest it produce colic.

The present area of the peanut and its production likely to be greatly extended and new channels of utility found for it, as has been the case with cotton seed. With better methods of tillage and a larger yield per acre the cost of production could be greatly lessened. According to the census returns, the acreage yield of peanuts in the United States in 1889 was 17.6 bushels per acre, the average in Virginia being about 20 and in Tennessee 32 bushels per acre. This appears to be a very low average, especially as official and semi-official figures give 50 or 60 bushels as an average crop, and 100 bushels are not an uncommon yield.

While the peanut has been cultivated in the United States to a limited extent for a number of years, it is only since 1866 that the crop has become of primary importance in the eastern section of this country, which seems peculiarly adapted to its production. Between 1865 and 1870 the rapid spread of the culture of peanuts was phenomenal. Each year doubled and at times increased threefold its crop over that of the preceding year, so that this country, from being a large importer of west African nuts, which was the only supply the domestic demand with the home raised article.

Virginia, North Carolina and Tennessee produce a large part of the peanut crop of the United States. Within the last few years this crop has come to be a profitable one in Texas. The method of culture—the annual planting of nuts on the same land, the lack of proper rotation of crops, the complete removal of all vegetation from the land and the failure to replenish the soil by means of fertilizers—has been a great factor in reducing the profits of the crop by reducing the ability of the land to produce such crops as were previously secured in that section, so that how instead of an average of 50 bushels per acre, with frequent yields of over 100 bushels, the average in the peanut sections is not over 20 bushels, while the cost of cultivation has been but slightly reduced.

As regards food value, peanut kernels, with an average of 29 per cent of protein, 49 per cent of fat and 14 per cent of carbohydrates in the dry material, take a high rank and should be classed with such concentrated foods as soja beans, cotton seed, etc. The vines are shown by analysis to be superior to timothy hay as a feeding stuff and but slightly inferior to clover hay.

The ground hulls are used to a considerable extent as a coarse fodder in European countries. Peanut meal, the ground residue from oil extraction, is a valuable feeding stuff highly appreciated and extensively used in foreign countries. It contains, as the averages of over 2,000 analyses, 46 per cent of protein, 8 per cent of fat and 27 per cent of carbohydrates and is one of the most concentrated feeding stuffs with which we are familiar, ranking with cottonseed meal, linseed meal, etc., and in some cases ahead of them.

In describing the uses of peanuts it is scarcely necessary to more than refer to the use to which fully three-fourths of the American raised crop is devoted. The nut is sorted in the factory into four grades, the first, second and third being sold to venders of the roasted peanut either directly or through jobbers, while the fourth is sold to confectioners to be used in the making of "burnt almonds," peanut candy and the cheaper grades of chocolates. The extent of the use of the peanut by the American people will be more fully appreciated when it is remembered that they use 4,000,000 bushels of nuts yearly, at a cost to the consumers of $10,000,000, which do not form a part of the regular articles of food, but are eaten at odd times.—Boston Herald.

NEUDORF CONVENT PRISON.

Where Austrian Female Murderers Leave the World and Start Life Afresh.

The women in the Neudorf Convent prison were all so kindly in their ways, so peaceful and good humored, they differed so completely from our preconceived ideas of criminals, that we were puzzled to imagine what could have brought them into prison. We had never a doubt but that their offenses were of the most trivial nature, and we said so. The superior gave us one of her odd, humorous smiles.

"Did you notice that woman in the corridor?" she asked. "She is Marie Schneider."

That insignificant looking little woman, who had stood aside with a gentle deprecative smile to allow us to pass, Marie Schneider! Why, in any other place one would have set her down at once as the hardworking wife of a struggling curate, so thoroughly respectable she looked. And she is Marie Schneider, a European celebrity with more murders on her conscience than she has fingers on her hands!

"And you let her stay here?"

"We have nowhere else to put her," the inspector, who had joined us, replied, "and we don't hang women in Austria."

Nor is she, as we soon found, the only notoriety in the place. One of the prisoners is a delicate looking girl, with large blue eyes and golden hair—a type of beauty almost peculiar to Austrians. She has a low, cooing voice and a singularly sweet, innocent expression.

"What on earth can that girl have done to be sent here?" we whispered.

"Done?" the inspector replied grimly. "Set a house on fire in the hope of killing a man with his wife and five children."

The girl must have had extraordinarily sharp eyes, for, although we were standing at some distance away, she heard what he said, and she gave him a glance such as I hope never to see again in my life. It was absolutely diabolic; had there been a knife within reach I should have fallen on the spot. Yet only a moment before she had been looking up into my face with a smile an angel might have envied.

Several of the prisoners are in the convent for killing their own children; some for killing or trying to kill their husbands; others for stealing or embezzling; others again for no more serious crime than begging. There are all degrees of guilt there, in fact, and all ages, from girls of 10 to women of 70. And they all live together on terms of perfect equality, for there are no distinctions of rank there—no one is better or worse than her neighbor. When the convent door closes behind them, they have done for the time being, not only with the outside world, but with their own past. They start life afresh, as it were.—Cornhill Magazine.

A Little French Lesson.

For those who have no knowledge whatever of French the fashion magazines and the menu cards of restaurants bristle with difficulties. When the strange words are ventured upon, it is with fear and trembling—which the result often justifies. The following is a short list of some of the most used and worst pronounced:

Choux (shoo)—A small rosette.

Chic (sheek) is untranslatable, but perhaps "stylish" comes nearest to its Yankee book meaning. In its own home the word is slang and considered vulgar. French ladies do not say "chic" any more than we say "nobby"—which word is really its equivalent.

Peignoir (payn-war)—A wrapper as fine as a ball dress.

Saute de lit (so-de-lee) being our bath robe.

Cerise (siz-eese)—Cherry, hence the name of the color.

Bandeaux (ban-do)—Braids of hair.

Soutache (soo-tash)—Braid for trimming.

Riz de veau (ree-de-vo)—Sweetbreads.

Bouillon (boo-yon)—Clear soup.

Menu (mur-new)—A bill of fare.

Roux (roo)—A mixture of butter and flour, which, after being baked, is used to thicken sauces.

Saute (so-tay)—Lightly fried in butter.

Hors d'ouvres (hour d'urver)—Light dishes as appetizers, served after the soup.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Not to Be Deceived.

In a certain manufacturing town in Yorkshire it was a common thing not many years ago for skilled workmen to save sufficient money wherewith to build houses for themselves.

A great deal of rivalry existed among these men as to who should have the best house, with sometimes curious architectural results. A and B were two rivals. A having built a house, B, whose turn soon afterward came, determined to "best" him, so he called in a well known architect to get plans.

Asked what space he would like to his house, B, scratching his head, inquired: "Aspect! What's that? Has A got one?"

"Why, of course," said the architect. "He couldn't possibly"—

"Then put me on two!" was the prompt and emphatic reply.—Strand Magazine.

Experienced.

Sarcastic Reader—I noticed that you had a communication in the first number of your paper signed "Old Subscriber."

Editor—Well, that was all right.

Sarcastic Reader—How so?

Editor—Why, that communication was written by a man who began subscribing to different newspapers and magazines more than 30 years ago.—Somerville Journal.

The objection made to the first gold pens manufactured was mainly to the points, which were so soft that they were bent or worn out very quickly.

Good humor is the very air of a good mind, the sign of a large and generous soul, and the peculiar seal in which virtue prospers.—Goodman.

HE LOVED TOO MANY.

A Mechanic's Escapade the Gossip of His Shopmates.

There was a hurried departure at the Scott Press Works Thursday which is causing a great deal of gossip among the employes in the machinists department today. Sometime ago a young man came here from Westerly, R. I., and procured work at Scott's and boarded not far from the shop. He was a dapper young man and of good bearing and ready conversation. He soon made the acquaintance of a Plainfield young lady and became her steady company. Finally, Dame Rumor became interested in the pair and she soon spread the report that the darts of Cupid were soon to pierce the hearts of the two and make them beat as one. Shortly after this, or about the time that the shop shut down for repairs during the holidays, one of the dapper young man's shopmates took a trip to Westerly.

While there he met several people who knew the young man and made anxious enquiries as to how he was getting along. They stated that his wife was very anxious to hear from him.

This somewhat astonished the man from Plainfield and he immediately investigated and found that such was the case. He looked wise and said nothing, however, but came home. He learned that the Westerly youth was still smitten with the charms of the Plainfield girl and was making arrangement for the wedding soon to be held. A day or two ago he accused the embryo Don Juan of being married and blows between the two were narrowly averted by their shopmates. Yesterday, during the noon hour the Westerly young man quietly packed up his tools and when the hour of 1 o'clock came he was non est. Before this, however, the wife in Rhode Island had been notified of the condition of things in this city and she is momentarily expected here on a mission to call her hubby down, but now it will be a useless visit.

PROFITS OF THE FIRE LADDIES.

Each Company Will Receive $200 From the Fair Recently Held.

The joint committee in charge of the Firemen's Fair met last Friday and came to a final settlement. The treasurer made his report and the balance remaining was divided among the companies, each receiving about $200, making a total profit of $800.

A vote of thanks to all who had assisted at the fair was passed and ordered published.

The bronze miniature of a fireman, which was on exhibition at the fair, has been purchased by Mayor Gilbert and presented to the Chief to be placed in his office. The elegant silver fireman's trumpet, which the fair committee voted to the Exempt Association, will be presented to that body next Wednesday evening.

After remarks by some of the members in regard to the entire harmony displayed throughout by each company, the committee adjourned sine die.

Surprised by Friends.

A very pleasant surprise party was given to Miss Alice McAfee Friday evening at her home on East Second street. The affair was arranged by some of her friends. The evening was passed very enjoyably in dancing, games and singing. Supper was served at half past nine o'clock. Those present were the Misses Katie Lawless, Nellie Callahan, Katie Ryan, Alice Sharkey, Lucy Jennings, Clara Worl, Kate Kelly, Isabella McAfee, Annie Callahan, and Messrs. Leonard Jennings, John Callahan, Walter Sharkey, John Ryan, Donald Bectal, Chester Allen, Henry Roche, Joe Roche, Willie Gloak, and Daniel McAfee.

At Hymen's Altar.

Cards have been issued by Lemeul Wright Serrell inviting friends to the marriage of his niece, Miss Ethel Harold to William Coxe Chapman on Thursday evening, February 6th, at half past seven o'clock in the First Baptist church. A reception will follow, given by Mr. Serrell and his daughter, Miss Serrell, at their home, 625 West Front street. Mr. and Mrs. Chapman will be "At Home," to their friends, on Mondays, March 2d, and 9th, at 625 West Front street.

A Small Robbery.

The clothesline in the yard of Isaac R. Giles, of East Sixth street, was robbed Tuesday night of the clothes hanging on it, as was also the line in the yard of the Misses Scribner and Newton's School, at the corner of La Grande avenue and Washington street, belonging to Mr. and Mrs. John Hafner, who occupy the school buildings. There is no trace of the thief.

Preparing for the Exhibition.

The Plainfield Camera Club is making great preparations for the loan exhibition next month. Woolston & Buckle have been given the contract for tinting the walls in the main room an Indian red.

JAWS OF DEATH OPEN.

MIRACULOUS ESCAPE FROM A HORRIBLE WRECK ON THE CENTRAL.

Express Stopped Just as the Axle of the Engine Broke—Train Had Been Running a Mile a Minute Before This.

The passengers on the six o'clock express from New York on the Jersey Central road had a narrow escape from being victims of a terrible accident last Friday. As the train started out of the Elizabeth station the axle connecting the two rear driving wheels of the engine snapped and the heavy engine was wrecked.

When an investigation was made it was discovered that the steel axle, which is about eight inches in diameter, had snapped off close to the right hand driver and that an old flaw was in the steel, so that thus the heavy engine had run, no one knows how long, depending upon one-fifth of the axle, a piece about two inches thick in the centre.

The train consists of from eight to ten heavily loaded passenger cars, and runs to Elizabeth in twenty-two minutes at express speed, without any stops. Railroad men upon viewing the wrecked engine, were astounded at the miraculous escape the train had had from a terrible catastrophe, for, as an old engineer said:

"Had that small piece of axle given away while the train was making its run from Jersey City to the Elizabeth draw-bridge, during which it runs nearly a mile a minute, there would have occurred one of the most terrible railway accidents that has ever occurred in this section of the country."

"As you can see from the condition of the engine as she lies, the sudden collapse of that axle and the spread of the drivers would have piled the engine and her long train in a heap before you could say Jack Robinson. I tell you what boys, that is one of the closest shaves I ever saw in my railroad experience."

Engineer Watson, upon being congratulated upon his lucky escape, interrupted the speaker by exclaiming:

"My friend, lucky escape doesn't express it. I and every passenger in my train has cause to express in prayer their thanks for a miraculous deliverance from a terrible death."

The train had stopped at the Elizabeth station, unloaded the Elizabeth passengers and had just started out for Dunellen, the engine having passed over the Union street bridge when the break occurred. The wheels had just before struck the point of a switch, and the sudden jolt this occasioned is supposed to have caused the weak axle to give way. The passengers bound for points west of Elizabeth were transferred to another train, and after hours of labor the wrecked engine was removed to the company's shop, after blocking the main track for four hours.

Got His Wheel Back.

Louis G. Timpson, who had his his Columbia wheel stolen during the week of the Kirmess, which was held in November, had the good fortune to recover it this morning. It happened that James F. Buckle, of the firm of Woolston & Buckle, had purchased the wheel and through a friend, Mr. Timpson learned where the bicycle was. No explanation was necessary as Mr. Timpson recognized his wheel at once.

Robert Wyckoff, of the Columbia Cycle Academy, managed to learn that the bicycle was purchased from T. J. Peppard. Mr. Timpson swore out a warrant before Justice Nash and Constable Mattox arrested him. He claimed that he purchased the wheel from a man named Frank Bird, in Pond's or Potter's works. No one by that name is employed there, however.

THE LINCOLN DINNER.

The Union County Lincoln Club Will Banquet at Plainfield.

The annual dinner of the Union County Lincoln Club will be held this year at the County Country Club house in Plainfield. The arrangements are nearly perfected, and the affair promises to be unusually interesting. Dr. Lloyd, who was the speaker last year, will make an address, and other speakers will be General John A. Wise, Senator Stokes and ex-Congressman Roswell G. Horr. A circular with full particulars will be issued shortly. A special train to convey Elizabeth guests home will leave after the dinner.—Journal.

TOOK UP THEIR PLACES.

Exercises Incident the Installation of the Sangerbund Society.

The new officers of the Saenger and Turn Verein Society took their offices last Friday. The president, H. Schoetlin, presided, and gave a toast to the society, after which the following toasts were given by J. Richter, the vice-president, on the singing section; H. Haurand, turning section; I. Kohner, financial secretary, non-active members; L. Moraller, treasurer, dramatic section; Charles Dresselt, ex-president, our new president; Otto Kellar, new officers. The following then gave recitations: Martin Huber, Charles Duvier, J. Richter, Otto Kellar, G. Houseman, M. Schoetlin. Charles Dresselt rendered a song, and the singing section also gave several selections. An amusing feature took place when H. Haurand proposed a "Salamanda to the Prince of Carnival." In conclusion the members were all served with refreshments.

PLAINFIELD'S GLEE CLUB.

Some Facts About It and Who It Is Composed Of.

From all appearances the Plainfield public will be treated to a glee club concert, all by local talent, before the grass is green again. The Lotos Glee Club, the organization of which was exclusively announced in The Daily Press, is the society which hopes, soon after Easter, to give a concert. The singers are already hard at work and meet every Wednesday night for practice. W. E. MacClymont is the leader and, so far, the members are: Herbert Schutt, Herbert Moore, Chas. H. Angleman, J. E. Douglass and Willard M. Miner tenors; Harry Yaeger, Robert B. Douglass and William Thiers 2d, second tenors; Charles Haseltine, H. H. Cornish, Fred Van Arsdale and Thomas U. Getting Down to Routine Work.

Chief Doane is busily engaged in getting down to the routine work of Building Inspector. He has already had several applications for permits and in one case was obliged to order a builder to make some alterations. It was a case of ignorance of the law, however, that was the cause of the trouble. All persons who intend building must first submit their plans for approval before they start work.

HEIR TO THOUSANDS.

MRS. EDWARD LAUFFER, OF THE BOROUGH, LEFT A FORTUNE.

The Good News Came Day Before Yesterday—She Is an Equal Heir to $15,000—Property Located in the City of Newark.

Mrs. Edward Lauffer, an employe at the Manhattan Hotel on Somerset street, received word last Wednesday from Lawyer Hegy, of the Prudential building, Newark, that an aunt of hers had died a few weeks ago in that city and that another niece and herself were left a fortune amounting to something over $15,000.

Mrs. Lauffer has engaged as her counsel Chas. B. VanWinkle, who has already investigated the case and found that besides one three-story brick house there is four frame buildings, besides some cash in bank to be divided among these two women. The husband of Mrs. Lauffer was formerly employed at Chapot's kid glove factory, but is now engaged in the huckstering business.

NO DYSPEPSIA HERE.

Cooking Lessons Given to Plainfield Women Yesterday.

The first of the six demonstrative lectures on cookery by Miss C. C. Bedford was given in the Y. M. C. A. building Thursday afternoon. The attendance was not very large, but more are expected to attend this afternoon. Miss Bedford is a woman that thoroughly understands her profession, and her lecture yesterday was very helpful. The dishes cooked and served included lyonnaise potatoes, stewed kidneys with brown sauce, creamed eggs, omelet, Boston baked beans and quick corn bread. The demonstrations were very plain and interesting, and formulas for making the above were distributed. Each person attending is asked to bring their own napkin, spoon and fork.

Miss Bedford uses her own cooking utensils and demonstrates thoroughly her subjects. Today the lecture will be on "Breads," including rolls, popovers, quick rolls and cinnamon buns.

Realizing that it would be almost impossible to name all, we trust they will accept this as a personal communication to each and every one who gave us their aid, and we will always hold in grateful remembrance those who by their efforts aided us either financially or otherwise.

Death of an Estimable Young Woman

In the death of Miss Carrie M. Runyon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac M. Runyon, which occurred this morning at her home 462 West Front street, a most estimable young woman is lost. She had been unwell for a long time past and gradually grew worse until the end. She was a model Christian and was a faithful attendant when able at the First Baptist church where she was interested in all branches of church work. The funeral services will be held Monday afternoon next at 2:30 from her late home.

Printing In Three Colors.

What will be one of the greatest attractions at the loan exhibition of the Plainfield Camera Club has just been arranged for. The Sun and Shade Art Publishing Company has offered to send one of its new presses to the exhibition which prints in three colors at once. The press will be run and samples of the work done by it distributed. There will also be a large exhibit of this kind of work.

A DESERVING CHARITY.

Work of Love That Received Encouragement—Quick Responses.

Willie Anderson is the boy who was unfortunate enough to lose one of his legs while catching on a coal train on Thanksgiving Day. He was cared for in Muhlenberg Hospital, and returned to his home here last week. He is now going to school, walking with the aid of crutches. Mrs. John Merlett conceived the good idea that the boy, who is naturally bright, deserved to have an artificial limb. She could procure one for $75. The subject was talked over among the teachers and children of the Bound Brook public school, and so popular is Willie in that institution that the teachers and scholars promptly raised the handsome sum of $22.83, and Mrs. Merlett has raised the balance necessary to purchase the artificial limb.—Bound Brook Chronicle.

EXHIBITION OF ANTIQUES.

That Will be One of the Departments of the Hope Chapel Fair.

The Hope Chapel Industrial Fair will be held Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, Feb. 12th, 13th and 14th. The various committees are hard at work and the affair gives promise of being very fine. A feature will be a loan exhibition of articles that are very old. Mrs. Phoebe Foster, of the borough, has loaned a bound volume of "The Christian Watchman," which is 67 years old, and an old-fashioned butter indle 100 years old, is loaned by Mrs. Radin. All goods loaned will be perfectly secure against fire or theft, as Rev. G. Kennedy Newell, H. R. Munger and E. G. Squires have the matter in charge and have taken necessary steps toward such protection. A large collection of articles will be loaned by the Camera Club.

BROKE INTO HER OWN HOME.

She First Locked Herself Out and Locked the Keys In.

It is a rather novel experience to have to break into one's own house, but that was the case yesterday afternoon with Mrs. Charles Dunham, of Central avenue. She started to go out in the afternoon and shut the door after her. At the sound of the closing door died away Mrs. Dunham recalled the fact that there was a spring lock on the door and that her keys were in the house. She went to several of the neighboring houses for help, and at last got a passing colored lad to play burglar for her. He pushed the button off that held one of the cellar windows, jumped in and unlocked the door. So ended the adventure.

Mr. Love to Branch Out.

A word of explanation is in order to the great sale of wall paper, paints, oils, glass, window shades and rugs taking place at Love's, corner of North and Watchung avenues. Mr. Love has decided to go out of the retail business and devote all his efforts to the wholesale wall paper business and the making of designs and print rollers. For this business he needs a larger building. He will consequently sell his present building and secure one better fitted for manufacturing and wholesale business. Everyone purchasing goods in his line will do well to buy there while the clearing-out sale continues.

Country Store Robberies.

Of late there has been several robberies committed in and near Pluckamin, and the farmers in that vicinity are up in arms and think it's about time they were stopped. The last robbery was at John Dolliver's store. He keeps a general store and sells most everything you can think of. Recently some person or persons broke into the store and stole many valuable articles, together with some money. The theft was discovered the next morning, but no trace of the robbers could be found. The farmers and other citizens are now lying in wait with shot guns, hoping they will meet their enemies. Mr. Dolliver is a brother of G. Q. Dolliver, of Manning avenue.

A Pleasant Affair.

A large number of guests including a party of fifty from Rahway, were present at the home of Councilman and Mrs. W. C. Smith, on Grandview avenue, last evening, and passed the time in sociability and dancing. The affair was arranged in honor of Miss Sadie Smith, and was one of real pleasure to all. They met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Smith, and later adjourned to Edward Smith's house nearby where dancing was enjoyed. Refreshments were served about midnight and the party broke up about 3 o'clock this morning.

More Lectures by Prof. Riggs.

The committee having in charge the lectures of Professor Riggs on the Eastern Question are happy to announce that he will deliver three additional lectures on the following subjects: The Russo-Turkish war of 1877-78; the Arabs and the Caliphate; the Revolution of 1882 in Egypt. It is expected that these lectures will be delivered at the Crescent Avenue church on January 28th, February 4th, and February 11th.

WHITE'S FURNISHING DEPARTMENT.

Thomas A. Neely Is in Charge and a Great Success is Assured.

Today was the opening day of White's new housefurnishing department, under the management of Thomas A. Neely, and a very good impression it gave. The stock room, which occupies half of the basement, is filled to overflowing with goods ready to be marked. The other half of the basement is devoted to the housefurnishing department, and here the wooden and willow ware, matting, oil-cloth and carpets are arranged in choice array. The division of the first floor of the store on the left is also devoted to this department. In the rear, household specialties, granite, tin, japanned and iron wares, cutlery and the like are displayed. The crockery, china and glass ware occupy the front and middle portions of this division. Several open stock patterns of English tea and dinner ware have just been put on sale. They are Mr. White's exclusive importation and can be matched at any time. Hanging from the ceiling is a magnificent display of library and hall lamps. Some very pretty tea sets of Carlsbad and English porcelain adorn one of the tables. A large variety of toilet ware makes a handsome display. The Victoria ware which is on sale is a lot of sample pieces, which are marketed at one-half the regular price. Mr. Neely has been put in full charge of the department, buying and managing all connected with it. He intends to make the department the leading one of its kind in the State, and with his experience and knowledge of the trade, as well as his well-known enterprise, are likely to make it so. He and his able corps of clerks will give the public courteous treatment and prompt service.

The department is lighted by skylights during the day and thirty Welsbach burners at night.

PRESENTED WITH A PIN.

Rebekah Degree Lodge Give Mrs. Kettering a Present.

There was a very large attendance of members at the meeting of Rebekah Degree Lodge, No. 4, I.O.O. F., Friday evening. A pleasant feature of the meeting was the presentation of a very handsome degree pin to the district deputy, Mrs Kettering. She, in responding, presented each member with a small package which they were not to open till they got home. When this was done each found an excellent photograph of their deputy. It was decided to hold a sociable at the home of Mrs. Hicks, on West Third street, next Thursday evening, and it was also decided to invite several other lodges to be present at the next meeting of the lodge in February. An excellent collation was served at the close of the meeting.

OFF WITH AN AMATEUR.

Miss Sheppard's Parents Hear She Has Married A. A. Cartelle.

Miss Nellie Sheppard, of 1056 East Grand street, Elizabeth, has ran away from her home and so far as can be learned has eloped with Harlan A. Cartelle, who belongs to the Third Regiment Gun Detachment.

Miss Sheppard is seventeen, and is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs Edward S. Sheppard. Her father is an old employe of the Singer Manufacturing Company. She has known Cartelle a year and a half. He is a barber and an amateur actor.

The girl, it is said, became stage struck and infatuated with Cartelle because he told of his exploits before the footlights. Miss Sheppard is an excellent banjo player.

A New Social Club.

A new social club for young men was organized at Pierson's store on Watchung avenue, Wednesday evening. As soon as the membership of the club is enlarged sufficiently to warrant the expense, club rooms will be rented in the Babcock building. So far, the following have become members: Clarence Thorn, William Thorn, Henry Vosseller, Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., Irving Pierson, Werner Pierson, Harry Denckiau, Percy McVoy, Raymond McVoy, Elwood Sebring and Mr. Mapleton. The club meets again next Tuesday evening.

The Squirrel Retaliated.

Mr. Bennett, of Duer street, has several tame squirrels which he allows to run about his yard at times. Yesterday afternoon Walter Swain and John Doud noticed one of the squirrels in a tree near Mr. Bennett's house. Both boys attempted to get the animal first. Walter Swain succeeded, however, but as a result the squirrel bit him severely on his left hand. He now says that he will have nothing more to do with squirrels.

A Livelier Month Coming.

Next month promises to be a livelier one in society than the last has been. The next Assembly will be held Monday evening and there are several large receptions and weddings to be held in February.

—The Swedish ball will be held Thursday evening, January 30th, in Red Men's Hall.

THE WIND THAT SHAKES THE BARLEY.

Sing hey for the wind in the barley green,
And the great clouds drifting over;
For the dear brown sails, far out, that lean
To the kiss of the wind, their lover.

Sing hey for the fields of barley green,
With the mad wind rushing over;
And hey for the path that runs between
Where my dearest wind-flower is!

THE BLOND BRAKEMAN'S STORY.

It May Be Read With Profit by Present Day Railroaders.

The Railroad club met Tuesday evening in the usual place, and after a short business session the boys drifted into "shop" conversation. The fast run of the general manager's special from Hoboken to Missoula was commented on, and the talk on fast runs became general. Several stories of remarkable time made on different occasions were related, and when the blond brakeman got the floor he saw he was expected to break the record. And he did!

"Speaking of fast runs," said he, "why, that little Montana Union line lays over anything I ever saw. No Dutch clocks or anything else to hold a man down there. I worked for that road when Bob Smith was dispatcher, and when he told the boys to 'wheel 'em' we all knew what it meant. One day we were going north and were delayed in Helena by a hot box on the blind baggage. Bob wired the con. at that point that he wanted our train to get to Garrison just as quick as God would let us. We had a clear track when we started, and it wasn't long before the telegraph poles looked like a picket fence. The longest burst of speed was reserved for the home stretch—from Deer Lodge to Garrison—11 miles. We didn't stop at Deer Lodge, but as we approached that place the engineer sounded the whistle as usual, and you could take my head for a football if the 'slow' sign in the Garrison yards wasn't passed by our train before that whistle had ceased to sound."

This made the boys look weary, but the "but" hadn't finished yet. He continued:

"Well, we put our train away and were resting ourselves when we glanced up the track and saw a dark streak approaching at a lightning gait. We were astonished for a moment, but as it slowed up we readily recognized it as the blond shadow of the train we had just brought in."

And the boys all rose up, and after presenting the relator with a regularly signed license the club adjourned.—Missoula Silverite.

A Beginning In Literature.

For my first effort to sail the sea of letters it occurs to me that I ought to say that my father's literary reputation cannot be held responsible.

I had reached (to take a step back, which the story of literature is mature age of 13. I was a little girl in low necked gingham dresses. I know, because I remember I had on one (of a purple shade and incredibly unbecoming to a half grown, brunette girl) one evening when my father's partner dropped in to see me. I felt that the fact that he was my Sunday school teacher detracted from the importance of the occasion, but did not extinguish it. It was perhaps 8:30, the "tea" hadn't finished yet. He continued:

I felt that the fact that he was my Sunday school teacher detracted from the importance of the occasion, but did not extinguish it. It was perhaps 8:30, the "tea" hadn't finished yet. He was a lawyer and had gone up law and gospel, I had gone up stairs.

The actual troubles of life have never dulled my sense of mortification at overhearing from my little room at the head of the stairs, where I was struggling with my algebra lesson, the loud and present a tardy appearance, a voice distinctly excusing me on the ground that it was past her usual bedtime and she had gone to bed. Whether the anxiety of that occasion or the spell that it had upon me to do with my first literary undertaking I cannot say, but I am sure about the low necked gingham dress, and that it was during this particular year that I determined to become an individual and contribute to The Youth's Companion.

I did so. My contribution was accepted and paid for by the appearance in my father's postoffice box of the paper for a year, and I considered it fair that I wore high necked dresses pretty soon thereafter and was allowed to sit up till 9 o'clock. At any rate, these memorable events are distinctly intertwined in my mind.—Elizabeth Stuart Phelps in McClure's Magazine.

Uncertainty and Certainty.

Two men met unexpectedly in the corridor of a hotel and exchanged their minds.

"Hold on, William! What's your hurry? How are you? You look worried. Anything wrong?"

"Not much, but, to tell you the truth, I've just left——, and I can't tell whether he has lied to me or not. How are things with you?"

"So so. I've just had a big disappointment, it's at all."

"You take it easily."

"Think so? I've had a deal on hand for three months, and I expected to close it out today, but this morning the other party told me frankly that his principals couldn't take it up. Now it's off my mind and I'm glad of it."

"Sure there's no funny business?"

"Sure."

"I wish I was. So long."

One man smiled and the other scowled.—New York Times.

He Understood.

Paul Louis Courier, when bitterly assailed by a French professor, quietly replied: "I fancy he must be vexed. He calls me Jacobin, plagiarist, plagiary, thief, poisoner, forger, leger, madman, impostor, calumniator, libeler, a horrible, filthy, grimacing ragpicker. I gather what he wants to say. He means that he and I are not of the same opinion, and this is his only way of putting it."

The War with France.

The war with France lasted from July 9, 1798, to Sept. 30, 1800, and the number of men engaged, in the naval force alone, was 4,593. The land forces raised for this campaign cut no figure.

The word "and" occurs 35,542 times in the Old Testament and 10,684 times in the New Testament.

EXIT THE BLUEJACKET.

In Modern Steam Battleships Athletic Officers Replace Sailors.

A proportion of the bluejackets of any fully rigged ship were necessarily athletes. The "upper yardmen" in a line of battle ship or a frigate were exceptional men in this way, and much more so perhaps just about the time that sail power was receiving its death warrant than ever before. These young men had to race aloft to nearly the highest points, at top speed, eight or ten times a week when the ship was in harbor, to keep their hands and their heads in their hands while "holding on by their eyelids," as the phrase went, and manipulating with a careful and measured order of action the various and intricate arrangements for "crossing" or "sending down" the royal and topgallant yards. It was all done at full speed, for it was universally held that the upper yardmen gave a character to the whole ship and that one which was foremost in this exercise was ever considered the smartest ship in the fleet." The upper yardmen were always the coming men. They had most opportunities for distinguishing themselves, were the best known, and were most in the eye of the authorities. They developed great muscular power in chest, shoulders and arms. Their lower extremities suffered, and one always knew the men who had been upper yardmen by their bandy-like appearance when they were landing.

But in the modern steam line of battle ship and frigate these extremely athletic specimens formed a very small minority of the "ship's company," and none of them ever had the turn at being upper yardman so long as the ship's reputation depended on the speed with which the upper yards were crossed and sent down. In harbor the rest of the bluejackets had the handling of yards and sails for exercise once or twice a week, but at sea the use of sails for propulsion grew less and less important, and most of the work aloft was more of an exercise and less of a necessity.—North American Review.

CRACKERS FOUND ALL OVER.

Wanderers of the Tribe In the West and North as Well as the South.

"You'll find crackers in other parts of the country than the south," said the tall, grizzled sea captain like man at the inn. "I've seen them in every land—yes, and on Long Island. I take it the cracker belongs to a class by himself. The crackers, all the way from the foothills of the Alleghanies in Lancaster county, Pa., to the mountains of Georgia, are, as I take it, the descendants of men from the north of Ireland. Some of them reached this state from Canada and went south by way of the old Cherry Valley turnpike into Pennsylvania, the Carolinas, Georgia and Virginia. They are the best of the cracker tribe. They still have some of the religion they started with and a remnant of energy.

"You find a southern or western cracker now and then with a good New England name. There was an early New England emigration to the south. I met out in the mountains of Missouri a cracker who was a direct descendant of the old Connecticut governor of Massachusetts, Endicott. He bore the family name and had a trace of the New Englander in his face, though he could neither read nor write. He had, however, his grandfather's diploma from Harvard with him. The grandfather had removed to North Carolina, and part or perhaps all of the family had drifted west and finally reached Missouri. The crackers had a way of traveling along the mountain valleys and never going far apart. A good many went into Tennessee and Georgia."—New York Sun.

Brave Sepoys and Sikhs.

The siege had lasted altogether 40 days, and there had been 39 men killed and 62 wounded. The sepoys had suffered greatly from want of food, as to eat horseflesh like the officers would have been regarded as a sacrilege, and the ghi had long run out. They had only half rations of flour, and when the relief came, they were weak and emaciated from want of food and sleep, but their endurance and pluck were most admirable. The sikhs especially showed extraordinary nerve. The worse the outlook the cheerier they grew. They would sit all day cleaning their rifles, with a quiet smile, as though the anticipation of a fight afforded them their delight. They felt sure, they said, that the government would not desert them and that in due time help would come. As one of them tersely put it, "The arm of the government is slow, but it reaches very far." Indeed the sikhs can be too great for the Sikhs, who were the very backbone of the defense. They not only endured hardship and privation without a murmur, but they fought with a quiet, dignified courage that in itself inspired confidence.—"The Chitral Campaign," by Thompson.

Amputation.

Dr. A. Pearce Gould, one of the highest medical authorities in England, has recently said that surgeons amputate less frequently now than formerly. The science of medicine has made such progress that the knife is rarely used. The old days of cut and slash are over. Amputation, says Dr. Gould, is a confession of failure, a therapeutic tragedy. Dental science has also made long strides. I can remember a time when if a man had a single aching tooth it was immediately yanked out. But nowadays dental skill is concentrated in saving every tooth in the head. The world moves, and you have to strike a good gait to keep up with it.—New York Herald.

The Ready Answer.

A Pittsburg little girl, who was very fond of the inside of cream puffs, but who did not care for the crust, was carefully removing the latter the other evening at dessert, when her mamma said:

"What are you doing, dear?"

"Peelin my cweam puff," was the reply.—Pittsburg Chronicle.

A BRITON'S LUGGAGE.

ATTEMPTS OF AMERICAN IMITATORS TO INTRODUCE IT HERE.

Ponderous British Hat Boxes, Portmanteaus Held Aloft—The Baggage on a Steamship Wharf Is a Study—The Traveler and His Bathtub.

As the traveling Briton is known in this country by his luggage, so the American woman was once hated in Europe because of her saratoga trunk. The world has escaped the general adoption of the saratoga trunk, but a worse thing seems possible, as British luggage threatens to become international. Even now you may buy in this town all the impediments with which the traveling Briton cumbers himself and bedevils the rest of mankind. A Broadway trunkmaker has for some years past undertaken to fix the throbdom of these things upon his fellow country men and women, and many traveling Americans, especially the wealthy and fashionable, are to be recognized by the multiplicity of British impedimenta that they carry to and fro in their frequent journeyings between the old world and the new. More curious still, those clever and imitative Japanese have begun to produce British luggage identical with the original in the minutest details, even down to hand sewed straps on leather trunks, portmanteaus and dress cases; but, droll enough, the whole outfit is merely a paper counterfeit of the real thing.

American imitators of things British, lacking the fine humor of the Japanese, have made no substitution of light material for heavy, but have given us the full burden of ponderous British hat-boxes, portmanteaus, rugs, bags, holdalls and even bathtubs. It was a traveling American who gave to the world an account of a refreshing scene on board a Mediterranean steamer bound to Tangier or some such Mohammedan port of north Africa. A British passenger with his bathtub had nearly pestered the life out of a meek, coffee colored Mohammedan, who endured the infliction serenely without a sign of reproach, but when in the course of getting the luggage ashore the precious bathtub fell overboard and sank like lead, the harmless follower of the prophet was seen to pause in his work and dance gleefully upon the deck, exclaiming in triumph, "Oh, Mr. Goddam, Mr. Goddam!" It is since that incident that traveled Americans in their spite at British ways have accepted even the burden of the bathtub.

A study of baggage at a steamship wharf or even at a large railway station in New York is an instructive lesson as to the nationalities represented in the city. There is one article of British luggage that seldom survives more than one journey within the limits of the United States and sometimes gets no farther than the New York hotel at which the traveler makes his first stop. This article is the little trunk or box of japanned tin much used by travelers in Great Britain. The flimsy trifle hardly survives the first encounter with the American baggage handler, and after the first journey of 600 miles in this country is battered out of all resemblance to its original rectilinear self. It is an article of luggage not suitable to the expenses of American travel.

A pathetic feature of the baggage at the railway stations that are doorways to the west is the immigrant's luggage. Sometimes it is a mattress from the steerage wrapped about the few belongings of the owner under the American. Again it is the corded box of the Irish, English or Scotch immigrant. It will be recalled how important a preliminary to Charlotte Bronte's journeyings was into the great world from her Yorkshire home was the cording of her box. The corded box is as rare among the luggage of an American traveler as the old hair trunk, though both are occasionally seen. The seaman's kit is rarely to be seen at a stable stowage and strong against accidents, figures in the luggage at steamship wharves. One knows instinctively its contents of old clothes, photographs, curios, tobacco and a few books. Letters from home and the array of pictures from the illustrated papers pasted on the inside of the lid.

The elaborate dressing cases that some Americans and Britons do go Englishing with to travel with are going out of fashion. It is almost a necessity that the traveler with this pretty piece of luggage take along a valet, for the thing weighs like so much lead and is too precious to be trusted to the tender mercies of the baggage department. The traveling desk also has nearly disappeared, though some ingenious trunkmakers now produce trunks that open so as to form desks. The steamer hamper that used to accompany every traveler across this continent in the days before dining cars came into use has almost entirely disappeared. The California millionaires of early transcontinental travel had their hamper and richly laden hampers and dispensed often a princely hospitality to their fellow travelers. The dinner hour on board a transcontinental train was a picturesque incident of travel then. Those days the traveling Briton in Europe still sometimes carries his luncheon hamper, and it is often one of the nuisances of European travel.

Some of the English theatrical companies have become so used to traveling in America that they have adopted our methods with baggage. They accept with grace the great American trunk, dispense with the hatbox, the bathtub, the rugs, shawl straps and the rest and calmly see their belongings carted off by a stranger, who leaves behind as evidence only a bit of brass bearing a few letters and numbers.—New York Sun.

The War Wheel.

Wheeler—And don't you think the bicycle will ever be useful in warfare?

Walker—No. I doubt if it will ever get farther than its present status as a mere instrument for assault and battery.—Indianapolis Journal.

WHEELS OF LEGISLATION

THEY BEGAN TO REVOLVE SLOWLY AT TRENTON LAST NIGHT.

In Both Houses Appropriate Resolutions Over the Death of Ambassador Runyon Adopted—Appointment by the Governor.

At Trenton Monday Gov. Griggs intended to issue a proclamation reciting the public services of Ambassador Runyon and expressing the sorrow of New Jersey over his death, but upon investigation he found that there was no precedent for such action, except in the case of ex-Governors. In both the Senate and House last night resolutions appropriate to the occasion were adopted.

Gov. Griggs sent to the Senate the first of his appointments, nominating Lewis W. Starr to be Prosecutor of Gloucester county.

Senator Daly is ill, and did not come to Trenton to introduce his resolutions sustaining the Monroe doctrine, upholding the President in his Venezuela message, and condemning Senator Sewell's attack on Mr. Cleveland. In the House, Mr. Lowell of Ocean offered his resolutions reciting the severe struggle for liberty and independence being carried on by the Cubans, and expressing the sympathy of the people of New Jersey with the efforts of the heroic patriots of Cuba on behalf of national liberty and wishing them ultimate success. A second resolution requests the New Jersey Representatives in Congress to support any measure calculated to give recognition to the struggling patriots.

A petition was received in the House from a committee of the North Jersey Conference of the Congregational church asking for the passage of a local option law regulating the granting of liquor licenses. It was referred.

Among the measures introduced in the House were a joint resolution authorizing the Governor to appoint a Commission, to determine the advisability of erecting a home for disabled soldiers and their wives; requiring public schools to celebrate holidays by patriotic exercises on the day preceding; limiting to ten hours per day or sixty hours per week the service of employes of express companies; bills fixing the salary of the Supreme Court Clerk at $5,000 a year, and Chancery Clerk at $4,000, and turning all fees into the State treasury; reducing the salary of every official of the State, excepting the Governor, Chancellor and Supreme Court Justices, by twenty-five per cent. after August 1st, next; officials receiving less than $2,000 a year are exempted from the cut; making Good Friday a legal holiday; requiring all surface railways to erect and maintain waiting rooms and transfer stations, limiting street railway fares to five cents over all lines, requiring street railway companies to properly heat and ventilate their cars.

ATTEMPT TO BREAK JAIL.

Burglar Dayton Attempted to Liberate Sixteen Somerset Prisoners.

When Sheriff Wyckoff made his rounds in the Somerset county jail on Friday night he detected a bulging spot in the outer wall of the men's corridor. Clo er investigation showed that a hole had been dug in the wall large enough for a man's body to pass through. The bricks had been replaced carefully and sealed loosely. At the time there were sixteen prisoners in the jail.

In the cell of James Dayton a detective found that one foot of the iron bedstead had been sawed off and shaped into a pick. The foot had been replaced and the break concealed. With this implement Dayton and his fellow prisoners had attempted to dig their way to liberty. Dayton, who is now awaiting trial for burglary, confessed that he was the leader of the plot and that all hands would have escaped before morning if the hole in the wall had escaped detection.

Murderer Jacob S. Johnson, who is in solitary confinement in the upper tier, could not have escaped unless liberated by the other prisoners. The authorities have employed additional watchmen and the jail will be closely guarded until the prisoners are disposed of by the courts.

TWO CITY COLLECTORS.

Johnson Holds the Fort But Bird is Taking Taxes Just the Same.

Few people about the city are probably aware that though John Johnson holds the fort in the collector's office so far as possession of the books and papers of the office are concerned, that Elias H. Bird is receiving taxes from all who tender them to him. A Press reporter called at J. F. MacDonald's grocery store, where Mr. Bird is manager, this morning, and was somewhat surprised to see a prominent citizen and taxpayer settling up his quota of the city expenses with Mr. Bird, who gave him a receipt. Mr. Bird turns over to City Treasurer Titsworth whatever he collects. He will continue to accept whatever taxes are paid to him as collector.

BOROUGH PROSPERITY.

Many New Residences That Are Going Up in the Borough.

During the past six months there has been a great demand for borough real estate, and many new houses have been completed, while numbers are now in course of erection. Contractors J. H. Manning & Son, have purchased from B. A. Hegeman, Sr., lots on Mercer and Willow avenues, where they will break ground in the early spring for three large houses. Isaac Vail, of Basking Ridge, has purchased, through the agent, J. B. Coward, a lot 50x150, at the corner of Somerset street and Mountain avenue, where he will erect a handsome residence in the spring. William J. Buttfield has just completed three large dwellings on West End Rockview avenue. Edward White, the Front street merchant, is having a fine new home built on Myrtle avenue, which is to be completed about May 1st.

Contractors Pierson & Gayle are hurrying the completion of Borough Councilman John Valiant's new house on Myrtle avenue, which is to be ready for occupancy about April 1st. On the same avenue, houses are being built by William J. Roome, Geo. T. Rogers, and Jeremiah Manning and Woolston Buckle, of North avenue, are erecting a large house on Willow avenue. Mannning & Son have just completed an eight room house, with latest improvements, for B. A. Hegeman, Sr., on the corner of Myrtle and Washington avenues. Sycamore avenue has also been improved by the erection of two large houses for F. S. Brown. A. E. Faber, of Mercer avenue, has had three very pretty five room cottages erected at the upper end of Grove street, which are ready for occupancy. The German Reformed church has now in course of erection a seven room cottage for a parsonage, at the corner of Duer street and Park place. On Stone street, William H. Bohl has just completed one house, in which he resides, and has another on the same street nearing completion. There are also three houses going up on Fairview avenue, the owners of which are Chas. H Hand, E. A. Lowe and E. A. Cobb. On Coddington avenue, F. W. Hargrave, of Vine street, has about completed a new home, which he will occupy about March 1st, and plans are being figured on by carpenters for a home for Corra Ryno, bookkeeper in the Daily Press office, also on Coddington avenue. J. W. Mundy, of Somerset street, will soon reside on Summit avenue, in the house just built by him. George A. Scheferth is also erecting a new house on the lot belonging to him on Chatham street.

AN OLD CITIZEN.

Leonard R. Proctor Celebrates His Ninety-First Birthday in Plainfield.

Leonard R. Proctor, of Hartwick, Otsego county, N. Y., father of Mrs. Seymour G. Smith, of Crescent avenue, who is spending the winter in Plainfield, celebrated his ninety-first anniversary Sunday. Mr. Proctor was born in Brookfield, Madison county, N. Y., in 1805. He was well acquainted with the parents of the late George H. Babcock and also with the parents of Charles Potter, and knew them both as boys. His early education was obtained in a log schoolhouse. One of his earliest teachers was Asha Babcock, father of the late George H. Babcock. He attended the Seventh-Day Baptist church in Brookfield when Mr. Potter's grandfather was a deacon in the church, and Elder Bailey, who many of the old residents of this vicinity well remember, as he frequently preached here and in New Market, was pastor of the church. Mr. Proctor's early business was in farming and droving. His market for stock was principally in Monmouth and Middlesex counties. Fifty-eight years ago he passed through Plainfield with his first drove. He says at that time this city was a small hamlet. On his return trip he was ferried from New Jersey to New York on a boat propelled by horse-power. He was well acquainted with Nathan Vail, who was president of the Plainfield Bank, and many others of the old residents. About twenty years ago he met with the sad affliction of losing the sight of both eyes by a cataract. Mr. Proctor is hale and hearty, enjoying excellent health, and is a vigorous as most of the men nowadays are at fifty.

New Sidewalks Laid.

A. C. Lazzi has received the contract for the laying of four hundred feet of blue stone flagging in front of the various pieces of property belonging to Col. John F. Wilson, of Greenbrook road. Mr. Lazzi has about completed the laying of twelve hundred feet of flagging and several crosswalks for William J. Buttfield, at West End.

Wonderful are the cures accomplished by Hood's Sarsaparilla and yet it is only because Hood's Sarsaparilla the one true blood purifier, makes pure, rich, healthy blood.

THE WILD GEESE.

The wild geese, flying in the night, behold
Our sunless towns lie imbricate in a sea
Which buoys them on its billows.
Liberty
They have, but such as those frail barks of old
That crossed unsounded mains to search our world.
To them the night unscrutable is free;
They have the moon and stars for company;
To them no foe but the remorseless cold,
And froth of polar currents darting past,
That have been nigh the world's end fair of storms.
Enormous billows float their fragile forms.
Yes, those frail beings, tossing on the vast
Of cold revolving winds, feel no doomsay!
'Tis we who dread the thunder, and not they.
—James H. Morse in Scribner's Magazine.

LITTLE KENTUCKY.

It May Some Day Be Claimed as a Part of Tennessee.

Little Kentucky, as it might be dubbed very appropriately, is located opposite Island No. 10, where Kentucky and Tennessee meet. The river, by gradually cutting out the Kentucky bank, had worn off a narrow strip of land, until one bright morning several people who lived on this side of the line woke up to find themselves on the other side. In other words, the swift current had washed away the neck of earth which made the extreme southwestern corner of this state a part of the commonwealth of Kentucky. The section of territory thus separated from its parent, as it were, is ten miles long and five miles wide—quite a good mouthful to take in at one bite, even for the greedy Mississippi.

Every well posted river man and every person who is acquainted with the geography and topography of this state will understand how such a thing could happen. Right at the state line the river forms a loop about ten miles long. The loop extends up into Fulton county. The swift stream has simply drawn this noose tight and formed an island out of what was formerly mainland. Hickman is the closest town of any size to the place where all this landmaking occurred. Darnell, a little hamlet over in Obion county, Tenn., is quite near the spot.

The boundary line between Kentucky and Tennessee has always been rather complicated down about Island No. 10, owing to the peculiar bend in the Mississippi mentioned above. The lakes, bayous and sloughs which bisect that corner of Fulton county in all directions also serve to mix matters. The biting off of such a large strip of soil will add to the general confusion, and the question may arise as to whether Little Kentucky will hereafter belong to the domain of the Volunteer State or still be a part and parcel of the dark and bloody ground.—Pittsburgh News.

Freeman's Sensitiveness.

One incident of Freeman's early life preserved by Mr. Stephens is thoroughly characteristic. Before he was of age he was in love, and as soon as he reached 21 he offered marriage and was accepted. Some opposition from Freeman's own kinsfolk seemed the only hindrance to a happy union. But another was created by the sensitiveness of Freeman's own conscience. "He had expectations of a sufficient income, but it was partly derived from coal mines, and the shocking disclosures recently made respecting the treatment of colliers made him doubt whether he could conscientiously draw an income from that branch of industry until the system was reformed." There we see the same temper at work which in later days made Freeman throw up a pleasant and lucrative connection with the Saturday Review because he disapproved of its foreign politics. His standard of right and wrong might sometimes be perverse, his judgments hastily formed, but seldom has any man lived to whom the call of duty, once made clear, was more absolutely imperative, in defiance of any pleas of convenience or of usage. His action was always in purpose the embodiment of George Eliot's fine lines:

Nay, falter not. 'Tis an assured good
To seek the noblest; 'tis your only good
Now your lives seem it, for that highest vision
Poisons all meaner choice for evermore.
—Quarterly Review.

People Who Eat Hair.

It is difficult to imagine people eating hair, but there are many, especially girls and young women, who do so, as experience proves. Doctors conducting post mortem examinations have been surprised to find a large quantity of hair in the stomach of the deceased person.

Not long ago an English medical man found as much as four pounds of hair in the stomach of a woman about 20 years old, and similar cases have been officially reported from various parts of the world.

Dr. Swaim lately performed an operation for tumor, when, to his astonishment, the cause of the complaint was a mass of hair weighing between four and five pounds.

In this case the patient confessed that she had contracted a habit of biting off the ends of her hair; just as some bite their finger nails.—Pearson's Weekly.

Three Strange and Remarkable Men.

As Dumas, the grandfather, prided himself on his physique, Dumas, the second, prided himself more upon his knowledge of cookery than the authorship of "The Three Musketeers," and Dumas, the third, himself more upon his knowledge of art than upon the writing of "La Dame aux Camelias." They were three strange and remarkable men. —Rochester Post-Express.

Disgraceful Journalism.

The harum-scarum methods employed on the sweat-shop News in the gathering and compilation of local events and happenings is evidenced in the large number of errors and false reports which that sheet circulates each day. Scarcely a day passes but what people call at The Press office and ask that this or that item in the scab sheet be denied or corrected in The Press. Some time ago the sweat-shop sheet and dispenser of Tenderloin classic announced the marriage of Miss Mamie Walsh to George Schaefer. The report was absolutely without foundation of fact. Newspaper men who think that it is enterprise to fill their columns full of such cruel and disreputable hoaxes as this, simply hint a few people of their kind may enjoy themselves at the humility and embarrassment of estimable young people, are parodies on and disgraces to the profession.

The Jersey City News severely attacks the principles and work of the Salvation Army as worthless to Christianity and a waste to society. The Salvation Army, like all great, just and admirable organization whose object is the uplifting of the class of humanity who have descended so low in morality that ordinary society will not lend a helping hand or word, have proved their worth as an important factor in the religious world, and the public's good opinion cannot be shaken by such disgraceful attacks as The News emits.

AWFUL HORRORS OF WAR

DR. RIGGS TALKS ON THE RUSSO-TURKISH CONTEST IN 1877-78.

The Cruelty Practiced Then Has Been Repeated in the Armenian Outrages—Dr. Riggs Will Give Twelves Lectures.

The unpropitious weather Tuesday made slight difference to the people who wished to attend a lecture in the Crescent Avenue church given by Dr. James F. Riggs on the Eastern Question. The subject of the lecture was the Russo Turkish War of 1877 78. Before Dr. Riggs commenced the lecture a unanimous vote was given by those present that twelve lectures should be given.

Dr Riggs commenced his lecture by giving an account of the condition of the empire after the treaty of Paris, 1856-1876. During this time disorder and distress was increasing rapidly. On May 6, 1876, all the people of Salonica were excited over the stealing of a girl, and when the French and German consuls came out into the streets they were trampled under foot by the crowd. On May 11th of the same year the riot of the Softas in Constantinople occurred.

On May 30, 1876, Abdul Aziz was dethroned, and succeeded by his nephew, Murad V, who proved himself to be a very weak-minded man. The atrocities in Bulgaria continued and aroused indignation in Europe.

The dethroned Sultan was held in custody, but on June 4th he broke forth and ran to the window in the front of the castle which overlooks the river in which the Turkish iron-clads were anchored. Abdul Aziz, shaking his fists wildly at the iron-clads, declaimed in loud voice: "It is my money that paid for those boats. It is my money that was used to pay your salvages; and now will you leave me in the time of my trouble?"

That night there was great tumult in the castle, the women servants running about breaking the large plate-glass windows with brooms, stools and clubs, yelling madly all the time, and upon investigation the ex-Sultan was found dead.

It was reported, much to the satisfaction of the government, that he had committed suicide, but this seems queer as he died from cutting the veins in his right arm with a pair of scissors, and it is not likely that a right-handed man would be used in his left hand to perform this operation.

On July 1st Servia declared war and August 31st Murad V was deposed and his brother was proclaimed Sultan as Abdul Hamid II. The following year on the 24th of April, war was declared by Alexander II. The first blow of this war was struck by the Russians within one month of the time of the declaration of war. On May 10th, 1877, a Russian commander sailed up the Danube, and directing his torpedo boat directly at the side of the great iron-clad Lutfi Jelil, placed a torpedo under her, touched the wire, and blew to pieces this magnificent boat, which sank, carrying with her hundreds of men.

During the period between June 22d and 27th the Russians endeavored to cross the Danube, and on a dark and stormy night were able to do so, but not without difficulty, losing nearly half their men, but those who crossed were able to drive the Turks back from the cliffs and thus open a way for the rest of the Russian army to cross the river. This expedition was led by Skobeleff, one of the most daring generals of his time.

The second battle was that of Plevna, July 30th, 1877. The town of Plevna was fortified with a great horseshoe of redoubts running round it. In this battle the Turks were triumphant, and the Russians suffered great loss. Horrid barbarities of the "Bashi-Bozouks," i. e. "Rotten-Heads," the Turkish irregular troops, occurred.

The third battle of Plevna, September 7th to 14th, 1877, was another victory for the Turks. After five days bombardment an assault was made. This day is known as the Emperor's fete-day. There was great slaughter. The Russians lost 18,600 men, 7,600 killed and 11,000 wounded. This caused great mortification of the Russians and great surprise to all Europe. The Russian general then decided to invest Plevna. The two most important battles fought were those of Gorni-Dubnik and of the Green Hill. In these the Russians were victorious and led 16,000 Turkish soldiers, whom they had taken prisoners, out into the snow, surrounded them and kept them standing there until one after another, the whole 16,000 dropped to the snow covered ground and died of starvation while there was plenty of food in the Russian provision wagons within reach.

The crimes which we have been reading about in the papers for the past months are simply a repetition of these times.

REMINDERS OF EARLY MINSTRELS.

Old Show Programmes Hanging in the Hotel Grenada Cafe.

Those whose memory takes them back to the '50's will doubtless recall the various companies of "Serenaders," or minstrels, as they would be called at the present day, that were so popular at that time. They not only toured through the United States, but visited many foreign countries. Among the many curiosities that Wallace V. Miller has hanging on the walls of the cafe of the Hotel Grenada, of which he is proprietor, are two old show bills, framed.

They were printed in Australia and advertise Rainer's Serenaders. The first states that "Rainer's Original Ethiopian Serenaders" will give their fourth grand concert in the Saloon of the Royal Hotel, Sydney, on September 30th, 1852. Although almost fifty years old, the bill greatly resembles a combination hand-bill and programme of today. The heading is a catchy one and includes a cut, and then follows a description and an announcement telling of the wonderful performance and how the company, which was composed of six men, had performed before the President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet and had, by royal command, performed before Her Majesty, Queen Victoria. Then came a detailed programme which included vocal solos, instrumental solos, mostly banjo, choruses and the like. Many of the songs, well-known at the present time, were on the programme, among which were "Nancy Till," marked original, the "Old Folks at Home," "Oh! Boys, Carry Me 'Long," "Ben Bolt," with banjo accompaniment, "Dan Tucker" in English, Negro, Dutch and Irish by the company.

The other show-bill was dated January 26th, 1853, and advertised a benefit for F. Moran, one of the company, to be held in Mechanic's Hall Melbourne. The bill was arranged about the same as the other except that the programme was something of a different character. The troupe was advertised to make its first appearance with white faces and then, at the close, a colored drill and dance was to be given for the first time. "Ben Bolt" appeared to be still a favorite and was down on the programme. Among the other well-known selections were: "The Low Back Car," "Old Folks at Home," "Camptown Races," and "Lucy Long."

ENGINE'S ROD SNAPPED.

Passengers Thought the Locomotive Had Been Blown Up.

The connecting rod on engine No. 47, of the Central Railroad, was broken Tuesday on the right side of the locomotive while on the way from Roselle to Elizabeth and Newark. The ends of the broken rod made havoc with the cab and the steam pipes on that side of the boiler. The cab was torn to pieces, the steam pipes broken off and the engine enveloped in hot vapor. The engineer, John Coffey, jumped astride the boiler when the rod gave way and thus escaped death or serious injury. He and the fireman had a narrow escape. Passengers thought the boiler had exploded.

The mishap was at Cherry street and the train ran to the Union street bridge, several hundred feet distant, before the engineer could stop it. A big crowd gathered and felt relieved to find the engineer's only injury was a sprained ankle. The disabled locomotive was taken to the Elizabethport shops. The passengers took a later train for Newark. Several were badly scared.

A Novel Social.

The women of the Congregational church are preparing a novel kind of sociable. They have asked for the earliest pictures of the members of the congregation. These will be exhibited at the social and the visitors asked to guess the names of the originals.

Evening Social.

An evening social will be held at the home of Miss Edith Manning, on Clinton avenue, Thursday evening of this week. The committee consists of Miss Grace Palmer, Miss Sadie Randolph, Clifford Manning and Samuel Beekman.

The little daughter of Mr. Fred Webber, Holland, Mass, had a very bad cold and cough which he had not been able to cure with any thing. I gave him a 25 cent bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, says W. F. Holden, merchant and postmaster at West Brimfield, and the next time I saw him he said it worked like a charm. The remedy is intended especially for acute throat and lung diseases such as colds, croup and whooping cough, and it is famous for its cures. There is no danger in giving it to children for it contains nothing injurious. For sale by T. S. Armstrong, Manager Reynolds' pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues.

DON'T AGREE WITH DALY.

JERSEY SENATORS APPEAR NOT TO LIKE THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

Senator Daly's Motion to Bring Up for Consideration His Resolution Endorsing the President's Stand Defeated, 13 to 2.

The New Jersey Legislature adjourned for the week Tuesday afternoon, not having business to keep it going. President Thompson and Speaker DeRousse again exhorted the committee to get together and consider the report bills referred to them.

Senator Daly made another attempt to have his resolutions endorsing President Cleveland's stand on the Monroe doctrine considered, but he was ruled out on a point of order. Mr. Daly declared that he had a right to be heard, and started his speech. Senator Skirm declared it was all buncombe, and other Senators objected. Finally Senator Daly's motion to take up his resolutions were defeated by a vote of 15 to 2.

Senator Daly introduced a resolution calling for the appointment of a committee to investigate reported statements of railroad officials that their companies were furnishing free transportation to State officers in the line of gifts and subsidies, and not as a matter of right.

"Such a condition, if actually existing," the resolution recited, "would tend to make subservient to said railroads the aforesaid State officers, and would be a menace to good government." The resolution was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Senator Daly said later that each Senator and member gets about a dozen passes, good for the session, over the various railroads of the State. The law requires that these shall be given. Yet officials of some of the smaller roads are asserting that they are giving as favors, and are claiming favors on the strength of them. He wanted the Attorney-General to give an official statement to the proposed investigating committee.

The House Tuesday afternoon passed the Bullock bill requiring bread to be sold by weight and providing penalties for violation or for adulterating bread. Also the bill appropriating $2,232 to defray the expenses of Gov. Grigg's inauguration.

A bill was introduced in the House by Reed forbidding governing boards of municipalities granting franchises to street or electric railway companies to occupy streets or roads unless the companies pay at least $4,000 for each mile of single track, or $8,000 for each mile of double track, and a bill by Austin making eight hours a legal day's labor on any public work or improvement.

Notice was given that on next Monday afternoon and evening the committee on railroads and canals would give public hearings on the bills fixing the maximum fare on street railways at five cents with three-cent fares between 5 and 7 in the morning and between 5 and 6:30 in the evening; requiring all electric cars to have enclosed or vestibuled platforms; providing for the elevation of railroad tracks in first-class cities; requiring surface railways to erect and maintain waiting rooms and transfer stations; limiting street railways to five-cent fares on all their lines, and requiring street railway companies to heat and ventilate their cars.

Praise for Mr. Scott.

The Sunday Call's edition was printed on its new press last Sunday, and with success. Defects discovered late in part of the new plant made delay, but the press itself demonstrated that it is a marvelous piece of machinery. It does its work better than the best of servants, with wonderful accuracy and vast capacity, and is as compact and as neat a piece of mechanism as the ingenuity of invention and the skill of trained labor ever prepared for an important task. Nothing that is absolutely new in every part works so smoothly and regularly as that which has been tested, so that the best results from this press will not be available at once; but of the general excellence of Walter Scott's mechanical genius, as exemplified in this latest production, there is no possible question.—Newark Call.

Broke His Collar Bone.

While R. L. Conklin, of Jackson avenue, was ascending the cellar steps in his home a few days ago, he fell to the bottom of the stairs. He was examined by Dr. Long, who was immediately sent for, and it was learned that his collar bone was broken. Proper treatment was given, and Mr. Conklin is now improving as well as can be expected.

OLD FIRE LADDIE DEAD.

CAPTAIN JOHN HENRY WHITNEY PASSED AWAY YESTERDAY.

He Was One of the Organizers of Alert Hose Company and Instrumental in Getting the Famous Silver Carriage.

Capt. John Henry Whitney died Tuesday at his home, 116 East Forty-sixth street, New York, of heart disease. Old residents of Plainfield will remember him as being one of the prominent men in the early fire department and as one of the organizers of Alert Hose Company.

He was born in New York in 1832, and lived there until the war broke out, when he enlisted as a private in the Fifth Regiment, New York State Volunteers, which was known as Duryea's Zouaves. At the close of the war he returned with a Captain's commission. He took up his residence in New York, where he was a member of the the New York Volunteer Fire Department. He entered the iron business with his brothers, C. W. and A. R. Whitney. While engaged in that business he moved to Plainfield in about 1869. Here he took an interest in the fire department, and with E. M. Brown, now Commodore of the New York Yacht Club, organized the Alert Hose Company. He was also prominent in caring for the silver hose carriage.

When he came here he purchased the house at the corner of Terrill road and East Front street from E. L. Brown and lived there as long as he remained in Plainfield. He was nicknamed "Baldy Soars" while in the New York fire department, and the name stuck to him here. Eighteen years ago his business called him to San Francisco where he made a short sojourn. He returned to New York where he was subsequently appointed to a responsible position in the Bureau of Assessments, which he held at the time of his death. He leaves a widow and two daughters. Caspar W. Whitney, the sporting writer of Harper's Weekly, is his stepson.

LIBRARY DIRECTORS MEET.

Binding of Periodicals in the Babcock Scientific Library Authorized.

After several bills were ordered paid the library committee reported that pursuant to the authority given them at the meeting of December 3d, they had authorized the binding of the periodicals taken by the Babcock Scientific Library, and had also authorized the placing of the same in the circulating department when ready for use.

The special committee to procure legislation reported that the bill they had presented at the last meeting had received the endorsement of the Corporation Counsel and had been given to Assemblyman William R. Codington to have passed by the Legislature.

The librarian's report for January was read, approved and ordered filed.

NOVEL ENTERTAINMENT.

A Progressive Missionary Contest Afforded a Pleasant Afternoon.

A novel form of entertainment proved both pleasant and profitable to the members of the Presbyterian Mission Band Tuesday afternoon. The meeting was held in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue church. The brief opening exercises were conducted by the president, Miss Emily Tracy, who though wintering in New York, was present.

Postal cards announcing a progressive missionary contest aroused much curiosity among the members and drew a large number out in spite of the storm.

Five tables were used, four being seated at each, and the questions comprised hidden missionaries' names and mission stations, geographical locations and questions regarding the band's work. As the two persons winning stars, for the largest number correctly answered, progressed, the remaining two changed places.

Miss Halloway won six stars and received first prize. The Misses Harriet Gardner, May Calhoune and Hattie Goddard, ranked second, and the consolation prize was won by a new member, whose missionary education as yet is not advanced. There was a delicate suggestion in the prizes, the first being a prettily decorated jug for the contributions of the new year, and the consolation was a handbook of missionary knowledge.

The committee arranging the contest were Misses Julia J. Ketcham, Flora R. Petrie and Agnes Blair. The amount from the jugs was about $21, which will be increased before the financial year closes. The band is now preparing to give a tea and entertainment with novel features, on February 20th, in the parlors of the church.

THE FIRST POTTER PRESS.

The Man Who Made It and What He Has to Say of His Old Employer.

"That is a sight that ought to be good for the eyes of the man who made the first Potter press."

The remark came from the lips of Horace C. Bradford, a Milwaukee mechanical engineer, who was one of the interested spectators recently when the three Potter presses in the Journal press rooms were started.

"I built the first Potter press myself, and set it up in the Potter shops in Westerly, R. I., away back in 1858 or 1859," he said. "I cannot tell the exact year, but it was before the war. I was at work for Charlie Potter when he first went into business, and the first press we made was under my direction. From that start, however, came the great Potter presses of the present day, such as you have here, three in a row.

"Charlie Potter worked hard for success, and he deserved it. At one time we had about a dozen costly presses almost finished when we found that they would not work as well as we expected, so they were thrown aside and Potter went into the pattern shop himself to try to remedy the deficiences.

He was a hard worker and a good designer and finally overcome the troubles so that his presses went into use and gave satisfaction. But from that time to this he has kept studying up improved features for his machines until he has brought them where they are."

AUXILIARY TO BOARD OF MISSIONS.

Episcopal Women Organize to Help Along a Good Cause.

In accordance with an invitation extended by the women of Grace P. E. church to the women of the other four Episcopal churches in Plainfield, about seventy-five women met in the chapel of the former church Tuesday afternoon for the purpose of forming a Plainfield branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions. A preliminary organization was formed, and another meeting will be held on March 10th.

The members entered into a thorough discussion of the subject and all seemed to be exceedingly interested in the organization. Mrs Ryder was chosen presiding officer, and Mrs. F. W. Perry secretary.

It was decided that each parish appoint two men to make up an executive committee. *They will meet pro*vious to the other meeting. A helpful paper was read yesterday by Miss Mary Tweedy on the "Value of Being Thoroughly Conversant in Missionary Work."

Our people are growing more and more in the habit of looking to Reynolds' pharmacy for the latest and best of everything in the drug line. They sell Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, famous for its cures of bad colds, croup and whooping cough. When in need of such a medicine give this remedy a trial and you will be more than pleased with the result.

ALL CHANGE SAVE GOD.

REV. CORNELIUS SCHENCK SPEAKS OF THE PERMANENCY OF GOD.

He is the Same Today as of Old and Will Forgive All Sins and Help You to Live Aright—Other Points.

There was a goodly number of people present at the revival service held in the Park Avenue Baptist church last Tuesday, and the meeting was one of exceptional interest to everyone.

Rev. Cornelius Schenck gave a most excellent talk on the text, "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today, yes, and forever," as found in Hebrews 13:8. A portion of his remarks were as follows:

The great law of change is written on everything, even the hills are subject to change, by severe storms and winds. This law is sadly evident at times. A few years ago the family circle was complete, and nothing seemed to enter that would mar the joy and happiness therein. How is it now? One by one they drop out and there is a change. One thing is very much desired and that is something permanent. We find that in God through His Son, Jesus Christ, for he is the same yesterday, today and forever. Amid the shifting sands of time we need a solid rock to stand upon. There is a peculiar sort of sameness in God. It is not the kind to easily tire of, not like the seed or oak of which we have control. He possesses loving, living, warm sympathetic personality, and the heart of man can be satisfied with nothing less than Jesus Christ. He is perfect, and we will find in Him just what we desire. He is always the same in nature, being both human and divine. Though absent in flesh He is ever present in the spirit. The word of God endureth forever. He is the same in power and love. The unchangeable love of Christ is something to be desired. May we lift our eye of faith and secure His blessing. He is the same today as of old, and He will forgive our sins and help us to live aright. May we say tonight, "All for Christ, all that I have for Christ." Charles Lewis sang very effectively, "I Need Thee Every Hour."

Dr. Lewis then took charge of the service and one of the most helpful testimony meetings was held. Many expressed a desire to become Christians which fact encouraged the workers very much.

CHARLIE'S ENTERTAINMENTS.

A Course Designed For People Who Appreciate Talent.

This course, arranged by Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, promises to be of special interest, both from a social and an intellectual point of view.

Mrs. Laura E. Richards, who will open the series on Friday afternoon next at 945 Central avenue, is well-known here as elsewhere by her writings. As a reader she is very much liked. Her voice is of excellent quality, her use of it exceedingly good and her rendering of her own charming stories unsurpassable in charm and interest. No one who has heard her read "Jim, of Kellas," "Bethseda Pool," or parts of "Captain January," will fail to exclaim: "Give me that strain again."

Prof. W. Hudson Shaw, M. A. Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford, England, who will give an historical lecture on "Venice" at Seminary Hall, February 21st, is now lecturing in Philadelphia, in the University Extension, for the third season. This association says of him: "He has been for several years the most distinguished and successful of the Oxford University Extension staff. Mr. Shaw unites with the scholarship, which has won him the position as Fellow of Balliol, exceptional skill and magnetism as a lecturer."

The last lecture, "General Francis Marion and the Huguenots of South Carolina," will be given by Mrs. Hall on March 6th, at the home of Mrs. Edward C. Perkins, Central avenue.

Threw Away His Canes.

Mr. D. Wiley, ex-postmaster, Black Creek, N. Y., was so badly afflicted with rheumatism that he was only able to hobble around with canes, and even then it caused him great pain. After using Chamberlain's Pain Balm he was so much improved that he threw away his canes. He says this liniment did him more good than all other medicines and treatment put together. WAR BALLOONS.

Many of Them Used During the Siege of Paris.

An Excellent Method of Getting Within the Enemy's Lines—Ballooning Has Since Become an Important Branch of Military Study.

The last big European war taught the French more about ballooning than they would otherwise have learned in a generation. At the beginning of the war the government rejected many proposals from balloon makers to construct a number of war balloons, but when they were shut up in Paris they gladly turned to the balloon to help them. They turned all their disused stations into balloon factories, and sought the services of the few experienced aeronauts then available for the teaching of the use and management of the balloons to the people. During four months 66 balloons left Paris, of which number only three have never been accounted for. This is remarkable when it is remembered that no lights were allowed in the night ascensions, and the balloons could only be sent up under cover of darkness.

One hundred and sixty persons, including Gambetta, were carried safely over the Prussian lines, and 2,500,000 letters were sent. The balloons also took with them pigeons, which were sent back to Paris with letters and dispatches. The messages were written and photographed down very small on exceedingly thin paper. This was rolled up, inserted in a quill and attached to the tail feathers of the pigeon. When it was received in Paris the photograph was put under a microscope and the message read. One of the balloons, the Ville d'Orleans, left Paris at 11 o'clock at night, and arrived near Christiana, Norway, 15 hours later, having crossed the North sea in its remarkable voyage. Most of the aeronauts were sailors, who were chosen because of their familiarity with the management and steering of boats at sea, and they proved very capable. During the entire siege balloons formed the only means of communication with the outside world for the imprisoned inhabitants, and nothing could have taken their place.

Since then ballooning has been made an important branch of military study, and the course through which the ballooning corps has to pass is becoming daily more scientific and severe. The war balloon must be compact, always ready for action, and very strong. It is not large enough to be always captive—that is, it is secured to the earth by a cable. It is seldom emptied of its gas, and is, therefore, always ready for action at a moment's notice. The equipment of a balloon corps, besides the balloon itself, consists essentially of two wagons, one large and heavy, somewhat resembling a lumber truck, and the other considerably smaller. The former is used to fasten the balloon to the ground with its large reels containing about 2,000 yards of twisted wire rope. The smaller wagon is filled with iron pipes containing gas, and is technically called the "tube wagon."

At the word of command the balloon, always inflated, is released, and bounds upward to the height of several hundred feet, uncoiling the rope after it. The officer in the car takes up with him maps of the country, a field glass and a field glass. The position and arrangement of the enemy are marked down on the maps with different colored pencils, indicating cavalry, infantry, etc. These marked maps are then placed in the basket. The basket is attached to a ring, which slides down the cable to the ground, where a mounted officer awaits it, and carries the message to the general in command. Other means of communicating information have been tried, such as by telephone and phonography, but many officers still cling to the colored pencil method, which, they say, is very sure and effective.—Chicago Record.

THEY TOOK NO CHANCES.

Congressman Helped Mike Out in Dispensing Hospitality.

One of the Massachusetts congressmen lives near Boston. He has a beautiful estate, his admiration for which is shared by his coachman, Mike. The other day Mike brought a party of Irish friends upon the place and after escorting them around the grounds and showing them the stable ushered them into the hall.

There, somewhat to his surprise, he met his employer, but the latter was determined not to be outdone in hospitality by his coachman. "Bring your friends into the dining-room, Mike," he said, and into the dining-room the trio followed him. "Now, Mike, of course you can have what you like," he remarked, as he stood by the sideboard; "but I have a drink here that I think you will like. There is a story to it, by the way. You see, 'which may interest you. It is called Benedictine, and it is made by monks upon the Alps. They fill a little flask with it and send out their St. Bernard dogs to find travelers who may be overcome by the cold. When a poor, half-frozen fellow is found he drinks a little of this cordial from the flask and then he is able to follow the dogs to a place of shelter." The men listened to the story in silence. Finally one of them mustered up courage to speak. "Have you any gin?" he asked. "Certainly," said the congressman, as he laid aside the cordial. "Help yourself." The men took a good, substantial drink of the gin and smiled happily over its familiar taste. "That wasn't bad," said one of them. "Now bring on your dog liquor!"—Washington Post.

At the Dentist's.

Young Lady (timorously)—Who was that screaming just now?

Dentist—Don't be alarmed; it was a patient who was being treated free of charge.—Journal Amusant.

FIRESIDE FRAGMENTS.

—If you possess a cozy corner with a shelf at the top have a zinc trough made to fit it and fill this with some hardy foliage and flower plants. They will last a long time and add greatly to the beauty of the room.

—Small pieces of toilet soap which are too little to be used may be utilized. Make a bag of Turkish toweling about seven inches square and put into it all the small pieces of soap. When it is three-quarters filled sew up the end and use the bag as if it were a cake of soap.

—Cream Toast with Poached Eggs.—Prepare toast as usual. Lay each slice in a saucer before adding dressing, and then finish with a delicately poached egg. Eggs broken into separate sauce dishes or patty pans, and steamed until the whites are set, will present a more appetizing appearance than when dropped into water.—N. Y. Ledger.

—To make pastry successfully, it is important that it should not be much handled, and that the hands should be cool. It is, in fact, acknowledged that persons with cold hands make lighter cakes than others, generally speaking. For this reason a china rolling-pin will be found preferable to one of wood.—Liverpool Mercury.

—Salmon Steak.—Steep for an hour or so four middle-cut, good-sized salmon steaks with a glass of sweet oil, salt and pepper and the juice of a lemon. About half an hour before serving, broil them light brown over a clear coal fire, and garnish with quartered lemons and serve with a bowl of tartar sauce.—Boston Budget.

—Crumbs spread over the tops of dishes should be mixed evenly with melted butter over the fire. This is a better method than having lumps of butter dotted over the crumbs after they are spread. When the sauce bubbles through the crumbs on top of a scallop dish the cooking is completed.—The Cook.

—Egg Dressing for Salads.—Take the yolk of one hard-boiled egg, one teaspoonful of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of made mustard and one tablespoonful of butter. Cream the ingredients and add gradually two tablespoonfuls of vinegar. Chop the white of the egg fine and add it to the salad. This is especially desirable for cabbage.—Housekeeper.

GOING UP-STAIRS.

Few Do This Gracefully Is to Be Accomplished.

The woman who finds herself at the top of a flight of stairs, breathless and exhausted, gasping and blowing in a distressing manner, has undergone an awful paralysis of grace. The head and the stomach have been made to do double duty, that of the lungs and their own combined, with more often only one-half of the room required to do it in, from the compressing force of the stays. Consequently one of the most graceful actions that a woman is called on most often to illustrate is transformed, by the ignorance of a few rules of physical culture, into one of the most ludicrous and unfortunate ungainliness.

The woman who clutches her skirts in front midway between the hip and the knee heads her body from the hips almost in a bow and drags up, laboriously exhausting her vital energies at every step. Scarcely a more foolish and ridiculous mistake, for which she suffers severely long before arriving at the top.

One of the handsomest pictures painted of feminine beauty is that of a lovely woman ascending a fine, old staircase. Her slender figure is gracefully erect, her lovely face on the columnlike throat turned half over her shoulder. The arms are bare, and droop with perfectly natural grace to her knees, where the silken skirts are daintily lifted to allow the free play of tiny, slippered feet. The lady is in the act of ascending, and seems to float upward, the personification of grace itself.

One imagines that he can see her catch her silken skirt at either knee, lifting it just to the ankle, expand her chest, hold her shoulders well back and her head down. Then the slender body rests squarely on the hips, not dragging forward, and, standing perfectly erect, she glides upward, easily and gracefully.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Domino Evening Cloak.

The latest make of evening cloak recalls the domino style, well plaited in at the back, so that the base is wide and ample. These plaits have to be diminished and arranged in a most clever way on the dining that supports them to prevent the back looking clumsy. Immense hanging sleeves, wide enough to take in any other kind of sleeve, add to the voluminous appearance of the garment. An elegant one worn by a marquise at the opera was to the king of Portugal was of yellow lampas brocht, with silver, lined with ermine, and revers of the same fur, showing in front a long white satin gillet covered with silver lace and pearls. The same lace was quilled inside the cape and allowed to fall over the arms in a most becoming way.—Detroit Free Press.

One Point in His Favor.

"I knew I'd offend you 25 years without finding out you're a brute!" wrathfully exclaimed Mrs. Rangle. "I know a million reasons why I'd hate to be you, and only one why I'd like to be you."

"What is that one reason, madame?" fiercely demanded Mr. Rangle.

"Because you've got a good wife!" she screamed.—Chicago Tribune.

Finance, National and Personal.

"No," said the man who picks up bits of wisdom wherever he can, "I never like to hear Bykins start out to show how all the indebtedness of the country can be liquidated and financial affairs put into shape at short notice."

"Why not?"

"He nearly always winds up by borrowing two dollars on his own account."—Washington Star.

GOD GIVES ALL PEACE.

REV. C. E. HERRING SAYS THE DUTY OF MAN IS TO FEAR GOD.

The Revival Meetings Will be Continued Next Week in the Park Avenue Baptist Church—Two Union Services.

The attendance at the Crescent Avenue church last Friday gave unmistakable evidences that the people have no desire to bring the revival meetings to a close. The usual song service was conducted by David E. Titsworth, after which Rev. Dr. Richards read the Scripture and Rev. Cornelius Schenck offered prayer. An impressive portion of the service followed when Mr. Lewis sang "I Will Sail the Wild Seas No More."

Rev. C. E. Herring then read the fourteenth chapter of the Gospel of John to the twenty seventh verse and took his text from the latter verse which reads: "Peace I leave with you; My peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you."

In part, he said: This is a time of peace. Christ came to tell about peace. Men look upon life as a sorrowful thing. They believe that hopes are dreams and are never realized. This is the attitude of man without God's peace. I am not here to tell you about something that is afar off, but how to go through life with perfect peace and rest. There is a peace of God which shows that His Spirit has a resting place within us. You look at a ship's chronometer and it is always the same whether tempest-tossed or not; and a man can be so adjusted with the Divine law that he, too, can show a like same. If your life is one of trouble and discouragement Christ can make it one of peace. You ask how? To one whose mind is staid on God He does give peace. There are Christians here tonight who can testify to that. The whole duty of man is to fear God and serve Him forever. If we centre our mind on God we will have peace, a peace that passeth all knowledge shall keep us. We should trust God and so obtain that perfect peace which He gives.

I like the Christian Endeavor pledge which says: "Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise Him that I will do whatsoever He would like to have me do." Trusting is the foundation of all.

We read that a man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho and fell among thieves. The fact that He went down caused him to fall among bad men.

Lean on the Lord in all your weakness and take the gift He offers. It is not too much for Him to give. Let God into your soul. Fill your soul with His love and then you will have perfect satisfaction. May we say to night "Lord Jesus, help me to look to Thee." Look tonight and live.

Mr. Herring closed his remarks by offering an earnest prayer. Another effective solo, "The Clanging Bells of Time," was then rendered by Mr. Lewis.

Dr. Richards stated that he was very sorry that the meetings were going to close in his church, but was glad that the invitation from the Park Avenue Baptist church had been accepted and meetings would be held there every night next week except Saturday.

Will Apply For a License.

Carl Kearth will apply to the Common Council Monday evening for a liquor license for Michael Watson's grocery store at the corner of Grant avenue and South Second street. The necessary number of signers have been secured, but it is not probable that the application will be granted.

PARK CLUB'S GOOD TIME.

A VARIED PROGRAMME RENDERED FOR THE MEMBERS' PLEASURE.

Lehigh University Banjo Club Furnish Sweet Music on String Instruments—An Original Monologue Given by Mrs. Serrell.

If it had no other attraction, the Park Club would add many names to its list of members on account of its delightful entertainments. Another entertainment was held last Friday and it was enjoyed by a large number who completely packed the pretty little hall and gallery. A small stage had been erected in the front of the hall and covered with rugs, while screens, palms and fancy tables gave a charming appearance, perfectly in keeping with the rest of the club house.

As the last comers were hurrying to remove their wraps, William N. Runyon, a member of the house committee, came to the front of the stage and in a witty speech introduced seven members of the Lehigh University Banjo Club as the "Seven Stars of Bethlehem," They were Messrs. Pittinos, Ayers, Gross, Wilson, Wood Jessup, Fletcher Hallock, of this city. "The Belle of New York" march was the selection rendered and everybody declared that they well deserved the title of "stars," as their rendition of the march was excellent.

Mr. Pettinos, leader of the banjo club, was next introduced and sang 'I Want Yer, Ma' Honey," with guitar accompaniment. His encore, 'Lively Old Flea," sent his audience into roars of laughter that did not cease until the original monologue by Mr. Lemuel W. Serrell was announced. Mrs. Serrell appeared in a charming evening gown and gave an amusing selection. The plot of the monologue was simple, but very good.

The new wife wanted to go to a dance but her husband sent word that he would not be home until late, "detained at the club on business." The poor wife meditated over her sad fate and, at last, decided to have a club at home. Her attempts to learn how to be a club man were very amusing. At last, after procuring a few like an up-to-date club, the wife started for the reception alone. After the, vigor ous applause had ceased, a quartette, composed of Elmer E. Runyon, Geo. O. Stevens, Alfred E. Holmes and Wm. N. Runyon, rendered a very pretty selection. Music by a male quartette is always very pleasing, but this was of unusual excellence. All four are good singers and their voices harmonized especially well. A medley from "Princess Bonnie" by the banjo club followed and concluded, with its encore, the first part.

The second part opened with a well rendered baritone solo by Alfred E. Holmes, and the "Stars" played a patrol, "The Passing Brigade," that pleased the audience. Fletcher Hallock has entertained Plainfield audiences before with his novel "mouthophone" solos, but last evening he had entirely new selections. He was accompanied by banjo and guitar, and had to give two encores before he was allowed to depart. Him and "The Streets of Cairo," completely brought down the house. A lively selection by the quartette was greatly enjoyed and then, by request, Mr. Pettinos sang 'The Summer Man," which so pleased his Park Club audience last year. The Lehigh boys brought the evening's entertainment to a close with a well-rendered selection and encore.

The floor was then cleared and some of the young people remained for an informal dance, while others went to the basement, where the story bals elebrated all over the green cloth and the pins in the bowling alleys went down before the well directed balls of the experts.

KING'S DAUGHTERS SOCIABILITY.

A Pleasant Programme Followed Out Yesterday Afternoon.

One of the most energetic of all the young ladies' charitable societies in Plainfield is the Doreas Circle of King's Daughters. Yesterday afternoon, most of the members gathered in the parlors of the home of Miss Maud Lowrie, president of the circle. The afternoon passed pleasantly and an attractive programme was given. It consisted of a soprano solo by Miss Katherine Glenn, a piano solo by Miss Alice Cuard, a soprano solo by Miss Ethel Holmes, a recitation by Miss Grace E. Overton, and a soprano solo by Miss Elfleda A. Whiting, with autoharp accompaniment.

Miss Overton's recitation, "A Cup of Tea," was especially fine, and was enjoyed by all. Conversation interspersed the different numbers and after the close of the programme refreshments were served. The table was decorated in pale green. The committee in charge consisted of Miss Grace Langdon, chairman, Miss Mary Brown, Miss Blish and Mrs. Harry Lowrie. The entertainment was arranged by a committee consisting of Miss Delphine Bowers, chairman, Miss Elizabeth Cornwell, Miss Little and Miss Etta Blish.

BROKEN NECK, AND LIVES

ENDURANCE OF A NEGRO GIANT NOW IN THE HOSPITAL.

If the Man Dies Somerset County Will Have Another Murder Trial—His Assailants Surrendered by Boodsmen.

A giant negro who has lived for five weeks with a fractured skull and a partially broken neck is now exciting the wonder of the medical staff of the Muhlenberg Hospital. The man is hourly expected to die, and at his death the Somerset county authorities will have another murder case on their hands—says the New York Sun.

Big "Jack" Schenck, the injured man, lived at South Bound Brook, where he was noted for his great strength and endurance. On Christmas Eve he went to the Lime Kiln Club ball at Mulvey's Port Reading Hotel. The ball broke up in a free fight. There was a reckless use of razors, but Jack's strength saved him. Among the men knocked out by his blows were Benjamin Hall, George Brokaw and Lewis Brokaw. Jack left for home early in the morning, and when near the Central Railroad tracks he was waylaid by three men. He was pounded into insensibility with clubs.

A colored woman told the authorities that three negros jumped on Schenck a prostrate body and clubbed him repeatedly. One of then, she says, struck a match to see if their victim still breathed and then shouted, "Give him some more boys, he ain't dead yet."

Jack remained unconscious a week from the effects of his beating, and then his jaws were locked and he could not tell who his assailants were. After several days he gave their names on the installment plan, and the brothers Brokaw and Hall were arrested and confined in the county jail. For five weeks Jack was attended by a local physician, and his assailants were released on bail. Recently his condition became worse, and yesterday he was taken to the Muhlenberg Hospital, where it was discovered that his skull was fractured and that the spinal column was splintered.

The accused negroes were surrendered last night by their bondsman, County Clerk Frank Soomers. Two of them were at once placed in the county jail. Horace Brokaw is still at large, but the authorities expect to capture him before morning.

Big Subject to Lecture On.

A large audience of intelligent women listened to an interesting and instructive lecture by Madame Swamstead, of New York, at the Y. M. C. A. Hall yesterday afternoon on "Woman, Her Physical and Mental Needs, Her Present and Future Possibilities." The subject was handled scientifically and with great delicacy and clearness. It was well illustrated by physical poses and charts. A request was made by many present that the lecture be repeated.

The convocation of New Brunswick holds its tri monthly session on Tuesday, February 4th, in New Brunswick, Rev. S. P. Simpson, of St. Stephen's church, of this city, has been appointed by the Dean to preach the sermon before the Bishops and the convocation.

ANOTHER OLD DEED.

A Sheepskin Indenture Penned By Wallace V. Miller, of This City.

Any relic of "ye olden times" is al ways looked upon with interest by the present generation. Some time ago a deed dated 1795, belonging to ex-Mayor John H. VanWinkle, was described in The Daily Press. Wallace V. Miller, proprietor of the Hotel Grenada, has in his possession another deed of almost an equal age. A number of years ago when the building that formerly occupied the site of the Love building at the corner of Watchung and North avenues was being torn down, the workmen found between the walls an old deed written on sheepskin. The head carpenter presented it to Mr. Miller.

This deed closely resembles the one belonging to Mr. VanWinkle, except that the latter has an indented end to enable it to be recognized, while the other has an oval hole cut in it, which of course corresponds with one in the other copy of the deed. The handwriting is very legible and is written backhand, with the important words printed. There is a noticeable use of both "the" and "ye," while the old-fashioned "s" is used entirely. The first part of the deed reads as follows: "This Indenture made this Fourth Day of July, Anno Domini One Thousand Seven Hundred and Forty, Between Charles Empson, of the Burrough of Willmington, formerly called Willingtown), in ye county of New Castlemen, Deleware Mariner, and Mary, his wife, on ye one part, and Robert Louston, of the said Burrough Marinor, on ye other part."

The property transferred in the deed is a water lot on Christiana Creek, near Wilmington, and was given for a consideration of fifty pounds.

The preservation of both the sheepskin and the writing is quite remarkable, while the seal remains intact.

LOST HEAVILY IN PRESENTS.

The Young Bridegroom Thinks He Would Have Received $5,000 in Gifts.

The New York papers this morning contained the following from Newark concerning the Smith-Baglin wedding, in the exclusive announcement of which The Press scored a signal beat over the sweat shop News:

Harry Baglin was seen at his home, No. 269 High street, this afternoon. He said: "Yes, it's true we were married on Sunday night. We were to be wedded on April 12 next, but concluded to be married quietly. We will be the losers by about $5,000 in presents, however, by the change in the programme, as the wedding would have been one of the biggest affairs of its kind ever held in Plainfield. But my father-in-law is going to make up for that in a measure by giving us a big reception some time next month."

Up-to-Date in Name, Anyway.

The social club composed of young men of this city, the organization of which was exclusively told in the Daily Press at the time, met again last evening at Pierson's cigar store on Watchung avenue. The young men are thoroughly up-to-date in all their actions and so they have chosen an up-to-date name, the Twentieth Century Club. That name was chosen at the meeting last evening. Rooms have been secured in the Babcock building and electric lights put in. The club meets again next Tuesday night.

A MAN TO BE MISSED.

DEATH OF D. M. MOORE REMOVES A WORTHY CITIZEN.

He Was Stricken Down While at His Work in New York—Heart Failure is the Cause Assigned—Funeral in Plainfield

The news of the sudden death of David M. Moore, which occurred in New York Thursday, was a severe blow to the entire community, as well as to his family residing at 224 East Fifth street. Mr. Moore was in his usual good health when he started for his place of business yesterday morning. He arrived at his office about 8:30 and ten minutes later one of the salesmen entered with the morning mail. Mr. Moore extended his accustomed cordial greeting, and nothing was evident to denote illness until about 9 o'clock, when another salesman stopped at the office to hand him a paper. He then noticed that there was something wrong, and hastened to the store to send one of the firm to the office. When the latter arrived he found Mr. Moore sitting at his desk, lifeless. Word was immediately sent to the family in this city, also to Mr. Moore's son, Walter, who is in business in the city. A coroner was also sent for, and after an examination, pronounced the case that of heart failure. The family was prostrated upon receiving the sad news. Arrangements were at once made to have the remains brought to this city, and they arrived with the grief-stricken family on the 5:30 train last evening, and were taken to the home.

Mr. Moore was born in New York city fifty-four years ago, and after receiving a liberal education entered the office of E. R. Durkee & Bro., 135 Water street, dealers in spices, at the age of twenty-four and has been with them ever since. He was married in the city a few years after entering business, and moved to Plainfield where he has been a resident twenty-three years. He was very well known by almost everyone in this city and in New York he had a host of friends. He was a staunch and faithful member of the Crescent Avenue Church and at one time held the position of elder. Three years after coming to Plainfield he associated himself with the work in Warren Chapel, where he has been one of the leaders and for twenty years has taught a woman's Bible class. During his residence in this city, Mr. Moore has always been identified with Christian work and his wide influence has resulted in the accomplishment of a vast amount of good.

He was a man of even temperment and very regular in his habits, and these, together with high qualities, made him very valuable in his private and business life.

The heart of his death spread very rapidly yesterday morning and the New York office was thronged with friends who called to extend their deep sympathy to the firm and their associates. The community has lost a most valued citizen in his death and their heartfelt sympathy go out to the bereaved ones in their sad affliction.

DR. OPDYKE EXONERATED.

The Former Plainfielder Justified in His Treatment of a Hospital Patient.

The Medical Board of Harlem Hospital held a meeting at the hospital Tuesday night, and after considering the charges against Dr. Ralph Opdyke, that were brought against him in connection with his treatment of Courtland Babcock, the suicide, early Sunday morning, January 19th, completely exonerated him.

His putting on of bandages was deemed a perfectly proper proceeding. His actions were entirely approved. The Medical Board consists of eight eminent physicians.

A disagreement occurred between Dr. Opdyke, who came with the ambulance in question, and Dr. J. Gardiner Smith, the family physician. The Medical Board appointed an investigation committee, and, in view of their report, the board decides that Dr. Opdyke's actions were justifiable.

A Timely Article.

Henry M. Stanley, in an article on the "Development of Africa," which is to appear in the February Century, recalls the fact that troubles with the Boers in southern Africa first induced David Livingstone to travel to the north, and so led the way to the opening of Equatorial Africa. Livingstone, who was a missionary at Kolobeng, accused his Boer neighbors of cruelty to the natives. They resented his interference, and threatened to drive him from the country. He published their misdeeds in the Cape newspapers, and his house was burned in revenge. This led to his leaving southern Africa and going to a region where he could follow in peace his vocation as a missionary, unmolested by the Boer farmers.

A Complete Surprise.

A birthday surprise party was tendered William Koyer, of East Third street, last evening, by a number of his friends, it being the 67th anniversary of his birth. Games interspersed with singing and music, followed with refreshments, ended the evening's pleasures, when all departed for their homes wishing the host many happy returns of the day.

DELIGHTFUL MUSICALE.

Mr. and Mrs. L. V. F. Randolph Entertain at Their Home.

A charming musicale was given last Friday at the home of ex-Mayor L. V. F. Randolph, of East Front street, when Profs. Conde and Janke rendered the accompanying programme to the delight of the invited guests, necessarily limited to a small number.

Rondo—Violin and Piano	Beethoven
Cavatina—Violin and Piano	Raff
Polonaise—Piano solo	Chopin
1. My Little Love, } 2. Ah, That Dream, }	Songs Hawley
1. Spinning Song, } 2. Romance, }	Vio's and Pio Grieg
Menuett—Piano Solo	Raidecker
Air in the Olden Style, } 2. Ah! How Dear, }	Songs Ratigen Thomas
Allegro—Violin and Piano	Beethoven
Swan—Violin and Piano	St. Saens

"If all the world loves a lover," it is almost as true that all the world loves a violin, and Prof. Conde plays on his violin with such skill as to interpret and stimulate deep feeling. The pianist, Mr. Arthur Janke, was fortunate in having a fine instrument to respond to his artistic touch, as the Steinway Grand piano in Mr. Randolph's parlor is a very fine instrument of exquisite tone. The programme was listened to with rapt attention, the harmony of action between the violin and piano showing the skill of true artists. The Spinning Song by Rolander gave special pleasure. Raidgen's piano solo, Menuett, was encored, as was also the concluding number on the programme, an Adagio by Beethoven. The encore was such a bit of bright and dainty music that the audience could not help thinking how much they might have missed if they had not testified their appreciation of the previous performance.

A most interesting feature of the programme was the singing of Miss Haidenburgh, the contralto member of the Crescent Avenue church choir. Miss Haidenburgh has a fine voice of rare quality and great depth, compelling the breathless attention of her audience. She sang for an encore "A Spanish Love Song," commencing with bright, tripping measures that changed to passionate declarations of love.

A pretty conceit of the refreshments served, was a tiny roll of music on the covers of the ice-cream boxes.

CONSOLIDATION MUST COME.

A Borough Philosopher Says the City and Borough Must Be One.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—The consolidation of the borough and the city would be of lasting benefit to both communities. Their interests are identical. Why should they be separated by an imaginary line? Let the opponents of this proposition present clear, logical reasons why the union of the town would not be advantageous. Can they do it? Who is afraid of losing the sceptre of political power? Will the political negatives answer?

Take the question of school accommodations, the High School, etc. Will North Plainfield lose on this point?

How about a united and an efficient fire department? Do the boroughites object here?

The sewer! That's the goat that tickles the throat. It can't be swallowed. Oh! my friends! Is that what you fear? Please don't lose any sleep over that subject. North Plainfield cannot escape from a sewer tax. She must have a sewer system whether she remains alone or joins the city. And North Plainfield must pay for it. Sanitary improvements are the need of the hour and the borough must fall in line.

The carping critics claim that the Plainfield sewer system will be a disgraceful failure. Wait and see. The purling laughter of the objectors may turn to weeping and wailing. Let them sit in sackcloth and ashes.

Boroughites don't let the fine, scientific sewer system stand in the way of annexation. That matter will be adjusted so nicely that the cavillers will crawl—through the mud hole covers, for they have no ventilating holes and they couldn't get in, you know.

Plainfield is a city of homes and of civil engineers. Can water run up hill? Yes, when it is forced. The oldest and the youngest inhabitants could have told us that—why pay civil engineers to demonstrate the case?

The pendulum of political power will swing on the right side—common sense—the sewer question will be settled, perhaps, with a finite or an infinite addition of bonds. Which?

North Plainfield should not let a little question like this stand in the way of a great, public improvement.

'Tis local narrowness carried to the most selfish extreme for one to block the wheels of public progress.

North Plainfield must be coaxed and petted like a coy maiden. Plainfield hopes to win her. Let the honest lawyers draw up the settlement before the marriage. Plainfield may need it.

Thanking you for past favors, I remain, Mr. Editor,

Yours truly,

Chatham Lochinvar.

It might be a good thing to transfer some of the political pulls from Trenton to the stranded St. Paul. They can do as much good in one place as another.

WANTED TWO WEDDINGS

BUT THE FINDING OF THE MARRIAGE CERTIFICATE SPOILED ALL.

Miss Sadie Smith Married to Harry Baglin in New York Sunday Night—Another Wedding Was Also Announced.

People residing in the borough were quite interested Tuesday when the engagement and approaching marriage of Miss Sadie Smith, daughter of Councilman and Mrs. W. C. Smith, to Harry T. Baglin, of Newark, was announced through the Daily Press, but they will be surprised today to learn that the marriage was solemnized on Sunday night in New York, and that two days later the husband called and asked that the engagement and wedding event, arranged to take place April 12th, be published.

Last Sunday afternoon the couple went to New York, accompanied by Miss Maggie Summers, a cousin of Miss Smith. In the city they met Mr. Snipner, of Brooklyn, a friend of Mr. Baglin. They then went to the Calvary P. E. church on Fourteenth street and after the evening service Miss Smith and Mr. Baglin were married by Rev. Mr. Schepflin, the rector. Miss Summers acted as bridesmaid and Mr. Snipner as best man. It was their intention to keep the marriage a secret, and have the home wedding on April 12th. They returned to Plainfield that night and the affair was kept very quiet until yesterday, when a relative called at the house, and in searching for something accidentally came across the marriage certificate.

Surprise came to the young couple, and they then confessed that they were husband and wife. The bride's parents were completely surprised and felt very sory that they had been married in such a manner, when such extensive preparations were being made to have a large wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. Baglin will reside in the borough for awhile, and will be given a reception next month at the bride's home. They will then take up their residence in Newark.

JUSTICE NASH MAY LOSE A FINGER.

The Member Seriously Injured While He Was Cleaning a Bicycle.

Justice Nash met with a severe and painful accident at his office this morning while cleaning his bicycle. He had the machine suspended from the ceiling so that he might work about its intricate parts with greater ease and when the accident occurred he was cleaning the wheels. He was whirling them around with considerable speed to see if they revolved easy, when someone in another part of the office suddenly called his attention to something and turning his head he inadvertent caught the second finger of the right hand in the chain which quickly carried it into the cogs, where the flesh was torn off to the bone. In company with E. C. Morse Mr. Nash went to Dr. Hedges, who dressed the wound and bound it up in splints. It is possible the injury will be serious enough to necessitate the amputation of the finger.

A PARLOR MEETING.

The Y's Entertain Their Friends at the Home of Miss Titsworth.

The young ladies of the Y. W. C. T. U., received their friends Thursday afternoon at the home of Miss Bessie Titsworth on West Seventh street. Miss Campbell, of New Brunswick, New Jersey state president of the Y's, was present and gave a very practical and interesting talk on the work of the Union. An informal tea followed. The table was artistically decorated in pink, while green smilax wreaths were tastefully draped about the room. Mrs. William Stillman and Mrs. Frank Cline presided at the prettily set table, while the dainty little cups of tea were passed to the guests by the Y's. A period sociability brought the parlor meeting to a close.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS TOGETHER.

Silver Wedding Anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Winfield Schomp Celebrated.

Mr. and Mrs. Winfield Schomp, of West Front street, celebrated their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary last Sunday, and to complete the event a thoroughly enjoyable surprise was arranged by Miss Williams and Miss Lebau, and given last evening. There were about fifty persons present, joining in the merry festivities, after which several of the guests furnished excellent music. About midnight refreshments were served. Mr. and Mrs. Schomp were completely surprised as they had not the slightest intention of it. The party met at the home of Mrs. Wyckoff on West Front street not far from Mr. and Mrs. Schomp's residence.

Roselle to Have a Fire Whistle.

Roselle has decided to follow the example of her larger neighbor, Plainfield, and is going to purchase a steam fire alarm whistle. For that object the firemen of Roselle, Aldene and Lorraine gave an entertainment in the Roselle Casino, last night. The different selections were rendered mostly by talent from Elizabeth and Roselle. The entertainment was very successful in every way and was largely attended. A number from Plainfield were present.

Large Enough.

A foot-traveler through one of the silly regions of Africa came one day upon a curious little cabin, so small as to seem hardly large enough for a human habitation. While she was whimsically considering as to whether it might not be the abode of the famous wood people, but upon the ground loving superstitions cling, the figure of a short, stout old man emerged from the cabin, and stood confronting her in smiling silence. After salutations had been exchanged, the traveler jestingly told the old man that she had half fancied his dwelling the home of fairies. "No, indade, ma'am, but it's a good warm place, God bless it," replied the old man. "But surely you cannot sleep in it?" said the traveler, curiously. "An' fwhat nade to shtand, ma'am?" returned the owner of the tiny house. "Shure, an' Oi can come outside to do that same, an' whin Oi'm inside, Oi can lie down either to go to bed or sit down, ma'am!" There was such warmth in the smile with which this cheerful philosophy was propounded that the traveler was not disposed to pick a flaw in this either acceptance of its truth.—Youth's Companion.

"Good Morning" in Samoa.

I had to go down to Apia five or six different times, and each time there were 100 black boys to say "Good morning" to. This was rather a tedious performance, as very few of them answered at all, and those who did, only with a grunt like a pig's, it was several times in my mind to give up this piece of politeness. The last time I went down, I was almost decided; but when I came to the first gang of black boys and saw them looking so comic and so melancholy, I began the business over again. This time I thought more of them seemed to answer, and when I got down to the tell end where the carts were running, I received a very pleasant surprise, for one of the boys, who was pushing at the back of a cart, lifted up his head, and called out to me in wonderfully good English: "You good man—always say good morning." It was and to think that these poor creatures should think so much of so small a piece of civility, and strange that (talking so) they should be so dull as not to return it.—Robert Louis Stevenson's "Letters to a Boy," in St. Nicholas.

"Mother's Pies."

We none of us realize that it is ourselves who change, and not the food that delighted us in our youth. Shiftcrusty, hard-to-please husband? Wife, I wish you would make pies that would taste as good as my mother's used to do." "Well, my dear, you run out and get me in a pailful of water, a hodful of coal and an armful of wood, just as you used to do for your mother, and maybe you will like my pies as well." He concluded the pies would answer the purpose just as they were. —Good Housekeeping.

A Ravenous Insect.

Commenting on the amount which a spider actually consumed during 24 hours, Sir J. Lubbock says: "At a similar rate of consumption a man weighing 160 pounds will require a whole ox for breakfast, an ox and five sheep for dinner and for supper two oxlocks, eight sheep and four hogs, and just before retiring nearly four barrels of fresh fish."—Chicago Chronicle.

A PICTURESQUE SPOT.

Fertility and Beauty of Strawberry Point, Alaska.

The Best Place in the Northwestern Territory for Agricultural Pursuits—A Perfect Wilderness of Plants and Grasses.

The season that is just finished has been the most profitable in the matter of tourists as well as gold miners that Alaska has ever seen. Now that it is over, and the regular inhabitants of the territory have had a chance to think about it a little, they are beginning to talk about the great things in store for them. Alaska is gorgeous in summer. Nowhere else in the world is there such scenery as along the island-dotted channel from Port Townsend to Juneau. Not only is nature dressed in her best to receive the tourists who are going there in ever-increasing throngs, but the inhabitants also get on their good clothes and their good behavior, and for four or five months the whole territory is arrayed in its Sunday best. But this good clothes exhibition comes only in the summer, and for about two days of each week, when the steamer from "down below" is in. The tourists come and go with the steamers, and rarely stay over from one boat to another. As the steamers lie in each port only a day or two, the tourists have not much chance to make a lasting impression. Now, however, there is likely to be a change. Juneau men are nothing if they are not hustlers, and with the beginning of this season's profits and possibilities they are arranging to put up a big hotel on Strawberry Point, at the entrance to Glacier bay, in southeastern Alaska.

Strawberry Point is one of the most beautiful and picturesque spots in all Alaska. It lies between Juneau and Sitka at the entrance to Glacier bay. It is a glacial moraine, which extends out into bay straits about ten miles from the mainland, and marks the entrance to Glacier bay on the east from the little narrow strait between Pleasant island and the mainland on the west. The moraine has an elevation of from 50 to 100 feet above high tide, and contains hundreds of acres of fertile level land. If there is a place in the territory where agricultural pursuits can be carried on it is at Strawberry Point. The soil is a rich, sandy loam, and the indications are very free from the marshy ground which characterizes most of the level land along the coast in southeastern Alaska. The whole peninsula is covered with a luxurious growth of wild fruit and other grasses, and many acres of it are dotted with the strawberry plants which give the point its name. They are so thick that when they are in blossom in early summer the land resembles a New York meadow full of daisies, and in September, when the berries ripen, they fairly make the ground red.

The climate of Strawberry Point is much pleasanter than at most other places in Alaska. At Sitka, for instance, the average is 220 days of rain, snow or fog in a year. Juneau is about as bad. It never gets very cold because of the influences of the warm Japan current, but there are very few days of clear skies and bright sunshine. But at Strawberry Point the precipitation of rain in summer, and the corresponding fall of snow in winter, are much less than at Juneau. The fog bravance across the bay in the west the lofty Fairweather range lowers like an army of giant sentinels stationed there to protect this little garden spot from the cloudy enemies that would sweep across from the Pacific if these mountains did not hold them back. The rainfalls in summer are like those of the interior, and not like the long, misty drizzles and downpours of Sitka and Juneau. Strawberry Point is probably the only place in Alaska where the lightning plays and the thunder roars in a typical summer shower. In places on the benches there are bunches of young cedar and spruce with occasional thickets of alders, but most of the ground is clear and rolling.

The grandest scenery in Alaska is on view from Strawberry Point. Besides the giants of the Fairweather range, and the Muir and Pacific glaciers, which loom up 20 miles away and send off a continuous procession of tremendous icebergs, which pass down by the point like a great fleet of white war ships in review. The waters about the point teem with fish, and there is game aplenty in the near-by woods. Already the enthusiastic Juneau men are planning their summer hotel and calling Strawberry Point the "Saratoga of the Northwest."—N. Y. Sun.

Drill at Life-Saving Stations.

On Tuesdays there is boat practice, this consists in hauling the boat carriage to the beach, unloading, launching her and pulling out through the surf-line, returning, and doing just what the keeper commands, he steering the bout. After practice, the boat is put on the carriage, hauled back to the boat house, cleaned and left in perfect order. Wednesday is signal drill day. There is an international code of signals, composed of flags representing the different letters of the alphabet. Each surfman has a set of miniature flags and by their use can converse with answers them, with his flags—so any man at the station can read a message from a wrecked ship. All the principal maritime nations have adopted this code, and as vessels are provided with flags, and books containing the key to different signals, printed in many languages, communication between vessels and stations can be easily carried on, whatever the ship's nationality.—Teresa A. Brown, in St. Nicholas.

ANTARCTIC POSSIBILITIES.

Explorer Borchgrevink Thinks There May Be a Chance for Commercial Success.

The recent antarctic expedition was a commercial one, and commercially it was a failure, because we did not find the right whale, so valuable for its whalebone. The Antarctic is fitted out for the hunt of that particular kind of whale; nevertheless, I have no doubt that the commercial result of the expedition would have been much better had we worked under more favorable auspices.

I do not by any means consider the fact of our not having met with the right whale in those seas as conclusive proof of their nonexistence in the bay at Victoria Land. The Antarctic found the right whale at Campbell Island in the winter time; the boats fastened to five of them, of which, however, only one was caught. Now, to me it does not seem improbable that these whales go south to the bay of Victoria Land, where Ross saw them, in the summer, and then return north in the winter. It would seem incredible that a man of Sir James Ross' standing, supported as he was by able officers and experienced whalers, should have made a grave error when he said that this valuable whale was to be found in large numbers in these southern latitudes.

The difference in the appearance of the blue whale, as we found it there, and the right whale, in the method of spouting, is so striking that even the most casual observer could not easily be deceived. Very few whales were penetrated farther into the large open bay discovered by Ross in the vicinity of the volcano peaks Erebus and Terror, we, too, would have found the right whale in great numbers. We saw very many blue whales, but had not the appliances to take them.

As I remarked at the international geographical congress, we found few seals. They increased, however, in number as we went southward, and seemed afraid of the land. All of the seals that we met on the shore showed much uneasiness and speedily made for the water. This fact which strengthened my belief in the existence of a dangerous enemy of the seal on the continent. I do not doubt that the seals congregate together in larger numbers at some places on the bay.

I consider the guano beds which we discovered of great commercial importance, and they ought to be well worth the attention of enterprising business men. The specimen which I brought back with me contains a large percentage of ammonia.

Furthermore, from the analysis of the specimen of rock which I brought back with me, the possible and probable presence of valuable minerals on the continent is proved, although the lava and the volcanic aspect of the coast line do not speak favorably for the presence of heavy metals near the surface.—C. E. Borchgrevink, in Century.

MAN AT THE WHEEL.

Some of the Ingenious Devices for Navigating a Great Steamer.

Let us spend an hour with Capt. Randall, of the American liner St. Louis, on the bridge in midocean. He first takes us into the wheelhouse. It is a room ten feet wide with a curved front. A wheel about three feet in dimeter is placed near the center of the room, and you are surprised to see that the quartermaster keeps turning it almost constantly. You have always thought that he had simply to keep his eye on the floating compass which is directly in front of him and hold the ship steady on her course. As you look at the compass you see the ship veering now this way and now that, as she rolls and plunges, at one time faster than the other, and thus pulls the ship around. It is hard to make two independent screws go exactly at the same speed, and so this man at the wheel is busy all the time turning the ship straight. He fights with the waves and the screws and the winds at the same time, and he is a busy man.

This steering wheel controls the ship by means of a small column of oil in a little tube. By turning the wheel this way or that the oil in the tube is forced up and down, and that opens or closes certain valves in the steam-steering gear 400 feet away, and the rudder is turned as easily as if a child had done it. In most steamships the steam-steering gear is controlled by hydraulic power—that is by water—but the use of a column of oil is an improvement.

As you look about you see fastened to the corners directly in front of the wheelman a little scale in black with white lines marked off on it. There is a dial on it, and as the ship rolls you see that this is a device to mark the degree of the roll. You notice that it takes about a second for every degree of a roll. On each side of the room is another long black gauge, and the dials point to certain figures, generally between 90 and 95. These dials are little electrical devices to show you how many revolutions the screws are making. The captain at a glance knows what is going on in the engine-rooms.

Over in the corner of the room is another curious electrical device. It is a little box with a clock in it. The captain tells you it is the machine that controls the whistle in time of fog. The law requires a long blast of the whistle at a much times every two minutes. By pressing a button on this little clock apparatus, and by setting the clock in a certain manner, the whistle is blown automatically for seven seconds every minute. There can be no error of man in that work. It can be sure as every minute comes around that whistle will blow seven seconds. Under the old way, when a man pulled the whistle cord, there was no exactness in the work. When the fog is over the button is released and the whistle stops.—Harper's Round Table.

The Constitutionalist.

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY,

PUBLISHED AT

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms—$2.00 per year.

A. L. Force. Editor and Proprietor

The first of February and nothing but slush. When are we to have winter?

At the present rate of progress the Legislature will be noted for what it has not done.

"A Democrat Elected" was the rather startling head on a piece of news in a New York paper this morning. The Democrat was from Kentucky.

Even with the fees cut off there will be 6,000 reasons why lots of Republican politicians will want to be Clerk in Chancery or Clerk of the Supreme Court.—Newark News.

It is expected that Senator Voorhees will introduce in the Senate tonight a bill providing that a salary of $6,000 be paid to the Clerk in Chancery and of the Supreme Court.

The Republicans have decided to hold the convention for the election of delegates to the National Republican Convention on April 15th, if Taylor Opera House in Trenton could be secured for that date.

And still the St. Paul sticks in Jersey sand. It seems almost impossible that in this age of science and invention that the human mind can devise no means by which the big steamer can be hauled away from her perilous position. What a pity it will be if she goes to pieces.

Senator Smith thinks that Charles DeKay, the present Consul-General to Berlin, will be nominated to succeed the late Ambassador Runyon as this country's chief representative to Germany, Mr. DeKay is an old New York newspaper man. His stands high at the State Department.

Whiskers and wind have been generally supposed to constitute the orator's argument in the Senate in days past. The popular idea of the first part was dispelled yesterday by smooth-faced Senator Tillman, but wind does not describe the second composition. It was a regular Amazon typhoon of crankism.

The prayers said at the opening of the Senate and House might be shortened without any spiritual loss.—Tribune.

And this from a Republican paper to a Republican Legislature. Does The Tribune infer that the members of the Legislature are so good that prayers can make them no better, or does it insinuate that they are so bad that they are past reformation. Which?

Governor Griggs, of New Jersey, will entertain Governor O'Ferral, of Virginia, and sixty of the legislators of that State tomorrow. The Virginia delegation visits New Jersey for the object of inspecting the various stone roads around Trenton. Virginia is about to follow in the footsteps of New Jersey, and give road building a new encouragement by offering liberal State aid.

It is to be hoped that the stranding of the St. Paul off Long Branch will finally convince the Government that that particular point of the Jersey coast is a good site for a foghorn. It's the same old story every year, though the unlucky vessels are not often the size and importance of the beached American liner. The point where the St. Paul lies is down on all the charts as one of the most dangerous of the Atlantic coast, and yet, with life saving station No. 4 just above, at Monmouth Beach, and station No. 5 just below, at Deal Beach, great steamships can run their noses into the sand between them in a fog without warning.—Freeholder in New York Press.

The Daily Press is surprised that Mayor Gilbert should have become involved in the complication that arose at the meeting of the Council last night over the appointment of an Overseer of the Poor. It seems odd that such a careful and astute official as the Mayor has been in the past in the matter of acting for the city, that he should have overlooked the claims of such men as I. D. TenEyck, John Neagle, J. E. Mosher and others, who have long been residents of and contributed much to the support and progress of the city, and appointed a man, capable though he may be, who has only been a resident of the city for a short time and who is not even a citizen of the country. While the Mayor's intentions were doubtless of the best yet The Press cannot but feel that the Boys Club is not a proper thing for the city to tacitly take under its wing.

THE WORLD TO COME.

SUBJECT OF DR. YERKES AT TRINITY CHURCH LAST NIGHT.

Two Big Union Meetings Were Held Last Night—Rev. J. W. Richardson Preached in the Crescent Avenue Church.

From The Press of Feb. 2.

There appears to be no diminution in the interest in the evangelistic meetings which have been held in this city for the last three weeks. On the contrary, the attendance seems larger than before. Last evening at the union services, while the Crescent Avenue church and Hope chapel were filled to overflowing, every seat in Trinity Reformed Church was filled, while some had to stand in the rear.

The service, at this church, opened with an anthem by the regular choir of the church. A portion of the eighteenth chapter of St. Luke, beginning with the twenty-second verse, was read by D. J. Yerkes. D. D. He took for his text a phrase of the thirtieth verse of that chapter, "The world to come."

He said in part: The word, world, is used in various senses. In this case it is the age to come. I want to impress the importance of the world to come. Our body is of the earth, it returns dust to dust as it was. When we die and are done with this world, all that is peculiar to our physical body ceases. We go out from this physical existence to a spiritual world. The physical appears to dominate but, in the world to come, the spiritual will dominate. Some young men desire to be great in this world. The highest culture and power in this world is nothing in the world to come. The great things done in this world will not be great in God's eyes.

What soul in the world to come will feel the thrill of pleasure on this world? Neither success or misfortune on this earth will have anything to do with our condition on this earth.

There are only two ways that we can stand there and be acquitted. A perfect compliance with His laws, and a perfect belief and an attempt to follow Christ. The end may come suddenly, like a flash of lightning, and everyone must be ready to answer for himself. How many an humble son of Jesus Christ on this earth will be in high places up there. We know the consequences that inevitably follow good and bad conduct. You and I were made for that world. If we were made for this world we would remain here. This world is not the place for the expansion of our powers. Our goal is not reached in this world; it is up there. God has set before you and me the good and the evil. If we do not attain the good things of the future it is because of our own choice, for God opens the doors wide to us. Which is the most important, whether we set our thoughts of this earth or on those of up yonder? Will you choose? Neither should give thanks for the beautiful things of this earth, but we should think more of the future. Whether we will be well enough in that world beyond depends on our standing with God. Eternal life, that's what we need. Oh, my hearer, think of the age to come! God sent His beloved Son to give you eternal life. Will you take it?

Rev. C. R. Barnes, D. D., followed with a few words in a similar strain, and closed with an earnest exhortation to his hearers to accept eternal life at once. Rev. Cornelius Schenck also spoke in a similar manner.

The union meeting held in the Crescent Avenue church, last evening, was one of the best that far held. Every seat in the large edifice was taken. The Scripture lesson was read by Dr. Richards, and Rev. C. L. Goodrich offered prayer. As an offertory the quartette sang, "O Lamb of God." Then Rev. J. W. Richardson took charge and announced as his text Matthew 27: 22: "What Shall I Do With Jesus, Which is Called the Christ?"

A portion of his remarks were as follows: Pilate was only a man of the world, and as such he was a failure. Each heart is a court room, and each soul a judge. Tonight Jesus Christ stands before the door of each heart awaiting your judgment. He stands before you as he did before Pilate. What will you do with him? Your conscience appeals to Christ, but you say it will expose you to the world. Policy says better not, but you must decide. You have full knowledge and must pass judgment as to whether he is worthy of your confidence or not. The fact that Pilate washed his hands did not excuse him. Tonight the Son of the Living God is before you, and I hope you will not follow Pilate's example. How can you be unresponsive to His pleading. All you wish to be, He is. Is His crucifixion in this day nothing to you? It's a serious question, and what will you do? It is decidedly wrong to fear the criticism of our friends. You stand where Pilate did. Christ will not depart till you send Him away. It is not what you say so much as how you act.

There are no Jews here tonight to crucify Christ, but are there any here who will crucify him in their hearts? Christ is the only Saviour of mankind. He saves the soul all effects of sin. You may have a beautiful exterior, but your thoughts and desires may not be holy. Nothing sinful can enter the kingdom of God. There must be a change. Be honest with yourselves and decide now. Accept Christ and be saved. For 1900 years Christ's character has been under the microscope of human criticism, but not a blemish or stain can be found. Do you object to being saved? You will have to decide one way or the other. Will you crucify him? How will you treat Him tonight. You do need this Christ. He is adapted to all classes and places. What assurance have you, parents, that your children will meet you in heaven if the Lord Jesus Christ does not reign in your heart? If you reject Christ your children are likely to do the same, and the whole matter may rest on what you do tonight. Christ awaits your decision now. Be reasonable in your treatment of him. 1900 years ago he was uncrowned; now he is the crowned King with all the marks of royalty. What will you do with Jesus, which is called the Christ?

Dr. Richards closed with a brief prayer, after which E. E. Bunyon and Mr. Lewis sang most impressively, "Some Day, Sometime."

After Rev. C. L. Goodrich pronounced the benediction a short aftermeeting was held in the chapel which was productive of much good.

An Odd Will.

The will of Patrick Mullen, the gunmaker of Flatbush, L. I., was admitted to probate last week, one of the executors named in the will being Horace Raymond Munger, of Plainfield. The value of the estate is variously estimated at from $40,000 to $90,000. After a number of bequests, the will directs that the proceeds of the estate be given to the Lord Mayor of Dublin to be used for keeping alive and perpetuating in Ireland the Irish language, both oral and written.

Who Has Old Relics?

Those who are in charge of the arrangements for the loan exhibition to be held at Hope chapel, desire any who may have articles which they deem worthy of exhibiting in the shape of relics of the Revolutionary period, medals, old coins, china, works of art, or manufacture, etc., to communicate with G. H. Fountain, of West Front street.

Probable Work of the Legislature for the Week—Anti-Race Track Crusaders to Push a Prohibitive Amendment.

Senator Voorhees's bill to simplify the form of bills and a numbering of laws will pass the Assembly and open the blockade against legislation, says the Sun. The law is to go into immediate effect, and to proceed with legislation with it pending would make it necessary to reprint and re-engross all bills acted upon, but not approved by the Governor before the approval of the Voorhees bill. It was suggested that the bill be changed to make it operative next year, in order that the work of the present session might not be delayed, but Senator Voorhees thought the reform should be effected now and that course was adopted. Because of the Voorhees bill, a number of measures, including some of importance, have been held back.

This afternoon Gov. Griggs will begin his second weekly seance with the office-holders. These are likely to continue as long as there is an office to be filled. The Governor has said that he does not consider it his duty to hurry the appointments in order to avoid the importunities of office-seekers, and that he will give to every applicant a hearing before filling the office for which he is a candidate. The number of offices which the Governor can fill this year is just forty nine, and the number of applicants runs into the hundreds. The offices range from a Supreme Court Judge to succeed Justice Dixon, with a salary of $9,000, down to manager of State institutions, who served without salary and at some expense to themselves. There are about a dozen offices in that class, leaving less than forty positions of profit. Nothing like the swarm of Republican office-seekers who were here last week has ever been seen here before.

At one time on Tuesday there were nearly a hundred of them waiting in the Executive Chamber for an opportunity to speak to the Governor. Among the applicants are men who have not been heard of in politics in a score of years, and others who have never done work for the party, but all want office in this era of promised reform. The places most sought after are the prison keepership and the chief inspectorship of factories and work shops, for which nearly every county has at least one applicant. For the prison keepership the list includes an ex Congressman, Senators, ex-Senators Assemblymen and ex-Assemblymen, ex Sheriffs, and those of less degree, while the seekers for the factory inspectorship are mainly Assemblymen and ex-Assemblymen.

The report circulated last week that a race-track bill, based on the Grey law in New York, would be introduced during the session had no basis, so far as can be learned, beyond the presence here of two or three Jersey-men interested in racing; but the rumor was sufficient to excite the Rev. Dr. Kempshall, President of the Citizens' League and leader of the anti-race track crusade in recent years. He has induced Senator Voorhees to promise to introduce a resolution this week recommitting the Legislature against race-track legislation, and an effort will be made to have the Legislature adopt the Constitutional amendment that was adopted last year prohibiting such legislation.

The proposed amendment is one of a number, including one reorganizing the higher courts and abolishing the lay Judges therein. The proposed constitution of the Court of Errors and Appeals is not satisfactory to many lawyers who prefer a court made of Judges who hear no other causes but those on appeal. An attempt is being made to agree upon an amendment satisfactory to all, and delay submission to the people, until next year in order that all might be voted upon then; but the race track agitation may induce action this year on the amendments to which there is no opposition, and thereby postpone the reformation of the courts for five years.

Eighth Wedding Anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. George B. Titsworth, of 521 Madison avenue, celebrated their eighth wedding anniversary last Saturday evening with a home dinner, at which were gathered a number of relatives and friends. The decorations of the dining room were pink carnations. Among those present were Rev Dr. William A. Rice and daughter, of Westfield, who was pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian church, of Syracuse, at the time Mr. and Mrs. Titsworth were married, and who it was that tied the nuptial knot. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Page, of Brooklyn. Miss Page, of Baltimore, and several friends from Syracuse were also present.

TRUSTING WOMEN.

THEIR CONFIDENCE OFTEN LEADS TO SUFFERING.

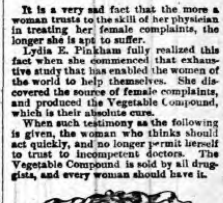
An Ohio Woman's Experience, as Here Related, is Interesting to Every American Woman.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

It is a very sad fact that the more a woman trusts to the skill of her physician in treating her female complaints, the longer she is apt to suffer.

Lydia E. Pinkham fully realized this fact when she commenced that exhaustive study that has enabled the women of the world to help themselves. She discovered the source of female complaints, and produced the Vegetable Compound, which is their absolute cure.

When such testimony as the following is given, the woman who thinks should act quickly, and no longer permit herself to trust to incompetent doctors. The Vegetable Compound is sold by all druggists, and every woman should have it.



"The doctors had told me that unless I went to the hospital and had an operation performed I could not live. I had falling, enlargement, and ulceration of the womb.

"I was in constant misery all the time; my back ached; I was always tired. It was impossible for me to walk far or stand long at a time. I was surely a wreck. I decided that I would give your Compound and Sanative Wash a trial.

"I took three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and used two packages of Sanative Wash, and I am now almost well. I am stouter and healthier than I have ever been in my life. My friends and neighbors and the doctors are surprised at my rapid improvement. I have told them all what I have been taking."—Mrs. Annetta Bickmeier, Bellaire, Belmont Co., O.

WATSONS IN TROUBLE.

A SCRAP IN WHICH THE WHOLE FAMILY BECAME MIXED-UP.

The Trouble Started between Mike and His Wife and Ended Up With Her Father Thumping His Son-in-Law's Face

Blood flowed on West Fourth street Monday and the family quarrel, of which it was the climax, was aired in the city court this morning. Yesterday afternoon about 5:30 Michael Watson made a complaint against his wife, charging her with being drunk and disorderly. Watson keeps a small grocery store and has been convicted several times of selling liquor illegally. He wanted Chief Grant to serve the warrant at once, but that official did not relish arresting a woman with a baby in jail over night and said he would arrest her in the morning. Watson persisted and declared that he would look after the child, so at about 9 o'clock Chief Grant and Sergeant Kiely took a carriage for the scene of action. When they reached Grant avenue they found Watson leaning against a tree with a terrible cut in the side of his head that bled profusely. Just then James McFadden, employed by Street Commissioner Meeker as a street cleaner, came running up shouting "Police!" He acknowledged striking Watson and so Sergeant Kiely arrested them both and took them to the lockup, while the Chief went after their original victim and she was conveyed to the lockup also.

Mrs. Watson is the daughter of Mr. McFadden. The story told in the court room this morning regarding the striking was as follows:

After Watson left Grant, he went home ahead of the officers ostensibly to get the child. Last night he said he went to warn his wife. She was not home and he went to her father's. Here he came in like "a roaring lion" according to McFadden, and as both Watson and his wife had been drinking, a lively scene ensued. McFadden ordered him out and followed up the order by picking up the first thing that came handy, neither of them know exactly what it was, and banged it across hisson-in-law's head. Finally Watson went out and met the officers.

At the lockup it was another scene, as Mrs. Watson refused to be locked up and abused Sergeant Kiely as he has never been abused before. She was at last put in a cell and made the night hideous with her screams and dancing until the officers took her shoes off and forced her to keep still.

Mrs. Watson pleaded not guilty to all the charges, but refused to be sworn. The evidence proved her guilty and the Judge imposed a fine of $15 or thirty days in jail. Her husband paid the fine. Watson appeared with a sorry looking head and blood stained clothing and pleaded guilty to being drunk and disorderly. He was given his choice between a $3 fine or ten days in jail. He paid.

THE JURORS IN LUXURY.

SOMERSET FREEHOLDERS WONDER AT EXPENSE OF JOHNSON JURY.

A Bill of $6 From a Barber for Shaving Freeholders Will Not Pay the Bills Until Itemized Accounts Are Given.

At the meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Somerset county, held on Friday last, with Director John C. Staats in the chair, the rural representatives of the nine different townships of that county were almost paralyzed with fright when the bills for the case of the twelve jurors in the Johnson murder trial and the two constables who had them in charge, were read.

Consternation and surprise followed cold sweats from those of an economical mind when the bill of the proprietor of the Somerset House, John Willett, which is near the court house, was reached. Usually where a jury remains out overnight in Somerset county, a hamper containing crackers and cheese is provided them and the bill of John Willett's for five and one half days board and lodging for the twelve jurymen and the two constables, calling for $254, was more than a paralyzer.

The bill was ordered back to Mr. Willett, asking for an itemized account. How such an account could be contracted in so short a time was beyond their comprehension and the representatives of the county, in most parts of which a shave and a hair cut were almost unknown luxuries, were hardly prepared to hear a bill read for $6 from a Somerville barber.

Had the old ancient court house fallen in on them they could not have been more astonished. The members of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of old Somerset now understand that murder trials are luxuries.

MR. FROST ON THE DEFENSIVE.

He Opposes the Reappointment of Street Commissioner Meeker and Defeated in This He Endeavors to Have the Salary of the Office Reduced—Lively Exchange of Remarks Between the Councilmen—Appointment of the Overseer of the Poor—How to Be Laid Over Because the Mayor's Selection is Not a Citizen of the United States—Council Will Assist Elias H. Bird in His Fight for the Possession of the Collector's Office, and Also Make Him Delinquent Tax Collector—Many Other Important Matters Acted On.

There was something wrong with the wheels that transacted the affairs of the city at Monday night's Council meeting, but just where the trouble was no one was able to perceive. There was that lack of unity that has characterized previous meetings, and the main object of the members seemed to be who was going to be best man. That point was not definitely settled, but the fact remains that the end is not yet. As was to be expected, the lobby was well filled with people who eagerly watched the proceedings and nothing escaped their eye. All the members were present except Mr. Fisk. After the minutes of the previous meeting were adopted, Mr. Dumont moved that the rules of order, as presented at the last meeting, be adopted as the by-laws of the Council. The motion prevailed.

A communication was then read from the Street Railway Company, which stated that they had accepted the city's terms in regard to building the trolley extensions. It was received and filed, as was also the bond of City Treasurer Alex. Titsworth.

Jacob Kliner applied for a license to run stages to Scotch Plains and, on the recommendation of Mr. Moore, of the license committee, the same was granted.

E. B. Clark and other residents of West Front street and vicinity, petitioned Council for sidewalks on West End avenue. The matter was referred to the street committee.

Sarah Dickenson, of West Front street, asked that a fair apportionment be made on her property for taxes. This matter was referred to the Assessor, he in turn to report to the Council.

The following persons then presented applications for liquor licenses: John Rafferty, James Day, Jacob Blimm, Charles Smith, J. L. Wellborn, Henry Haurand, Frank Linke, Wallace V. Miller, Alexander Findlay, Fred Caspar, John Beerbower and J. Sullivan. They were referred to the license committee and, according to law, will be advertised.

E. H. Bird communicated with Council, stating his case in regard to his being elected Collector of the city.

He said that at the proper time he went to the collector's office and asked for the books, etc., and that Mr. Johnson refused to surrender the office. Since then he had consulted Attorney-General Stockton and had been advised that he was entitled to the office, which opinion was substantially the same as given by Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh. He also stated that he holds himself in readiness to receive all taxes. The matter was referred to the Finance Committee, and later Mr. Dumont offered a resolution whereas Mr. Bird having been elected collector, filed his bonds, and that Mr. Johnson refused to give up the office, the Council deem it necessary to aid Mr. Bird, and that the Council authorize the Finance Committee to assist in all legal expense in the settlement of the case. The resolution was adopted, all voting for it. Mr. Dumont stated that it was understood by the council that they were to help Mr. Bird secure possession of the office and he thought they should.

The names of the following persons as special policemen were then read as appointed by Mayor Gilbert: S. R. Hope, Thomas Clarkson, C. Harris, G. R. Rockafellow, Jacob Kriney, William Dagnall, Charles Laine, Cadwalader Jones, Morris Higgins, D. F. Stewart, Dennis Carney, Robert McConnack, G. M. Lunger, Peter Peterson, Christopher Hansen, E. H. Bird, Edward Martin, William Hillman, Henry Pugh, Nathan Pollard, Remsey Yetman, Charles Post, Edwin Dobbs, Henry Fraleigh, Joseph Swick, Edward Maynard, Richard E. Davis, H. Wierenga, W. S. Brown, W. A. Pinto and Jeremiah Cash. They were all confirmed by the council, as were also the appointments of Henry Brick and Frederick Wenzle as pound-keepers, and L. W. Serrell, H. B Newhall and G. W. Endicott, as members of the Board of Health. The following appointments by the Mayor were also confirmed: Corporation Counsel, Craig A. Marsh; Street Commissioner, R. L. Meeker; Chief of the Fire Department, T. O. Doane; First Assistant, James A. Martin; Second Assistant, John W. Murray. City Physician, Dr. Simpson. G. A. Marx was confirmed as Overseer of the Poor, but later it was stated by Mr. Gunna that he understood Mr. Marx had not yet secured his naturalization papers, and in accordance with that fact his appointment was laid over till the next meeting.

At this point the wheels became clogged and surprises came thick and fast.

Mr. Frost arose and said that in view of the fact that a large assessment was soon to be made on the tax payers in connection with the introduction of sewers, he was opposed to the continuance of the office of Street Commissioner. The demands at present was for a man who could fill that position and at the same time be an expert in sewer matters, so as to be able to look after both. Such a man in his opinion was A. J. Gavett. He opposed the office on the above grounds.

Mr. Barrows was impressed with Mr. Frost's remarks and stated that Plainfield had grown considerably on account of its good streets, but the sewer work had retarded in a great measure the improvement. He thought anyone could use a level but the work of Mr. Meeker was a steady one and he being a very active man thought he was a valuable one for the position. He thought it a poor time in the absence of Mr. Fisk to take advantage of that member's right hand. Mr. Frost replied, "We don't want superintendent, but we do need good foremen and inspectors."

Mr. Dumont became interested and said, "we cannot move in this matter very well at present. In the future there will probably be a need for a board of public works. I agree with Mr. Frost that the two offices should be consolidated. I was chairman of the street committee four years and during that time knew the condition of the streets, and so does Mr. Fisk at present. There is yet a good deal to be done and Mr. Fisk should be allowed to carry out his plans. I think its a very inopportune time to act in the matter. In another year we may be ready for the change." Mr. Frost by this time was thoroughly aroused and said he had no idea of interfering, but he thought the city could get better work for less money. "I am addressing some of the best business men in the country," said Mr. Frost. "I have talked this matter over with Mr. Fisk in his own home. I think my judgment is as good as Mr. Fisk's or Mr. Meeker's. I am in favor of putting that $15,000 for streets in another fund. Mr. Meeker's salary would supply two or three men. It's a matter of common sense. While I am in the council I am going to do just the same as if I was transacting my own private business. I am not reflecting on Mr. Meeker, but on the office, and it is a question of how Plainfield can get the best for the least. It costs too much to macadamize streets and you cannot do much with $15,000. There are people who have done as much for the city as Mr. Fisk. He is not the only one in love with the city nor the only one that spends money out of his own pocket."

Mr. Barrows replied by saying that "we all have our own ideas. A man like Mr. Meeker knows the streets. Mr. Frost thinks Mr. Gavett is the proper man; we should have some right to judge Mr. Meeker's abilities also." At this time the question was called for and all voted for the confirmation of Mr. Meeker, except Mr. Frost and Westphal.

Inspector T. O. Doane reported that seven permits to erect buildings had been granted. The report was referred to the fire and building committee.

Mr. Dumont offered a resolution that the Board of Health be requested to file all ordinances passed by them with the city clerk. It was so ordered. Mr. Gunna moved that the Corporation Counsel's salary be the same as last year, $1,600. The motion prevailed. Mr. Dumont offered a motion that the present salaries for the city officers be adopted. Mr. Frost objected to Mr. Meeker's salary, and he then asked what the duties of the city treasurer were. "What does he do for the money he receives?" was the question he propounded. Mr. Dumont replied by saying that in the first place the treasurer gives a bond for $25,000, and that the present work would not take but five days a month. Mr. Dumont then went on and explained the duties of the treasurer.

The salaries of the first assistant and chief of the fire department were objected to by Councilmen Stebbins and Westphal. The matter of salaries was brought up later and discussed at length. Mr. Dumont brought up the matter of a delinquent tax collector, and said that E. H. Bird offered to take the position and do the work. Mr. Dumont then offered a resolution that he, as special policeman, be appointed delinquent tax collector, and that he file a bond of $1,000, and that he receive 5 per cent for his work. It was so ordered as was also another resolution by Mr. Dumont that $2,000 be borrowed for sewer work.

An effort was made to reduce Chief Doane's salary from $700 to $400, but after a long debate it was decided not to make the cut.

The Board of Health reported nine deaths from contagious diseases between October 1st, 1894, and October 1st, 1895. There were also 132 marriages and 313 births, of which 174 were males and 139 females. The sum of $899.84 of the $1,000 appropriation had been expended, and the board asked for $1,000 for this year. The above reports were received and filed, as were also those of the city treasurer, collector and city physician.

The overseer of the poor reported that $510.97 had been expended in that department during the year for rents, board, care and sundries.

Mr. Barrows, chairman of police committee, presented a general report of that department, and gave the following description of the policemen, except Captain Grant: Average age, 37½ years; height, 5:10½ feet; weight, 172 pounds; length of service, four to six years. He stated that the rookery was a disgrace to the city and would not be tolerated in a frontier town. The general condition as to intelligence of force and morals was reported excellent. He recommended that three extra regulars be appointed and that a suitable building be secured for a station house. He then offered a resolution that the Mayor appoint sixteen regular policemen, to include a captain at a salary of $1,000; a sergeant at $800; two roundsmen at $750, the last three to be mounted on bicycles purchased by them.

The following regular police were appointed by Mayor Gilbert and confirmed: George W. Grant, Thomas McCue, P. Flanagan, P. Kiely, J. Cooney, Chris. Frederickson, W. J. Mattox, J. S. Saunders, John Flynn, Matthew Vanderweg, Nicholas Myers, J. R. Hartpence and J. E. Reston.

Mr. Dumont said he hoped the council would not forget the financial situation when preparing to increase expenses by appointing more police. There was no way to increase the revenue unless back taxes were collected which now amount to $70,000. He said that he didn't know where all the money was coming from. Mr. Barrows said the police should be appointed now. Plainfield is behind the times on this point and the Council should not wait till some crime was committed. Mr. Frost said he agreed with Mr. Dumont, and thought that the outlying districts should be brought into the market and thus secure more money. The city is now in charge of one party and they should be careful as to what is done.

Mr. Barrows replied that this was no tin soldier business, but a practical, actual necessary. He offered a motion that three policemen be appointed. Mr. Dumont at this point was willing to allow two extra men and offered a resolution amending the original motion making the number two instead of three. Mr. Westphal urged that three be appointed. The amendment was lost and the original motion prevailed.

Mr. Barrows then presented the condition of the station house, which he said was inadequate for the needs of the city. He offered a resolution that the police board secure a site of ground, and that rough plans be obtained for a suitable building that would combine all city offices, the same to be submitted to the council. The resolution prevailed, all voting for it.

In a communication A. J. Gavett asked the council to secure extension of the water mains in order that the sewers could be flushed. The matter was referred to the sewer committee.

Mr. Stebbins offered a resolution that T. O. Doane be appointed building inspector. It was so ordered.

On motion of Mr. Dumont the ordinance relating to the cider joints was adopted. Mr. Dumont then made a motion that all salaries of city officers be the same as last year. Mr. Frost objected to the salary of street commissioner and thought it was too much. On the question all voted it be the same except Councilmen Frost and Westphal.

Ex-City Judge W. A. Coddington's report for the three years past was as follows:

Permit me to submit this, my general report, summarizing the official business transacted in the City Court during the term of office of the present Judge, from January 1, 1893 to January 6, 1896, during which I had the honor of presiding:

During that term as City Judge I heard and determined one thousand five hundred and five cases. In no case in which the City was a party was any judgment rendered by me reversed or set aside by any higher court. The Corporation Counsel appeared for the City on the trial of fifteen cases during my term. The City Court cases brought before me were disposed of as follows:

Sentenced to County Jail	262
Fines imposed	1,000
Sentence suspended	419
Released or discharged	121
Held under bonds to keep the peace	12
Held for Grand Jury	3
Sent to prison	1
Released on defendants recognizance	39
Total	1,505

as will appear from the records.

The fines collected during my term of office amounted to $3,470 26

Of this was paid for incidental expenses and to complainants for one-half penalty, etc 1,533 50

And the balance paid to the City Treasurer 1,936 76

Total $3,470 26

It gives me pleasure to testify to the fact that the police force of our city is one of which we have well reason to be proud. For the past three years I have necessarily been brought in almost daily contact with the force, and I have found both the officers and subordinates alert and watchful in the City's interest, zealous in conscientiously perform their full duty, intelligent and discriminating in their judgment, and always courteous and polite in their deportment.

In retiring from the office which I have held for the past three years, permit me to say that I have endeavored to discharge its duties honestly and impartially, as required by the oath which I subscribed when I entered upon it, and I feel that whatever criticism may properly attach to my actions, at least I never forgot that mercy is the highest attribute of justice.

Dated January 7, 1896.

The Council then adjourned to Monday evening, Feb. 24th.

Hip Disease
Results from a scrofulous and impure condition of the blood, and it is cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla the great blood purifier. The father of a Philadelphia girl, writes this:

"We gave Hood's Sarsaparilla to our little girl, who had symptoms of hip disease. She could not put her foot down on the floor when we commenced giving her the medicine, but in a short time she was able to get off the couch and to reach her playthings. Since then she has steadily improved, thanks to Hood's Sarsaparilla, and her general health is all that could be desired. When any of the other children are not well we give them

"Let me see it," said Mrs. Kajones. "Why, that's Uncle Thornton exactly. He couldn't write any other way. He stutters."—Chicago Tribune.

—Perhaps the most striking evidence of thrift since that referred to by Hamlet is furnished by a Maine town, where apple trees are planted in the graveyard and the proceeds from the sale of the fruit are to be devoted to the repairing of the fences and the cutting of weeds.

—As far as recorded, the loss of life by shipwreck in 1895 was 4,250; by railway accidents, 3,622, and by other casualities over 24,000. Add to these dismal figures the 5,759 reported murders in the United States alone, and we have a total of 37,641 violent deaths, or an average of over 100 for every day in the year.

—The fox's reputation for smartness was well sustained by a member of the tribe near Falmouth, Me., the other day. A couple of hounds and a hunter were after it, and the fox led the hounds to a frozen pond, and out on ice so thin that it just supported the fox, which escaped, while the hounds went through and were drowned.

—Passmore Edwards, editor of the London Echo, a paper which the Spectator describes as "the most honest and most fadsly in the world," gives away thousands of pounds every month to philanthropic undertakings of various kinds. These he is said to select with great judgment, but he always takes care to exploit his good deeds at great length in his own paper, and persistently asks other journalists to do the same in their own publications.

—A $150 reward over a $1.25 pig has just been paid in Michigantown, Ind., and the town treasury is out the former amount. A month ago the city marshal impounded a pig belonging to a farmer named Hillis. The farmer refused to pay the $1.50 pound charge and replevined the pig. The town sued him, and after three trials the circuit court gave a verdict for Hillis, with $1.01 damages. More than half the people in town were summoned as witnesses, and the total amount of money lost over the pig runs to a pretty high figure.

—Edison believes that he can solve the problem of air ships either by using balloons or aeroplanes; but, to use his own words, he would not construct air ships of the air—yachts, schooners and brigantines—which would theck and fibe, and sail before the wind. My idea is that the lifting power for these air ships should be gas stored in the sails. In other words, I would use the balloon principle in such a way that the gas bag, instead of being an impediment, as it at present, would be the actual means of propulsion. I would construct gas bags shaped like the sails of a yacht."

RED TABBY CATS IN LONDON.

Entertainingly Described by a Milwaukee Lady Who Saw Them.

A Milwaukee lady who has recently returned from abroad says that one of the most interesting exhibits which she saw in Europe was the National Cat Show at Crystal Palace, London, in which about 700 cats were shown, says the Milwaukee Sentinel. "The decided feature of the exhibition," she said, "was the number of superb red cats. Together with a fine assortment of pure blacks, smoke-colored cats and cats with that peculiar tone of glossy coat known as cat blue. The efforts of the English cat breeders this last year have been blue and black cats, and the addition of many experts a black cat without any markings whatever of white is the most perfect variety that is known, and it is proof of the appreciation of this that certain dishonest people pinch the white hairs out of a cat one by one. It has been noticed that the classes that are open to workingmen in this national exhibition are particularly strong in fine black cats. Blue-eyed, white-coated cats are getting to be highly valued in England now, and one of these bore off the other day a substantial money prize that was offered by Louis Wain, the great cat artist. Another prize-winner of the show was a brown tabby one, Champion Xenophon, which its owner values at $5,000."

Sure Proof.

It is said that Hon. Samuel Galloway, of Columbus, O., was one of the plainest men ever known in the state. He told many stories relative to his own personal ugliness of face with great good humor. One which he often related with much relish was that of the remark made by the little daughter of a friend in another city with whom he was dining. "Mamma," he heard the child say, in an awe-struck whisper, after a prolonged survey of the peculiar features of the guest, "that gentleman's mamma must have loved children mighty well." "Why so, my dear?" inquired the unsuspecting parent. "Oh," returned the child, in the same audible whisper, "'cause she raised him!"—Youth's Companion.

Common Case.

The Scotchman's disposition to regard his own judgment as the best that can be found is well illustrated in a story once told of the moderator of a Scotch presbytery. This man's opinion differed widely on a certain question relating to church discipline from that of his associates with whom he was ostensibly consulting. At last he said that he would lay the matter before the Lord in prayer and then wait for His guidance. "O Lord," said the moderator, fervently and with perfect sincerity of purpose, "O Lord, grant that we may be right in this matter, for Thou knowest we are very decided."—Youth's Companion.

BIG MEN OF FINANCE.

L. V. F. RANDOLPH AT THE HEAD OF A TRUST COMPANY.

Leander N. Lovell is a Director—High Compliment Paid to the Executive Ability and Services of Mr. Randolph.

A Philadelphia magazine publishes the following in relation to the Atlantic Trust Company, in which two Plainfield gentlemen, Messrs. L.V.F. Randolph and Leander N. Lovell, hold places of important trust:

This organization, founded in 1887 and located in Williamsburg, New York, has enjoyed a career of success thus very largely to the character of the leading spirits of the men to whose management its affairs are entrusted. The standing of the organization and the confidence of its depositors are shown in a recent event of its history. A short time ago it was decided to double the capital of the concern, making it $1,000,000 instead of $500,000, at which it commenced business. The additional issue of stock (par $100) was immediately subscribed for at $150, thus yielding $25,000 to the company. It was all taken by those already holding stock in the company. The business of the Atlantic Trust Co. embraces a full line of banking, and the conditions of such institutions, and it is especially successful in the handling of funds from individuals and business concerns exceed $5,000,000. Its investments are made with rare discrimination, and these elements in its management constitute the principles underlying the success of the Surety Fund of exceeds $500,000, and it has a considerable undivided surplus. The last quarterly dividend of the company was declared payable January 1, 1896, and was for 2 per cent.

The official staff of the company is as follows: L. V. F. Randolph, president; John L. Riker, first vice-president; William Carlisle, second vice-president; Jacob Bilhuber, secretary, and James D. Fowler, assistant secretary.

Lewis V. F. Randolph was elected president of the company in January last, following the retirement of William B. Make; and the company was fortunate in securing as its new chief executive a man well qualified by training and experience to fill the position. Mr. Randolph has spent his business career in close touch with corporations and large estates, and his reputation for ability, energy, quick judgment and integrity necessary to the successful management of great business enterprises. He was formerly treasurer of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, having been elected to that office from the rough promotions from one important post to another in the service of that company.

More recently he was identified with the settlement of the estate of the late Samuel J. Tilden, in which service his executorship was highly commended by Hon. John Bigelow in his new history of "Governor Tilden and His Times." He was also appointed by Mr. Tilden Trust, the Library Corporation, which is now to be known as the New York Public Library. Mr. Randolph is popular outside the restricted limits of business affairs. He was a Union soldier in the war of the Rebellion, and was for one term mayor of Plainfield. He has been for many years active in railway and financial affairs.

The board of Trustees of the Atlantic Trust Co. is a strong one, representing, at the same time capital at different periods, and are as follows: Lewis V. F. Randolph, William B. Isham, W. H. H. Moore, W. E. T. Jones, J. Hood Wright, Andrew H. Green and Frederick Strauss; Cornelius N. Bliss, Jr., Edward D. Adams, Anton A. Raven, John F. Halsted, Clifford A. Hand, Jacob Bilhuber, Leander N. Lovell and J. Landon Ward, Class of 1887; William H. Male, Samuel Sloan, Alfred Wagstaff, Matthias Nicoll, L. V. F. Randolph and William Carpenter.

FOUND A TARANTULLA.

A Plainfield Housewife Gets One in a Bunch of Bananas.

One of the most dreaded animals of the tropical climates is the tarantulla, but he is a very rare visitor in this region. A small specimen visited Mrs. H. M. Sherwin on Wednesday afternoon. She purchased a bunch of bananas from a street fruit vender and laid the bunch on the table. Just as she was preparing to cut them up, what was supposed to be a gigantic spider crawled out on the table. She killed it and showed it to her husband on his return. He, in turn, showed it to one of the Italian fruit dealers who declared it a small specimen of the deadly tarantulla.

An Old Veteran Sick.

Quincy Brokaw, of Smalleytown, a well-known old war veteran and a famous huntsman and fisherman, is lying at his home dangerously ill. Mr. Brokaw is over seventy years of age and has always heretofore enjoyed the best of health. He and his wife have lived on the little farm, where they now reside, for nearly twenty years, previous to which time they resided at Greenbrook. They have four children, three girls and one boy, all married. Dr. P. J. Zeglio is attending Mr. Brokaw who is well known in this city.

There is a man named Hammell residing in Warren county, N. J., who registered a solemn vow thirty years ago that he never would enter his home again until a Republican Governor was elected in New Jersey. He has lived all these years in a hut, doubtless a very wretched man, and now the election of Griggs has permitted him to return to his home and family, where he has been received with great joy. The remarkable thing about the case of Mr. Hammell is the fact that the Foot-Killer has overlooked him for thirty years.—Rochester Union-Advertiser.

Gives Us Time.

Plainfield used to claim that beneath the city flowed an immense river of pure water. If this were not a fairy tale, why is it that Netherwood, Fanwood, Scotch Plains and a dozen other villages in that neighborhood are compelled to hawk water about by the pail? There has been a heavy rainfall recently, but it hasn't improved matters much evidently, for latest reports say Plainfield's wells are getting dusty again. Why doesn't Plainfield tap that great river of pure water that the property-holders used to tell about?—New York Press.

Dr. Dorland Dead.

Dr. W. W. Dorland, formerly of this city and a partner of Dr. Thiers, the Grove street dentist, died in Bound Brook, Tuesday, from consumption. His funerall will be held tomorrow. He was well known in this city.

TRUMPET PRESENTATION.

FIREMEN'S FAIR COMMITTEE MAKE A PRESENT TO THE EXEMPTS.

The Old Fire bell Also Given to Them—Alex. Titsworth Accepts the Gifts in a Neat Speech—Other Speakers.

It certainly did the hearts of the Exempt Firemen a great deal of good last Friday when a delegation from the Fire Department entered their room, while they were in session, for the purpose of presenting the very handsome silver trumpet to them. The trumpet was recently presented to the firemen by Mayor Gilbert to be contested for at the fair, but owing to the fact that a sufficient amount of money was not turned in it was held by the firemen and later they decided to present if to the Exempt Firemen.

L. M. Dunavan, for the committee, made a very appropriate speech and then handed the valuable trumpet over to President Augustus Saltzman. The latter called on Orator Alex. Titsworth, who in his usual happy manner, received it for the Association. Other excellent remarks followed by D. W. Littell and W. A. Woodruff, members of the board of trustees, Charles Burnett, Jacob Bilhuber, Sr., J. K. Arnold, L. E. Barkalow and L. J. Spiess.

President Saltzman then, on behalf of Mayor Gilbert, presented the firemen with a very pretty bronze statue representing a fireman. It will be kept at Fire Headquarters.

Another surprise was in store when Messrs. De Camp and Force retired from the room and returned with the old fire bell which was the first ever used in Plainfield. It was the property of E. P. Thorn, but had been presented to the association. The bell has an interesting history from the fact that it was on duty for a long time at the old railroad station, which many of the older residents will remember. Later it was placed on the engine house which stood where Eugene Laine's barber shop is now located. When that place was torn down, E. P. Thorn captured it and has held it ever since, until given to the Association. The latter will make arrangements to have the bell suspended in the room.

The last surprise, but not the least, was the presentation by John Chandler, through Mr. Demarest, of his trumpet to the Association. Again Orator Titsworth was called upon and he was equal to the occasion in receiving it for the Association. It was presented to Mr. Chandler by the members of Zephyr Hook and Ladder Company, No. 1, when he was foreman of the company, July 30th, 1872.

During the speech making and festivities good cigars were passed and the evening was spent in a most enjoyable manner.

President Saltzman's description of the Ireland and Germany fire departments was postponed till next meeting.

New York's Poultry Show.

At 9 o'clock on Tuesday morning, February 4th, and continuing, from that hour in the morning until 10:30 o'clock at night each day until Saturday, February 8th, the New York Poultry and Pigeon Association's Seventh Annual Exhibition will be an attraction at the Madison Square Garden for New York people and everybody else. What the Poultry Show is to the breeders of poultry and to the public in general, is proven by the large attendance each year and as the premiums amount to over $6,000, and the entries in all the classes are very full, this year's exhibition will undoubtedly be the best which the Association has yet given.

Pleasant and Profitable.

An informal tea and cake sale was held at the residence of Charles H. Smith, of 35 Grove street, Thursday afternoon by the members of the Young Ladies' Missionary Society of First Baptist church. In one of the parlors, chocolate was poured into dainty cups by Miss Ida Yerkes and passed to the guests. The cakes were on sale in the other parlor and here Mrs. Charles H. Smith and other members of the band were in charge. Mrs. DeWitt Brokaw, president of the society, assisted by other members, received the guests. A very pleasant afternoon was spent and quite a number dropped in during the afternoon.

Leger, ex-superintendent of the United States Nurseries at Short Hills, will start for South Africa on February 8th, where he will establish sugar cane and coffee plantations in the provinces of Savilla, Honda and Baranancquilla, and interest himself in gold mining. Mr. Leger, while in Africa, in 1890, sent to this Government some of the most valuable tropical plants now in its possession.

HAPPY NUPTIAL EVENTS

TWO COUPLES ENTER INTO WEDLOCK AT ST. MARY'S CHURCH.

Both Weddings Held Yesterday Afternoon and Largely Attended by Friends and Relatives—Names of Bridal Parties.

It was a brilliant assemblage of people that gathered at St Mary's R C. church Thursday afternoon at 4:30 to witness the marriage of Miss Catherine Agnes Mullen to George Lawrence Hughes. The wedding was one of the prettiest ever witnessed in the church, which was crowded with relatives and friends of the bride and groom.

Previous to the ceremony Miss St. Leger, the organist, gave a rendition of classical music in her usual excellent manner, and when the appointed hour arrived the church presented a picture of beauty, with the altar candles burning brightly.

The ushers, William Addis, John Powers, Frank Blatz and James McCann, entered first, followed by the bridemaid, Miss Ella Mullen, sister of the bride. She wore a charming gown of brown cloth, trimmed with Dresden velvet, and a becoming hat to match. She carried a bouquet of pink roses. Then came the bride leaning on the arm of James Bailey. She was gowned exquisitely in old blue cloth, trimmed with Dresden lace, also with hat to match. She carried a beautiful ivory-bound prayer book.

The groom and best man, Fred Hughes, entered from the front of the church and met the bridal party at the altar. The perfect rendition of Mendelssohn's wedding march as the party were entering gave a decided finish to the ceremony, which was performed by Rev. Father Smyth.

On returning from the church the wedding march from Lohengrin was finely executed.

A reception was held at 7 o'clock at the home of the bride on West Fifth street, where a number of relatives and friends were present to extend hearty congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Hughes. An excellent wedding supper was served during the evening.

The bride and groom left early for a short wedding tour. They will return Saturday and immediately go to housekeeping in the house recently built and furnished throughout by Mr. Hughes, on East Second street, near Richmond street. Mr. and Mrs. Hughes received a very large number of handsome and useful presents from their many friends.

The groom's gift to the ushers were diamond and pearl crescent stick pins.

The marriage of Miss Katy Gavaghn, of New York, to Patrick Raigan, of this city, took place Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock, in St Mary's church, Rev. Father Smyth officiating. Miss Sarah Gavaghn, of New York, sister of the bride, acted as bridemaid, and Martin Raigan, brother of the groom, was best man.

The reception was held in the evening at the groom's home, 680 West Third street, which was attended by a large number of relatives and friends. Early in the evening the guests began to dance, and it was nearly five o'clock this morning when they left for their homes.

Mr. and Mrs. Raigan were handsomely remembered by their friends, receiving a number of presents.

Mr Raigan is coachman for Samuel St. John McCutcheon, of the borough, and is a well-known and popular man. Music for dancing was furnished by O Reilly.

After Justices of the Peace.

The justices of the peace in Middlesex county are in trouble. Recently twenty constables met at the courthouse in New Brunswick and adopted a concerted plan of action to stop the system of depriving them of their fees. The constables say that they have great difficulty in obtaining their fees from the justices of the peace for serving complaints. It is also asserted by the constables that when they go to collect their fees for serving processes in civil cases, they find that the justices of the peace have pocketed the money. Justice Charles P. Ford is believed to be in danger of being arrested because he is entertaining a criminal complaint against Lenhart Doody, who, it is understood, will proceed against the Justice if papers are served upon him.

Plainfield Man at the Head.

At the head of the list of incorporators of the Grimpton Drug and Chemical Company, which was incorporated at Trenton last week, is the name of Willard M. Miner, of East Sixth street. Mr. Miner is one of the directors of the new company which prepares tablets and other druggists' supplies for the trade. Their specialty is pepsin, which is prepared by a new improved method. The factory of the company is at Jersey City.

AGED MISSIONARY DEAD.

MRS. SARAH F. JOHNSON EXPIRES AT HER HOME THIS MORNING.

Was Ninety-One Years of Age and Besides Working in India Missions Had Given $18,000 to the Cause She Loved.

After an illness lasting since New Year's day, Mrs. Sarah F. Johnson, of 324 East Second st, died Friday morning in her ninety first year. Previous to her illness she was very sprightly for one of her age and succeeded in getting around with but slight difficulty. She was very well known in this city by the older inhabitants and had many friends. She was born at Bridgetown, near Rahway, and after reaching her majority became a missionary, going to India. She remained there till her health compelled her to return home. She was married in her fiftieth year to Rev. Orrin Johnson, also a missionary, residing in the West. He died twenty-eight years ago. Mrs. Johnson has lived in Plainfield about forty years. She was a faithful member of the First Presbyterian church and a devoted Christian. For twenty-four years she has lived in the house where she died. One sister, Mrs. Thorn, who is in her ninety-fifth year, survive her and three brothers, Isaac Brown, Thomas Brown and J. P Brown. The first two reside in this city, while Thomas lives in Rochester and John resides at Beaver Dam, Wis The brothers are all over eighty years of age.

Mrs. Johnson has contributed $18,000 during her life for missionary purposes and Bible societies. She is now reputed to be worth a considerable amount of money. The funeral service will probably be held Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the house.

BACK TO THE FATTED CALF.

Dime Novel Runaway Boys Think Home is a Good Place Now.

In boy life, the excitement of running away and becoming a Wild Westerner, soon fades away after a short experience. Not long ago The Daily Press recorded the fact that John Devine and Alba Smith, two victims of the lurid dime novel, had left for parts unknown. Since that time John Devine has returned home, very much happier and wiser. He is thoroughly well pleased with his home and says he had enough of tramping.

Friday Alba Smith returned. He was found by the Chief of Police in Baltimore a few days ago, and upon inquiring learned that the boy belonged in Plainfield. He telegraphed his mother who immediately sent money back to bring the boy home. Alba was delighted to get home, and his experience has taught him a great lesson.

Good Things Coming.

Thursday evening, February 13th, is the date settled upon for the supper to be given by the Ladies Christian Work Society, of Trinity Reformed church, in the lecture room of the church. Their reputation for serving a first class meal is so well known that a large gathering of friends of the church is looked forward to. Instrumental music will also be a feature of the evening. The price of tickets, including supper, has been fixed at thirty-five cents.

The anti garb bill of Senator Rogers is a piece of freak legislation. It does not merit serious consideration.

AN IDEAL SUMMER HOME.

BEAUTIFUL SCENERY SURROUNDING FRENCH & VAIL'S NEW HOTEL.

Work is Being Rapidly Pushed on the Hotel and it Will be Opened This Summer—A Trolley Road to be Built To it.

Situated on a summit of the Watchung mountains near Johnston's drive, a beautiful undulating section spreading out to the East, with Plainfield in the foreground, rugged mountainous territory piling up in the rear and wooded land hemming it in all around, save where avenues of ingress or egress have been cut out, are the picturesque surroundings which will characterize the summer hotel that Messrs. John H. French and J. T. Vail are now having built. It will be an ideal place, when finished, to while away the spare moments devoted to rest and recreation during the humidity of summer. In company with Mr. French a representative of The Daily Press visited the grounds and partly finished hotel, yesterday, and was struck with the favorableness of the locality for such an enterprise. The building which is being erected is a large roomy structure and is now up to the third story, while the carpenters are pushing their work to completion as rapidly as possible. The building will be about 100x38 feet, with an L extending back, underneath which has been excavated an immense cellar. The bedrooms in the hotel house will all be large, compared with the ordinary summer hotel. The plans are such that the dining room, parlor and large reception hall can be thrown into one room and used for dancing.

Broad piazzas, supported by rustic stone ar hes, will surround the house. Every modern improvement will be put in the house. The water will be procured from flowing springs and forced into the house by an electric pump already in position and use. The power is supplied by the trolley railroad. In every detail the place will be up-to-date. While the grounds will be left as naturally rustic as possible, yet the owners will go to a heavy expense in clearing away underbrush and leveling off certain portions for swings, games and various pastimes usually indulged in by the summer boarder.

The hotel will only be eight minutes walk or ride from the trolley road and is accessible through a macadamized horseshoe loop.

One of the most important things in connection with the erection of the hotel is the statement by Mr. French that an electric railway will eventually be built to the hotel. It is probable that it will be reached by a line through the Notch and then a loop back into the grounds from Washingtonville, as the grade is not as heavy that way as it is from front.

The 125 acres which constitute Messrs. French & Vail's plot, and surrounding the hotel property, will be improved and cut up into building lots. Already several of them have been sold.

Messrs. French & Vail deserve great praise for their enterprise in improving this mountain property, and will doubtless meet with great success.

Will Come Here Eventually.

The Second New Jersey Brigade, consisting of the Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth and Eleventh regiments, met at Trenton yesterday. Vice-President W. W. Coriell of this city, was present and gave the association an invitation to meet in Plainfield, April 9th. They decided, however, to meet at Paterson, the home of Gov. Griggs, and he has promised to be present at that time. There will also be present several distinguished Generals. The brigade will probably meet in Plainfield next year.

Tried to Find Her Husband.

A woman came to Plainfield from Trenton last week, saying that she was in search of her husband. His name, she said, was Miller and that he worked at Rheaum's mill. She investigated but found it was not the same man. Her funds were low and she told some of her listeners that she had not the money to buy her ticket home. She left town in some manner, however.

Grip Drove a Doctor Crazy.

It is feared that Dr. Westfall, a popular physician of Rahway, has become insane from the effects of a severe attack of the grip. He now lies in a critical condition at his home on Grand street.

Not possessing a citizen progressive or enterprising enough to build a creditable business block, New Brunswick is now appealing to Uncle Sam to erect a $150,000 building in that dirty, slow and wicked old town.

A MURDEROUS ASSAULT.

BOUND BROOK MAN BROUGHT TO THE HOSPITAL SERIOUSLY HURT.

Attacked By Three Negroes in Bound Brook on Christmas Morning and Was Unconscious for Over Three Days.

Bound Brook was greatly aroused last Christmas day by the murderous assault of a white man by three negroes, Friday the victim was brought to Plainfield in an unconscious condition for treatment. His name is John Vandeveer. Last Christmas Eve. he attended a ball and returned early in the morning. He went home and changed his clothes, and shortly after five o'clock started for the stable where he works as driver for the paint factory. On his way there he was waylaid by three negroes who struck him at the base of the skull with a club and cut his face with a razor. It is supposed their object was robbery. His body was found by some workmen and taken home. He was unconscious for three days and then recovered his senses and told the names of his assailants. He did not recover but grew gradually worse and it was at last decided to take him to Muhlenberg hospital for treatment. He was brought down this morning on a train as far as Grant Avenue, from where the ambulance took him to the hospital.

HEAVY SUBJECTS TALKED ABOUT.

High School Students Indulge in Weighty Discussion.

The regular meeting of the Kappa Delta Phi Society, of the Plainfield High School, was called together by the president, J. Hazelwood Craig, on Thursday afternoon in the High School building.

The subject of the programme was a "Hat Talk," the subjects and speakers being as follows: F. Wilbur Cornwell, "What Effect Will the Prussian Turkish Alliance Have on the Political Affairs of Other Countries?" J. Hazlewood Craig spoke on the subject, "Will Japan Become Aggressive?" Henry Eggerding gave his opinion of "What Ought to Be Done in Armenia." The Work of the Kappa Delta Phi" was the subject chosen by Paul W. Kimball. Charles Noble spoke upon the subject, "Can England Afford to Fight Editor the United States or Germany?"

The programme committee reported that next Friday the programme for the meeting would be a "Hash Debate," the subject to be announced at the time of the debate.

The following officers were then elected for the coming two months, except the president, who only holds office for one month: President, Henry Eggerding; vice president, Paul W. Kimball; secretary and treasurer, Charles Noble; critic, J. Hazlewood Craig; sergeant-at-arms, Sydney R. Tilsworth.

Judge Rice in Beckman's Place.

The news of the appointment of Judge J. Kearney Rice, of the Middlesex Court of Common Pleas, to succeed John W. Beckman, resigned, as United States District-Attorney, has caused surprise in New Brunswick. Mr. Beckman was appointed in 1894, after the name of Capt. James Parker, of Perth Amboy, had been withdrawn by the President. Judge Rice is a personal friend of Miles Ross.

Sebring to Remove.

W. H. Sebring, the popular Park avenue clothier, is the latest of the Plainfield merchants to announce a change in his place of business. On April 1st, he will remove to 202 West Front street, just across Compton's alley from Gile's bakery. His new quarters will be larger than his present one and will be fitted up according to the latest modern ideas.

After much agitation a class for women and children at the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium will be started next Thursday. Miss Elizabeth C. Macy, a graduate of Dr. Sarheant's Normal School of Physical Training, will be the instructor. The objects of a progressive course in physical training are to provide a system of recreative and developing exercises for those who wish to build up their physique and keep themselves in vigorous condition; to furnish a series of æsthetic movements as a means of attaining poise, grace and suppleness; to give those in poor health special treatment and to assist children to form correct habits of walking, standing and sitting. Patients sent by physicians will receive careful attention.

TO MAKE A FORTUNE.

DISCOVER OR INVENT A SURE CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA.

Who Does This May Live Like a King and Be Feinted—Hundreds of Thousands of Sufferers In This Country—Talks With Several Unfortunates.

If ever a man discovers a sure cure for dyspepsia, he may live thereafter in a manner palace, keep a French cook and own a steam yacht—and he may smile at fate's death. The world is waiting for a dyspepsia cure. It is a pity that while Mr. Por was making his census he didn't find out how many dyspeptics there are in this country, but in the absence of exact information it may be safely said that he number runs up into hundreds of thousands. They all want to be cured.

Any body can see that this country is full of dyspeptics if he will take the trouble to make a list of his friends and then put those against the names of those who suffer more or less from dyspepsia.

The best proof that the dyspeptics is that neither doctor nor medicine cures them. Whenever a new man enlists under the dyspeptic flag, he is sure to get an extra dose from one of the veterans something like this:

"Keep away from the doctors. They can't cure you. I've had more than 50 doctors' stuff, and I might as well have saved my money."

Here are a few statements from neighbors, friends and total strangers who have escaped from the tyranny and torture of the disease:

"Dyspepsia? You ask me if I've ever had it? I should think I had had it.

It's a young woman of 30 who is talking, and she goes on to tell how she has suffered.

"I always when I don't want it to comes," she says. "Get an invitation to dinner, and it's sure to attack me at about 5 o'clock. If I plan to go out late to the theater, I'm bound to stay at home because just about the time I'm starting that horrible dyspepsia comes along and says: 'I guess I shall think I had had it.' Tonight. You'd better remain in the house and enjoy my society?'

"And I do now, I really believe that I should have married long ago if it hadn't been for this dyspepsia. Wouldn't it be nice to have the wedding fixed for 4 o'clock and dinner at 7, and then have come on as about 3:45 and be compelled to spend the rest of the afternoon saying, 'Oh! did I wish I was dead?' and then the papers would come out and tell how the groom was at the church, and the ushers, and the invited guests, and that all thanks would be sent out when I was went home without seeing the bride."

This young woman's uncle is an exdyspeptic. He used to have dyspepsia so badly that he thought he would throw himself upon the floor and writhe there.

"What gave it to me," said he, "is more than I know, but that I had it I know very well. I went to doctors and took medicine, and I dieted and exercised, but, like the girl in the swing, the more I said 'I won't' the more I was sailed, 'Let her go!' and I kept having the thing worse all the time. All of a sudden it stopped, and I've been free ever since. Why it stopped is more than I can tell, but I did know; I might be worth millions to me."

This sudden abandonment of a victim after capturing him is something new to the dyspeptic peculiarities of the disease. A woman who is in the same social circle as the two already quoted tells her experience in this way:

"After having had dyspepsia steadily for three years I came to New York from the country and found my brother-in-law ill. I began to take care of him and worked day and night superintending the nurses and managing the house. From that time to this I've been absolutely free of dyspepsia."

"How do you account for it?"

"Why, I quit thinking of myself and worrying about my condition. I suppose that that was what cured me."

"I don't see how that can be," said the person to whom the statement was being narrated. "My attacks are quite likely to come on me when I am thoroughly forgetful of myself. For example, I had one yesterday. I was eating by myself ever so much. I just had to run away from my friends and get home and go to bed. It seemed as though I'd die riding up in the street car."

"Well," said a barber, who has been in the dyspepsia business off and on for the last 30 years, "they's a good many kinds of dyspepsy."

He said this when he was asked to explain the apparent inconsistency exhibited in the above statements.

"Yes," continued the barber, "they's several kinds of dyspepsy, and the only thing for a man to do is to find out what his own case and govern himself accordin. Now, I've spent a fortune on myself, but I ain't got no cure. I can relieve myself rather than cure. Dyspepsy makes me sour on, I get a crust of rye bread, and I chew it and chew it till it's as fine as powder. That makes saliva, and that's what the stomick needs. Then I eat and drink everything I are, that and bein careful about what I eat. Never eat no pastry, nor potatoes, nor anything that is rich or heavy. It's an awful disease, dyspepsy is, but they's lots of 'em that's got it."

Talk about dieting is something that comes very near to quackery, but it is sedom that one meets a person who has hit upon a diet that agrees with him and guarantees him exemption from the attacks he is so much afraid of.

There is, however, a current prescription in regard to diet which dyspepsies thoroughly believe in. It is said to be prescribes a constant diet of chopped beef, dry bread and warm water for a whole year. It is seldom, however, that one gets as far as to begin such a course of nutrition, and when a person does adhere to it, his fame travels far and wide.

Universality, then, the burning man, the inventor of a sure cure for dyspepsia has the field to himself. He will not be required to furnish a machine with a sign for it, "Drop a nickel in the slot and get rid of your dyspepsia;" he may take a week, two weeks or even three months, to cure his patients. All that is required of him is to provide a thing that will do the business in a reasonable time, and his name is Astor, Vanderbilt and Gould, all three in one.—New York Times.

A Collision of Aristocrats.

"My good man," said the titled gentleman who had just been violating a municipal ordinance, "I am not subject to the laws here. I belong to the nobility."

"Well," replied Mr. Terence Flynn, "for the matther o' that, mayther am Oi. Oi belong to the police force."—Washington Star.

HIS SMILE DISAPPEARED.

And So Did He, Taking a Prize Box Along With Him.

The old man in the "L" smoking car was absorbed in his newspaper when the burly youth entered. A pasteboard box was on the seat beside the old man, and with the air of a man who knew his rights and was prepared to enforce them, the youth sat down on it.

"I beg your pardon, sir," said the old man politely, "but you're sitting on my box."

"I know it," replied the burly youth as he took a cigar from his pocket and proceed to light it. Why didn't you get out of the way? You only paid for one seat, I guess."

"If you had spoken to me," explained the old man, "I would have made room for you. I was reading the paper and did not see you."

"It ain't my business to keep your things off the seats," snorted the burly youth. "I paid for a seat and took it."

"But I have something in that box that I wouldn't have injured for a great deal," expostulated the old man.

"Well, I guess it's done for now," said the burly youth, with a taunting laugh.

"Perhaps not," urged the old man. "If you'd kindly get up for a minute—"

"But I won't," returned the youth shortly.

By this time some of the other passengers were becoming interested, and one or two of them evinced a desire to throw the burly youth out of the car. A faint smile appeared to lurk somewhere around the old man's mouth, however, made them hesitate. He looked like a man who thought he had the best of the affair in spite of the other's calm assurance.

It was perhaps two minutes later when the burly youth emitted a wild yell and bounded from his seat in the aisle. Another yell followed, and he bounded down the aisle toward the door with both hands clapped to the seat of his coattail pockets. On the platform of the car he began making frantic endeavors to take off his coat, but before he succeeded the train pulled into a station and he sprang off and dashed into the waiting room.

The old man had thrown a paper over the box when the burly youth got up, and now he carefully raised the edge of it and inspected what was underneath.

"Confound him!" he exclaimed at last.

"What's the matter?" asked one of the others.

"Why, he's run off with one of my pups here," said the old man ruefully.—Chicago Post.

Buying and Selling.

Commonwealth is rife with temptations, and it is hard to lay down rules. It is clearly fair to buy a young man's work at its market value, say a Rossetti in the New England Magazine for $100 or $200, but to purchase below the known value, say, a Shakespeare quarto from an ignoramus for a crown is trading beyond reason on another's misfortune. The same considerations apply as in betting. In fair betting a man buys a chance, but when the chance is very well known to all, and you know it, you are swindling. Betting ethics, which are vague, forbid betting on a certainty, but really the morality of the matter is that no man should get his money's worth in the way of a chance. Still if it is not fair to trade on another's ignorance one may profit in reason by one's own knowledge.

For instance, a well known writer picked up in a twopenny barrow at different times a dozen or so copies of a book of his own pamphlet. The pamphlet was unsigned, and perhaps not another man in the kingdom would have identified the book, so that the bookseller had created the value of what he purchased. In horse dealing caveat emptor is taken in its widest sense, and when a horse comes to grief or vice arises where the buyer should not take too good care of himself. No doubt in such bargains as well as in connoisseur purchases there is a fair field for all the time one is "done," and the professional horse coper or brio-a-brac dealer makes it his trade to sell, not at a fixed price, but at the largest possible profit, so that his tables may fairly be turned on him.—London Spectator.

His Wedding Fee.

The pastor of a prominent church in a city of New York was discussing with one of his country parishioners the subject of ministerial salaries. The parishioner insisted that his pastor must be laying aside a great portion of his salary—which, by the way, was a very high one—each year, and when the minister attempted to explain that there were many demands for money on a man in his position the farmer insisted that the minister was for a year would amount to a tidy sum. Unable to disabuse the farmer's mind of this impression, the minister gave way at last and would amount to a tidy sum. Unable to would give for the first four marriage fees.

The farmer replied, "I will give you the best cow on my place." It was a year before the pastor was twice or three times the price they have been bringing this season.

"It is a bargain," said the minister.

In a few weeks the first wedding party arrived. As soon as they were gone the minister drove out to see his parishioner. "I have come for the first installment on the price of that cow." The preacher went out to his carriage, returned with a covered basket, and, opening it, disclosed two small puppies.—New York Press.

Compensation.

"One of the things that irritate me," said Mr. Glimmery, "is to have the man whom I sit down next to in a street car persist in sitting skewed round so that he can look out the window. It belongs to him and deprives me of some that belongs to me. One of the things that rejoice me is the expression on the face of the man who has been occupying a three-fifths of a cross seat on the elevated, and who looks up, but fails to move when somebody comes along looking for a seat, when the fact that he sits down so heavily, calmly, irresistibly and conclusively, crowds him over to where he belongs."—New York Sun.

SKETCHES BY M. QUAD

Speaking of Mr. Tompkins.

I had come out of the Fifth Avenue hotel and turned into Twenty-third street when a well dressed middle aged man overtook me and exclaimed:

"I beg your pardon, but how do you do, Mr. Tompkins; how do you do? I just caught sight of your face as you turned the corner and wasn't quite sure it was you. And how are things in Akron?"

"Moving along all right," I replied as I shook hands with him.

"How long have you been in town?"

"Oh, a couple of days."

"Here on business, of course? You were always a busy man. How's my brother Dan? You know Dan, of course—president of the First National bank?"

"Certainly. Dan is all right and as hearty as a buck. He said I would be apt to run across you in New York."

"He did, eh?" queried the man, seeming to be quite surprised. "Are you going to remain long?"

"Three or four days."

"I shall be glad to show you around a little. I don't think you exactly remember me, do you?"

"N-o, not exactly."

"I saw you in Akron often for three or four years, and I made many purchases at your store. I think we were introduced by my brother Dan."

"No doubt. Your brother Dan is a keen, sharp fellow, isn't he?"

"Yes, pretty sharp," he replied in a noncommittal way and looked at me very sharply.

"Well, he's a sharp one. The day I left Akron I met him on the street, and he said to me, 'Tompkins, if you meet my brother Bunko down in New York, tickle his chin for me.'"

He said that, did he?" queried the stranger as he began to draw off.

"That's what he said, sir. How's business in your line?"

"You think yourself a cute one, don't you?" he asked as he looked me over.

"Well, Tompkins of Akron is no spring chicken. Do you make mistakes of this sort often?"

"None of your business."

"No, of course not, but I just thought I'd inquire, you know. I'll tell your brother Dan I met you, but that you were off your feed. Good day, Bunko."

I went back to the hotel and found, sure enough, that Tompkins of Akron was registered there. The bunko man had gotten the two of us mixed.

He'll Top the Crowd.

He entered the car on which I was seated on the fifth avenue elevated, and after a bit he leaned over and whispered in my ear:

"I'll be hanged if they haven't done it!"

"Done what?" I asked.

"Got my watch!"

"Who?"

"Dunno. Some feller picked it out of my pocket!"

"Well, that's too bad. You ought to have been more careful. Are you a stranger in the city?"

"Yes, perfect stranger. Got here only two hours ago. Say, it's immense, ain't it?"

"I don't exactly understand."

"Don't you? Waal, I do."

"Do you know what'll happen when I git back home?"

"The folks will laugh at you for losing your watch."

"Will they? Not as I knows of. You jest let me git down alongside the stove in White's grocery and tell the crowd that some feller down here in New York picked that watch under false and I never felt a touch, and I'll be the biggest man in town fur the next two weeks!"

"And if you lost your wallet you'd be a bigger man yet?"

"You bet I would! Here she is, stickin right out my pocket, and there's $8 in her, and if somebody'll sneak her out and not let me feel 'em I kin go home and knock the socks off'n the feller who was clubbed by a policeman and run over by a cable car down here!"

Caused by a Dog.

The other afternoon a boy of 10 years of age who was crossing Broadway at Murray street, narrowly escaped his head on the cobblestones. The result was a trifling scalp wound, but the boy burst into tears and sat down on the curbstone. Inside of 60 seconds a crowd of 150 persons had gathered. In another 60 the crowd blocked the street.

"What is it?" yelled one.

"Who's been run over now?"

"Has a call been sent in for the ambulance?"

That's the third man killed right here."

For five minutes the crowd held the fork. The cable cars had to run slow, the mail wagons and trucks came to a dead stop, and City Hall park was black with people streaming across it to find out what had occurred. I saw a dozen men have their hats knocked off or their heads punched while trying to crowd to the front, and I saw four policemen into the scrap, expecting to see nothing less than the mangled remains of three or four persons. When we reached the boy, one of the officers demanded:

"Here, what's the matter with you?"

"Got hurt," blubbered the lad.

"How? Where?"

"Fell down and hurt my bend."

"Is that all? Get up then! Come, now, gentlemen, scatter. Away you go. Nothing but a boy got a tunk on the cocoanut."

"Oh! Ah! Um!" exclaimed the crowd, and the next minute Broadway had resumed its normal condition.—M. Quad in Detroit Free Press.

AGAINST THE DRILLS.

FRIENDS SOCIETY PROTEST AGAINST MILITARY DISCIPLINE IN SCHOOLS.

To the Board of Education They Express Regret at the Military Spirit Against the Teachings of the Divine Master.

The regular February meeting of the Board of Education was held at the High School building Monday. The members of the board present were Messrs. Lounsbury, Lovell, Abbott and Jenkins, and subsequently President Probasco. Mr. Lovell was elected temporary chairman and presided until the arrival of Dr. Probasco. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. Secretary Lounsbury read a number of approved bills which were ordered paid.

The report of B. Holmes, county superintendent, showed that he had deposited $16,101.75 to the credit of the board. Collector Johnson reported that he had collected $2,182.79 in school taxes which, with $33.77 interest, he had deposited to the order of the board. Mr. Lounsbury then presented each member of the board with a report of their financial condition for January. It was as follows:

Balance January 1st	$16,722.44
RECEIPTS:
From State of New Jersey	$14,101.75
From City Collector	2,221.56
	16,323.31
	$30,446.75
PAYMENTS:
Teachers, Janitors, Clerk	$ 8,809.99
School Books, Supplies	1,046.36
Repairs	496.20
Sundries	1,242.67
Note due January 23	4,000.00
	11,905.63
Balance February 1st	$24,481.12
City National Bank	$14,781.96
First National Bank	13,399.16

In the above "sundries" is included the payment to city for share of assessor's and Collector's fees.

Mr. Lounsbury, as chairman of the building committee, reported that there was no important changes or repairs to be made at present. In relation to a primary school in the First Ward on Berckman street, he reported that a deed for the property as suggested was now being recorded at Elizabeth and would soon be placed before the Board. The committee had invited competitive sketches from a number of architects and expect the same to be ready for examination by the Board on or about March 1st. The committee suggested a special meeting to examine them.

The communication to the Board of Health was then presented by Secretary Lounsbury, who drew it up. He thanked the Board of Health for referring Mr. Krom's letter to the Board of Education, and said that they wished to aid as much as possible in maintaining good health in the schools. All of the suggestions of Mr. Krom, with one exception, were already in use. Regarding the providing for individual drinking cups, he said the Board was unanimously of the opinion that the plan suggested would prove not only unnecessary and annoying, but probably more unsanitary than the present arrangement. In concluding, he said that the Board desires to give their views more fully before any positive action is taken.

In connection with the same matter, Mr. Lounsbury read a letter he had received from William N. Barringer, Superintendent of Education in Newark, stating that there was no truth in the statement made by Mr. Krom in The Daily Press that an outbreak of diphtheria in the Newark schools could have been prevented by the use of individual drinking cups. "We have had no outbreak or spread of diphtheria in any of our public schools for many years," said the letter.

The following bonds and interest were reported due:

	Interest.	Principal.
Bryant, six months	$900	$1,000
Franklin, six months	$525	$1,000
	$975	$2,000

They were ordered paid.

The teachers reported the necessity of an over-flow class in the Franklin school and suggested Miss Clara J. Clurshon, of Oswego, as teacher. Superintendent Maxson thought her the one for the place.

A communication was received from the Friends' Society. They expressed deep regret that military drill was being introduced regularly into the school and that guns were being procured. They earnestly protested against it as they thought the military spirit was against the teachings of the Divine Master. It was moved and carried that the communication be received, spread upon the minutes and an acknowledgment of its receipt be sent to the Friends' Society.

The Board then went into executive session.

A Fowl Thief.

Several nights ago someone visited the farm of Mr. Frazer, a prominent citizen of Pumptown, and relieved him of the greater part of his poultry. The fowl catcher made away with 13 chickens, 13 ducks and 11 geese. Mr. Frazer had a large number of fat turkeys but these, as it is their custom to roost high, were safe from the clutches of the thief, clear out of reach in the top of a large walnut tree.

A DECADE OF WEDDED LIFE.

Mr. and Mrs. I. H. Boehm Celebrate Their Tenth Wedding Anniversary.

The tenth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. I. H. Boehm, of Somerset street and Grandview avenue, was celebrated Tuesday afternoon and evening in a delightful manner. The guests were pleasantly entertained during the afternoon, after which all adjourned to the dining room where a sumptuous repast was served. Many handsome presents were received.

Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. A. Levy, Mr. and Mrs. Frank, Mrs. and Miss Solomon, and Messers. J. Levy, I. Levy, A. Levy, and L. Levy, of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Mc-Vey, of Plainfield, and P. Metz, of New Market.

A. P. A. MEMBERS CHALLENGED.

Lawyer Lindabury Said to Have Peremptorily Excluded Them from a Jury.

The members of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, the American Protective Association, the United American Mechanics, and other societies object to the way in which some of their members were treated in the Union County Court, at Elizabeth, on Monday, by Lawyer R. V. Lindabury. Mr. Lindabury is defending Nicolo Orchelta, who is accused of murder. When the jury was being formed he asked each man if he belonged to the Jr. O. U. A. M., or the A. P. A., and challenged those who answered in the affirmative. A member of the A. P. A. stated that Mr. Lindabury's tactics were an attack on the rights of American citizens. Nothing in the principles of the A. P. A. prevented a member from treating a foreigner at the bar of justice with entire fairness. Winfield Scott Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., has adopted this resolution:

Whereas: It has come to the attention of this council that Richard V. Lindabury, counsel for an Italian who is now on trial charged with homicide, asked each juror if he were a member of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, and challenged all those who answered in the affirmative; and

Whereas: The objects of this order are solely benefical and patriotic; therefore be it

Resolved, That we regard this action on the part of Mr. Lindabury as an attempt to deprive us of our rights as American citizens because we are American born, and as an unwarranted attack upon our order entirely uncalled for in the interests of justice.

THEATRICAL.

Next Saturday night at Music Hall will be one of merriment, when Hoyt's "A Trip to Chinatown" will be presented. The skit, designed by Mr. Hoyt as a musical trifle, is considered to be the most breezy of his many works. This piece enjoyed a wonderful run in New York, having played there for over 700 consecutive nights at Hoyt's Theatre. Charles Hoyt has never set himself up as an instructor, a reformer or an oracle of the stage. His satires have conveyed, however, a deal of practical lessons, and he has created a school of acting that has for a decade been the most popular of all stage amusements. He takes for the foundation of his various skits a foible or fad of society, and satirizes the same in an original manner. Since last season Mr. Hoyt has added much fun to the plot and much improved the skit in every way. The demand for seats is large. The engagement is for one night only.

This is the last week of "Chimmie Fadden" at the Garden Theatre, New York, and all Plainfield theatre-goers who have not seen this play, so characteristic of New York's East-side life, ought not fail to go this week. Mr. Townsend's sketches are too well-known to make favorable comment necessary, and it need only be said that the "Chimmie" of the stage is more delightful than the one in the book. The situations which "Chimes" manages to produce with such frequency are immeasurably funny, and a night at the Garden this week will be well spent.

A Century Old Chair.

Isaac A. Connett, of 203 Watchung avenue, is the proud possessor of an old-fashioned high back hickory chair, and was owned by his grandfather, Matthew Connett, who resided many years ago near the place known as Two Bridges, between Plainfield and Rahway. It is known to be considerably over a century old, and Mr. Connett prizes it so highly that he intends to replace the present worn-out cane bottom with a modern one, and after scraping the wood he will have it oiled and polished. It will then be put to use in the parlor of his home.

The Last a Pleasant One.

The last of the socialables in connection with the Industrial Fair to be held at Hope chapel, was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wharton, 926 West Third street, Saturday night. There were about thirty present, who enjoyed the violin solos by Hugh Gray and vocal solos by some of the women present. Refreshments were served during the evening. These socialables have been very successful and the committee will meet the last of this week to count the receipts and make a report.

FURLOUGH FOR DR. LEWIS

HE WILL DEVOTE SIX MONTHS TO THE SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY.

His Duties to Be in the Line of Editorial Work in Advocacy of Seventh-day Observance—Will Not Leave His Home.

At a special meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist church held Tuesday afternoon, the request of the Executive Board of the American Sabbath Tract Society, that Dr. Lewis be granted a furlough for six months to do some work for that society, was considered and granted. The proposed work is mainly of a literary character, including revision and additions to the literature published by the society from its office in the Babcock building, this city. This work has been made necessary by the changes which have taken place in the various movements and issues connected with the Sabbath question. The Doctor hopes to include in the revision a second edition of his "Critical History of the Sabbath and the Sunday in the Christian Church."

He will remain in Plainfield for the most part, without any change in his home surroundings. This "furlough" takes the place, for the present, of the plan which was proposed at the General Conference held here last August, to call Dr. Lewis entirely away from his church. It is not yet announced who will supply Dr. Lewis's pulpit during the furlough, which begins on the 10th of February. The church generously continues the pastor's salary as usual.

FORTY INDICTMENTS

And Two Presentments Brought in by the Grand Jury.

After being in session since the first Tuesday in January, and considering a very large number of cases, the Grand Jury came into court this morning at 10:30 o'clock, made their report, were thanked by Judge Van-Syckle for attention to their duties and discharged.

There were forty bills of indictments and two presentments brought in, the two last being against the Board of Excise of Elizabeth, and six saloon keepers who had only been detected in violating the excise law on one occasion, which under the charge of the Judge was not sufficient for them to present an indictment. It is said that seventeen of the indictments are against Elizabeth saloon keepers for excise violations.

In the case of the Board of Excise the presentment set forth the law under the Weeks act, which was construed to give the board the power of a court, and the proceedings necessary to take in cases of violations of the laws which it is their duty to administer. It was their duty, so the presentment stated, to investigate all charges against saloon keepers and where they found that violations existed they should revoke the license and not grant another under a year. The reason the Board of Excise were not indicted was that no charges had been properly made to them, otherwise they would have been indicted.

THE HOPE CHAPEL FAIR.

WILL BE AN EXHIBITION OF ARTICLES AGED, NOVEL AND VARIED.

Started This Afternoon With an Opening Address by Rev. W. R. Richard—General Description of What it Consists of.

Considerable has been said of the Industrial Fair at Hope chapel which opens this afternoon, but very few outside of those interested know what it is to be. A Daily Press reporter visited the chapel Tuesday afternoon at the invitation of the committee in charge to learn something of the details of the fair. He found apparent chaos, but under the guidance of Chairman McGinnis, of the committee of arrangements, he was led through the different departments and the entire plan of the fair explained.

If hard work and good material have anything to do with the success of the fair, then its complete success is already assured. It is no slight undertaking that has been planned, and the fair promises to excel anything of its kind held in this city.

But something of the fair itself. The usual attendant at the chapel may expect to be surprised with its interior appearance. Instead of a plainly furnished room, the newcomer will find himself confronted by booths of life and brightness. The ceiling will be one mass of flags and bunting, while on every side booths, artistically decorated, will add to the change. To the left of the entrance will be the stationery booth, where the Daily Press, paper, ink, and the like can be procured. This booth is located at the head of a hall that occupies the centre of the building. A stage has been built in the rear and here entertainments will be given every evening. On the left is the loan exhibition, the supper rooms and kitchen. On the right come the booths which face a passage which, were it anywhere except in church, would be called the "Midway." The principal booths will be the men's and women's industrial booths, where articles manufactured by members of the congregation will be exhibited and sold. There will be some very nice things there also.

Tea, fancy goods, candy, flowers and so forth will be represented at the *different booths. There will be every*thing for sale from a candy doll to a flat iron.

The supper room does not need any explanation, while the loan exhibition is sure to attract many. Here, on one side is a collection of articles from or relating to the Holy Land while on the other is a genuine "old curiousity shop." Here George H. Fountain will reign supreme and his valuable archeological collection, augmented by numerous other contributions, will form a very interesting exhibit. Among the ancient relics is a portable military bootjack, owned and used in the military career of Gen. George Washington. Another curiousity is a copy of the New York Sun in 1833, marked "number one." But it is better to examine personally.

The fair opened Wednesday at 2:30 o'clock and at three, Rev. W. R. Richards will deliver an opening address. The ladies orchestra will furnish musical selections during the afternoon. This evening the entertainment will begin at eight o'clock and include several selections by a double quartette from Princeton College. The fair closes at 10:30. The fair begins today and will be continued today and Friday.

Mr. Richards spoke as follows in his opening the fair yesterday afternoon:

I have been in some doubt what sort of address would be appropriate for an occasion like this, but certainly its tone ought to be cheerful. This seems like more feasting than fasting, and my first thought was that you would want something that would make you shake your sides with laughter. But on second thought, I am not so sure of that. This is a cheerful scene, but it has been no joke getting it all ready. It will be a time of good cheer and of merry-making, perhaps, for us who come together; but it has meant for some of us a great deal of solid work and self-denial. Whatever pleasure and advantage anyone is to get out of it, just so much devotion someone has put in it. And there has been a serious purpose in this devotion, this solid work. You have not taken all trouble for the sake of the good time that you expected to have here; but it was because you wanted to help along the service that has been rendered in this chapel in the name of Jesus Christ. That may be done in many ways.

One thing that this chapel has stood for is the truth that there are more ways than one of helping on Christ's work in this world. Just preaching at a man, or saying prayers for him, is not the only way to do him a Christian service. To give him a cup of water, if he is thirsty, may be a very Christian service; to give him a cordial welcome when he is lonely; to give him something good to read when his mind is dreary; or just a chance to come in and be warm when the cold storm is raging out in the dark; we have believed here that all these are forms of Christian service.

And so the pleasantest thought to me in connection with this pleasant scene is that, so far as you have been moved to prepare all this for Christ's sake, He takes more pleasure in it than anyone else. Every stroke of hammer, every stitch of needle, every trouble cheerfully taken, have been known to Him, and are counted as a service to Him.

WEDDED AT BETHEL CHAPEL.

Miss Ollie Lewis Last Night Became Mrs. Howard Grobes.

Bethel mission, corner of Fifth and Washington streets, was the scene of a very pretty wedding last Tuesday, when Miss Ollie Lewis, of West Third street, was married to Howard Grobes. Horatio Randolph presided at the organ and gave pleasing selections while the guests were arriving. Owing to a misunderstanding the ceremony did not take place till 9:15. At that hour the bridal party entered, while the Lohengrin wedding march was being rendered. First came the ushers, Richard Norwood, Samuel Johnson, Wm. Burden and Charles Wyet. Then came the maid of honor, entering on the left. She wore a blue silk gown trimmed with lace, and carried pink roses. Following was the bride in a gown of pink silk trimmed with lace and white satin ribbon. She wore a tulle veil caught up with orange blossoms, and carried a bouquet of bridal roses. She entered leaning on the arm of Benjamin Perkins, who gave her away. The three bridesmaids, Misses Pauline Cole, Mattie Johnson and Miss Jackson came in succession as follows:

The groom entered on the right at the same time, accompanied by his best man, George M. Anderson, and Lewis Peterson. The bridal party formed a graceful circle around the altar where they were met by Rev. Mr. Alexander who performed the ceremony.

They retired from the church while Mendelssohn's wedding march was being rendered, and were immediately taken to the home of the groom, 314 Spooner avenue, where George M. Anderson and Benjamin Perkins gave the newly wedded couple a reception.

A large collection of handsome presents were received by the bride and groom.

AFTER NINE YEARS.

The Finders of a Stocking Full of Money Will Receive Their Shares.

This week the money found nine year ago in an old stocking in Elizabeth by five boys, who were playing along the railroad tracks, will at last be divided, each of the finders receiving an equal share. There was $755 in the stocking. The interest added to the sum since it was placed in the bank by the county detectives will bring the amount up to about $833. All of the lads have since grown to be men and two of them are married.

And Vets Enjoy Themselves.

One of the best meetings ever held by Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., was the one of last Tuesday. There were about thirty comrades present, who revived the meeting by relating interesting war stories, and singing war songs. The campfire was lighted and it cheered the hearts of all present as the thrilling events of the past were recalled. An additional note of interest was the mustering of a recruit, and he was warmly received. A smoker brought the event to a close.

Settling Up Township Business.

The North Plainfield Township Committee met last evening and paid bills amounting to about $600. The accounts of the Overseer of the Poor were adjusted, and the Collector reported $1,150 in the treasury, leaving a balance of about $500 after the payment of bills. The clerk, H. J. Martin, was instructed to make necessary arrangements for the spring election on *March 30th. The committee then ad*journed to Friday night, when all the business for the year will be closed up.

Our people are growing more and more *in the habit of looking to Rey*nolds' pharmacy for the latest and best of everything in the drug line. They sell Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, famous for its cure of bad colds, croup and whooping cough. When in need of such a medicine give this remedy a trial and you will be more than pleased with the result.

Quick in effect, heals and leaves no scar. Burning, scaly skin eruptions quickly cured by DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. Applied to burns, scalds, cold sores, it is magical in effect. Always cures piles. L. W. Randolph, 143 W. Front St.

ANTI-GARB BILL KILLED.

THE ENACTING CLAUSE STRICKEN OUT AFTER A SHARP DEBATE.

Few Senators Wanted to Commit Themselves, But Senator Daly Was Outspoken in His Denunciation of the Bill.

The Senate Tuesday morning, by a vote of eleven to eight, ordered the enacting clause stricken from Senator Rogers' "Anti-Garb" which is copied from the Pennsylvania law, and prevents public school teachers from wearing in school any dress, insignia, marks, or emblems indicating the fact that such teacher is an adherent to or member of any religious order, sect, or denomination, and imposing a fine upon the board of education or school trustees permitting the same.

The bill was aimed at the Sisters of the Catholic church, but so far as is known there is none employed as a public school teacher; and at all events none wears the dress of the order. Senator Rogers poses as the leader of the "patriotic orders."

The Senators were not disposed to *discuss the merits of the bill, remem*bering the efforts made by its friends last fall to defeat Senator Skirm because he spoke against it last year; and when Senator Daly, of Hudson, moved to strike out the enacting clause and expressed the opinion that it was the most iniquitous measure ever introduced in the Senate, the roll call was begun immediately.

When Senator Skirm's name was reached the vote as recorded stood 3 to 3, most of the Senators having refrained from voting. In explaining his vote, Mr. Skirm said that a more iniquitous bill could not be conceived, and it ought to be killed at once without any regard for Senatorial courtesy.

Senator Rogers denied that the bill was iniquitous. He considered it indiscreetness on the influenced that sought the passage of the bill to move to strike out the enacting clause. He wanted it to go to third reading and be discussed on its merits on a day fixed for its consideration.

"What is the necessity for such a bill?" inquired Senator Daly.

"The necessity may arise at any time, the same as it did at McKeesport, Pa., where they undertook to introduce nuns in the public schools," replied Mr. Rogers.

"Whence comes the bill?" pursued Senator Daly.

"From the Junior O. U. A. M., the P. O. S. A., and kindred societies," answered Rogers.

"At the united request of all these societies?" asked Senator Voorhees.

"It is," answered Rogers, and added: "At the request of the Executive Committees, who represent a membership close to 50,000 in New Jersey."

The discussion was now out of order, but President Thompson permitted it to go on, as the Senators were anxious to have the bill disposed of at once. Senator Daly took the floor to speak in favor of his motion. The bill would promote discord and dissension where peace now reigns, and at a time when the leading minds of the Catholic and Protestant churches are seeking for common ground upon which they can all stand on the public school question.

Senator Rogers declared that the bill treats all sects alike, and simply emphasizes the constitutional provision.

"I don't think we have any right to pass this bill," said Senator Voorhees.

"One hundred and fifty thousand people do think so," exclaimed Mr. Rogers: "at least fifty thousand members of the patriotic orders do."

The subject having been pretty well discussed, Senator Rogers expressed a willingness to waive "Senatorial courtesy" and have a decisive vote taken at once. The eleven voting to strike out the enacting clause were: Messrs. Daly (Dem.) Gould, Herbert, Johnson, Ketcham, Kuhl (Dem.), Parry, Skirm, Voorhees, Vreeland and Williams. Those in the negative were: Bradley, Engle, Hoffman, Packer, Rogers, Ross, Stoates (Dem.) and Ward.

Many Assemblymen were present during the discussion, and expressed pleasure that the bill had been killed and that they would not be compelled to go on record on it in the House.

The little daughter of Mr. Fred Webber, Holland, Mass, had a very bad cold and cough which he had not been able to cure with any thing. I gave him a 25 cent bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, says W. P. Holden, merchant and postmaster at West Brimfield, and the next time I saw him he said it worked like a charm. This remedy is intended especially for acute throat and lung diseases such as colds, croup and whooping cough, and it is famous for its cures. There is no danger in giving it to children for it contains nothing injurious. For sale by T. S. Armstrong, Manager Reynolds' pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues.

CONCERT OF CHAMBER MUSIC.

The Programme Was Finely Rendered to an Appreciative Audience.

The chamber music concert held at the Casino Tuesday was largely attended by the music loving public. The excellent programme, which was published in The Press last Saturday, was performed splendidly by the artists. Miss Nina Rathbone, the soprano, has a remarkably strong voice, well modulated and was loudly applauded. As an encore she sang "Calm as the Night," by Carl Bohm, with much feeling.

Mr. Gober, the solo 'cellist, ranks among the first artists. His playing is a marvel of technique and expression. He was recalled twice and played a slavic lullaby as an encore. P. Ludwig Conde played with his usual fine touch and feeling, and he proved himself a master of his instrument. Arthur Janke was the pianist of the evening. His playing shows a thorough technique, and he was loudly applauded. He also played the accompaniments for the soloists on a Mason & Hamlin piano.

The next chamber music concert will be held in April.

A MASONIC FUNERAL.

Obsequies Over the Remains of the Late G. B. Nevius This Noon.

The funeral services were held over the remains of the late George B. Nevius, whose sad death was chronicled in these columns last Monday, at the First Presbyterian church Wednesday at 12 o'clock. The pall bearers were J. A. Simmons, ex-Emmons, ex-Judge W. B Codington, Hugh Knox, J. E. McClintock and Charles Sturtevant members of Anchor Lodge, No. 149, F. and A. M., of which the late Mr. Nevius was a member. The funeral sermon was preached by Rev. C. E. Herring, after which the solemn and impressive Masonic service was conducted by C. C. Howard, assisted by the members of Anchor Lodge. Anchor Lodge attended in a body, while numbers from Plainfield Council, Royal Arcanum, and many sorrowing friends, were also present.

The casket was covered with white Easter lilies, and a number of beautiful floral designs were placed about it. The interment took place at the Hillside cemetery vault.

INTELLIGENT DISCUSSION.

Progressive Plainfield Women Hear About Helen Hunt Jackson.

The study class of the Plainfield Branch Alliance of Unitarian and Other Liberal Christian Women met at the Unitarian church Tuesday and enjoyed a delightful study of "Helen Hunt Jackson." The paper was prepared and read by Miss Nettie Haviland and was one of thorough interest.

The paper treated chiefly of the noted woman's work among the Indians, which brought forth that remarkable book, "The Century of Dishonor," from her pen. Her knowledge of the race was gained while living in Colorado, when she heard two thrilling lectures by "Bright Eyes" and "Standing Bear," Indians who gave an account of the way in which their race was being treated. This book was the means of the Government appointing her a special commissioner to the Indians. She suggested reforms which the Government has been following out. She died August 8th, 1885, and previous to her death sent a letter to President Cleveland thanking him for honors bestowed.

An enjoyable discussion of the subject followed the paper. A vote of thanks was given to Miss Haviland for her excellent paper.

HIS SEVENTY-THIRD.

Alex. Willett's Friends Enjoy Themselves at His Birthday Anniversary.

A number of the relatives of Alex. Willett, the well known Park avenue shoe dealer, gave him a surprise party last Tuesday, at his home on Craig place, in honor of his seventy third birthday. Conundrum and other games were indulged in, after which refreshments were gallantly served by Albertus Swaim and T. S. Armstrong. The viands were well seasoned with humor and wit, blended in a manner as only these well known gentlemen can do it. After plantation and National songs had been sung, the friends returned to their homes to meditate on the fact that the next day was a birthday of another good man.

Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Alex Willett, Mr. and Mrs Albertus Swaim, Mr. and Mrs. T. S. Armstrong, C. H. Armstrong, Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Cline, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. C. RECEPTION AT STREULI'S.

A Pleasant Event in Plainfield Society Last Evening.

A delightful reception and dance was given at the residence of H. A. Streuli on Prospect avenue last evening, and about four hundred from Plainfield and vicinity were in attendance. The affair was given by H. A Streuli and Mr. and Mrs. Evarts Tracy to introduce Mr. and Mrs. H. Alfred Streuli, Jr. The guests were received by Mrs Clifford Wharton, Mrs. Schipper, Mrs. Louis G. Timpson, Mrs. John Benson, Mrs. Jose Machado and Mrs. Howard Tracy.

The house was charmingly decorated with flowers, mostly roses, and the dining room presented a beautiful appearance. The dancing was continued until a late hour. Rogers furnished the music.

In Justice Nash's Court.

Justice Nash has given judgment for the plaintiff for $177.62 in the contract case of Lister against Clark; the case of Carter against Watt, on contract, has been settled, as was also the case of Force against Dejurion, on contract. Summons have been issued in the contract case of Soun et als against Stevens et als, returnable February 14th. The case of Green against Thorn, on contract, was adjourned till Saturday morning at 10 o'clock. The Justice has also issued a summons in the case of Dowd against Bindenberger, in tort, which is returnable February 13th. The defendant in the latter case was loaned some harness and he has failed to return it, hence the suit.

Popular With the Force.

A most commendable feature of the present police force is that Councilman E. T. Barrows, who is chairman of the police committee, has become very popular among the men. He expects no more work from them than they are able to perform, and their duties have been clearly defined. Mr. Barrows is a man of system and this department will be looked after very carefully under his personal supervision. The committee are considering the advisability of a police signal service, and it is not unlikely that such a thing will be introduced at an early date. Oother improvements will be made from time to time as the demand requires it.

ALL WERE TO BE EQUAL.

THAT WAS ONE OF THE ORIGINAL TENETS OF MOHAMMEDISM.

The Ninth Lecture By Dr. Riggs Delivered Last Night—His Subject Was "The Arab and the Caliphate."

A very interesting lecture on "The Arabs and the Caliphate" was delivered Tuesday by Dr. James F. Riggs in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church. This lecture was the ninth in the University Extension course on the Eastern Question. The attendance, as usual, was very large.

The lecture dealt with the history of the successors of Mohammed. Dr. Riggs said, in opening:

Mohammed established an ultra-democratic theory of life—a theocratic government, in which all men were to be equal before God, with one man as spokesman. The idea of a hereditary kingdom is alien to Mohammedanism; the Caliphs were not a dynasty in the conventional sense. But human nature is often too strong for the ecclesiastical theory, and the Caliphs became kings in reality if not in name. During the days of the four "orthodox Caliphs," Abu-Bikr, Omar, Othman and Ali, a primitive simplicity of life prevailed among the Mohammedan rulers. But as soon as this primitive simplicity began to disappear the Caliphs became nothing but oriental despots.

During the first century after the birth of Mohammedanism, the soldiers of the new faith were animated by a wild fanaticism that enabled them to carry everything before them. They had embarked in a tremendous enterprise, the conquest of the world; and for about a hundred years they suffered no important defeat. Persia, Egypt, northern Africa and Spain, were conquered by their irresistible onslaught. But, early in the eighth century, their repeated attacks on *Constantinople were rendered fruit*less by the Jenins and gallantry of Leo, the Isaurian, and about the same time their invasion of Europe was checked, on the field of Tours, by the Franks under Charles Martel.

The golden age of the Caliphate covers the latter part of the eighth and the ninth century of our era, and was illustrated by the reigns of such princes as Almansor and the renowned Haroum-al-Rashid.

The four causes that led to the downfall of the Caliphate were the claims of rival Caliphs, the rise of anarchical and destructive sects, the separation of remote provinces, and the insolence of foreign mercenaries at home. The Arabs were no longer supreme, and the Caliphs of the south were about to make room for the Sultans of Turkey.

Dr. Riggs' next lecture will tell of the Ottoman Empire of today, with especial reference to the Armenians.

ON STEALING BICYCLES.

BY LUKE SHARP.

CERTAIN news agency has telegraphed abroad the report that I am in Switzerland, not for the benefit of my health, but for the purpose of stealing bicycles, and added that I was an expert in the thing, that, for a time at least, I had succeeded in baffling the most praiseworthy attempts of the police of two towns to capture me.

While this statement is naturally flattering to me, it is nevertheless a libel, and, in fact, if I cared to use strong language, I might go so far as to take the last syllable away from the word "libel."

The whole trouble arose through Switzerland not having a proper language of its own, that hilly country preferring to express what few thoughts it has in a mixture of French, German and Italian, depending on what particular canton you happen to be in. They say that the Swiss are naturally linguists. Unfortunately, they are. Any combination of sounds you may make, means something to one or the other that you happen to be talking, for he knows so many langages that you are sure to hit one of them, and so you convey ideas to him that you had no thought of expressing.

October weather is lovely in Switzerland. Most of the visitors have then gone, prices come down one-half, and the air is sweet and cool, with usually a cloudless sky.

Under these circumstances I thought it would be a nice thing, as the roads were good and the scenery picturesque, to take a bicycle tour right around Lake Thun, beginning at the town which gives the lake its name, and going around to the north side of the lake to Interlaken, and returning by the south shore.

The hotel keeper told me that if I went up the street, turned to the right, went under an arcade until I came to a tunnel, penetrated that and emerged on another street, turned to the left and kept on, I would come to the shop of a man who would let me have a bicycle to hire by the day or the hour. I followed the directions as closely as possible, and thought I recognized the shop because a bicycle was leaning against the wall. The owner was leaning against the doorway, looking at the bicycle outside. The following conversation in many languages took place between us:

"Haben sie un biecyclette a loues?" I opened out on him with the above impartial mixture of German and French. It seems he understood me to ask if that bicycle was for sale, whereupon he replied in four languages:

"Yaw, yaw, oui, yes, se."

Then, throwing in a bit of Italian, I led off with:

"Quanta costa la machine a la hoor, oder per tag?"

Now I submit that to any educated person, or even to a university man, this sentence said as plainly as print: "How much do you want for this machine by the hour or the day?" I tried afterwards to get the magistrate to see this, but he, not knowing Italian, sided at the very beginning of the phrase. The owner of the bicycle on oath declares that he thought I asked how much the bicycle had cost him. He says he answered that he paid 500 francs for that brute of a machine, made in France, while I understood him to agree to let me have it for five francs a day, which was cheap. I was in a hurry to be off, and was afraid he might repent his offer, so I said it was all right and I would take it, whereupon, without further parley, I wheeled the bicycle into the middle of the road, sprang on its back, and was off, leaving the astonished man standing by the door-post thunderstruck, it seems, to make any outcry until I had passed beyond his sight at the first turning in the road.

"TAW, TAW, OUI, YES, SES."

I pedaled serenely on, little realizing what a commotion I had left behind me, and the one funny thing about this most regretable episode is that I spent an exceedingly quiet, peaceful and enjoyable day, not knowing I was pursued, making no attempt to elude anybody, and yet eluding them in what appeared afterwards to be by subtle and crafty dodges. The magistrate could not be persuaded that my sitting on the veranda of a restaurant in the main street of Interlaken, with the bicycle in plain view of everybody, was not the brazen act of a hardened criminal, who knew the police would be searching for him in the back streets.

When the man standing against the doorway had recovered partly from his amazement at my sudden flight on the machine he rushed to the police station and told the authorities there a ridiculous foreigner had [illegible] Ollendorfian conversation, and that he had [illegible] his mind was distracted in trying to follow his remarks, had seized the opportunity and also the machine and was at that moment making his way by the north road towards Interlaken.

Now, capture under these circumstances seemed to be deliciously easy. There were no branching off roads. The mountains were on one side of the lake on the other, on neither of which was bicycling practicable. Therefore all the two policemen had to do, when they mounted their machines, was to ride faster than I did and so overtake me. As I had no idea that a race was on, I plugged along in a leisurely manner and would undoubtedly have been taken near Interlaken if it had not been for the fact that some years ago a company built a funicular railway from the margin of the lake, a mile or so up to St. Beatenburg. I had lived in St. Beatenburg once, and I remembered that the road from there to Interlaken was a good one. I thought that perhaps it would not be a bad plan to go up on the railway and coast down to Interlaken. I knew a man who had done it once. I can well believe now that no one ever tries it the second time. The car goes up to St. Beatenburg only four times a day only, but when a couple of miles away from the landing I saw a steamer coming in and I knew if I reached the landing about the time she did I would get a car.

The policemen, it seems, caught sight of me as I was making my spurt, and they at once put on extra steam, but there is a deep bay just before one reaches the funicular and they lost sight of me in the curve of the bay. I just managed to catch the car and got on board somewhat short of wind. As we went up I noticed an innocent and unfortunate Englishman standing on the road at the foot of the hill with his bicycle beside him, and he was watching us go up, taking a rest at the same time before mounting the steep hill that rose between him and his destination. I had little idea at the time that I was making trouble for that unknown stranger, and I hope he will accept my apologies if this recital should chance to meet his eye.

The policeman overtook him near the top of the hill, and, with the craft that distinguishes all continental officials, they said nothing, but followed him until he reached Interlaken, where, in spite of his protestations, they arrested him on the charge of stealing his own bike. The man was justly indignant, and showed them his customs receipt from the French government, and it was no use; they knew they had the right man, and they telephoned to Thun for the owner of the machine to come to Interlaken on the next steamer and identify his property. This took a few hours, and when they let the poor man go, he was exceedingly hungry and thirsty, and he was going to bring an action against the Swiss authorities, as if that would do any good.

Meanwhile, I had reached the top of the railway funicular and I bicycled the mile or more along the street, high up above the lake, on one side of which is scattered the village of St. Beatenburg, with its wonderful view of the snow mountains—the Jungfrau, the Eiger, the Monch and a host of others.

I found the ride down the zig-zag road not such a pleasant one as I expected. I the brake was not going to last if I kept on, so I had to walk most of the way down. Coming to a more level ground, I cycled gently into Interlaken, making for the place where they sell Munich beer, and there, over a mug and a sandwich, on the main street, I made a frugal lunch with the bicycle standing against a pillar of the veranda.

After a smoke, I proceeded out of Interlaken, and took the south road that borders the lake. This road is not so good for cycling as the other, being much more hilly, while the roadbed is more stony. I therefore walked a good deal, taking it very leisurely, and in course of time I was overtaken by a policeman who also was walking with his machine. He asked me if I had met a man on a bicycle coming from Thun, and I told him quite truly that I had not. He seemed discouraged, and told me all about the bicycle thief and the arrest of the wrong man. He feared the thief had hidden in the forest until he and his comrade went past, and then perhaps took the steamer across the lake; or the villain might merely have pretended to take the north road, while in reality he went by the south. Thus the policeman hoped to meet him yet. I promised to keep a lookout, and the officer went on.

When I reached Thun, and came to the place where I got the bicycle, I found the man was in Interlaken, and his wife, who knew all about the robbery, was amazed to see the thief return the machine and place five francs and his thanks on the counter.

I regret to say that the present honesty of this action did not commend itself to the authorities. They looked on it as the ruse of a crafty scoundrel who realized that, as vigilant were the police, it was impossible for him to escape, and so endeavored to throw dust in the eyes of the wise men of the place.

Thus the bicycle at five francs a day was not so cheap as I had at first supposed.—Detroit Free Press.

NO THOUGHT OF FUTURE.

REV. C. L. GOODRICH TALKS OF THOSE WHO LIVE FOR THE DAY ONLY.

If We Are Indulgent in Our Youth, it Will Come Back to Us in Later Years, to Our Sorrow—Other Points of the Talk.

These conducting the revival services were much encouraged Friday evening by the increased attendance at the Park Avenue Baptist church, and the noted interest shown. The meeting opened with several short prayers, which were followed with a solo, "More Love To Thee, Oh, Christ," by Charles Lewis. Then Rev. C. L. Goodrich took his text from the Gospel of John 21:18: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, when thou wast young, thou girdedest thyself, and walkedest wither thou wouldst; but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldst not." The above words were spoken to Peter and were full of truth and comfort. The principle was to understand in his love for Christ that he was willing to give up his life, and he might well express his allegiance to Christ. Imagine our Saviour standing here tonight and offering to lift the veil, and show us our life. No, it's enough to know it when it comes. We need no prophet to tell us our text is true. In the fresh vigor of youth and manhood, going through life with comparative ease, we need no prophet to tell us that some day we shall lose our power and strength, and the time comes when others must care for us.

Suppose Christ should stand here and lift the veil, showing us when our end was to be, would you dare look? I am not sure that I would like to see it. It is in your power tonight to prevent a sad ending to your life, it may not be tomorrow night. We must remember Peter's state of mind. He had said that he would follow Christ and lay down his life for Him. But he denied Him three times. His failure impressed him, and Christ told him he would attain steadfastness. This encouraged Peter. Christ tells us that we can do better, and He can so help us that we can. Some persons have come here night after night, and have wished that they had courage to rise when the invitation is given, but they go away failing in their duty and privilege.

If we are indulgent in our youth, it will come back to us in later years and to our sorrow. We often prefer our way, and years afterwards repent of it, but it's sometimes too late.

Let Christ manage you, that is the step to take to be a Christian. Give up your way, and take His way. You miss it to some things that you don't like to do, and you wouldn't be half a man if you didn't. There is no use in my telling you that the Christian life is one of ease, comfort and indulgence, for there are many trials and temptations in it, but Christ will help us through if we accept Him, and let His spirit rule us. After the choir sang "Come Home," Rev. J. W. Richardson conducted the aftermeeting. At his request many told how they were converted and testified to the keeping power of Christ. There were also many requests for prayers, and altogether the service was one of great spiritual blessing.

The meeting tomorrow evening in the Park Avenue Baptist church will be wholly conducted by the Young People's Societies of Endeavor and Epworth League. No sermon will be preached, but testimony and prayer will prevail instead. A most helpful service is looked forward to, as a grand rally of young people is expected.

FISKS, IN A BIG DEAL.

The Plainfielders Are One of the Members of Morgan's Syndicate.

The Sun says Thursday with reference to the issuing of Government bonds:

The great feature of the bond bidding was the offer of J. P. Morgan's syndicate, which, as now composed, includes only his own banking house, the Deutsches Bank of Berlin, Germany, the National City Bank and Harvey Fisk & Sons of New York. They proposed to take the entire issue of 100,000 only one letter had been received. If the amount was received, Pierpont Morgan, after figuring on the bids received, said tonight that he estimated that about 50 per cent of the 100,000 would be awarded him. He based this conclusion simply from hearing the various bids read, as he did not think that more than 50,000 bids above that figure had been made.

NO RACING OF ANY SORT.

THAT IS WHAT SENATOR VOORHEES WILL ATTEMPT TO ENACT.

But He Will be Met by Strong Opposition at Trenton by Those in Favor of Honest Racing—Dr. Kempshall Writes a Letter.

Race-track legislation will have a rocky road in the Senate if the race-track men attempt to carry out their purpose of attempting to get a bill through the Legislature, says the World.

Senator Voorhees says that all the constitutional amendments passed on by last year's Legislature will be acted upon favorably, and that the judiciary amendments proposed by Senator Johnson and a horde of lawyers will have to be cast aside.

Amendments to the Constitution can only be made every five years. They must be passed on by two successive Legislatures and then submitted to the people. The constitutional amendments now pending, he said, must be passed by the Legislature before they can go to the people. The race-track men have been working for delay on the amendment making irrepealable the laws on race-track gambling.

Senator Johnson last week introduced an amendment on the formation of the Court of Errors and Appeals. If this amendment were to be accepted this year and incorporated into the other constitutional amendments the entire batch would be delayed in progress just one year, and they would practically have to begin their career over again with this Legislature. It would be fatal to the race-track men. They have been hoping that the sentiment against them would die out, and that at least next year they would be in a position to get "honest" racing.

It is pretty certain now, however, that the anti-race-track constitutional amendment will pass the Senate with all the other amendments. The amendment on the Court of Errors and Appeals by Senator Johnson will receive respectful attention from the judiciary committee, and the lawyers with their schemes for making the court an ideal one, will be heard, but the amendment will not be allowed to block the progress of the others.

In compliance with his promise to Rev. Dr. Kempshall, of Elizabeth, Senator Voorhees introduced the following as an amendment to the Constitution. It is the same section which was agreed to by the last session of the Legislature:

No lottery shall be authorized by this State and no advertisement thereof shall be issued or sold within this State; nor shall pool sell-ing, bookmaking or any other species of gaming authorized or allowed within this State; nor shall any gambling device, policy or other game of chance now prohibited by law be legalized, or the remedy, penalty or punishment now provided therefor in any way diminished.

As soon as the resolution was read President Thompson referred it to the judiciary committee.

The referring of the resolution to a committee was considered peculiar, and the refusal of the Senate to act upon it promptly pleased the lobbyists immensely. There is a possibility that when Senator Voorhees, as leader, comes to attempt the passage of the resolution, he will find its path not strewn with roses.

Rev. Dr. Everard Kempshall, President of the New Jersey State Anti-Race Track League, addressed the following letter to Senator Voorhees Thursday:

ELIZABETH, N. J., Feb. 5, 1891.

Hon. Foster M. Voorhees, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Judiciary.

Dear Sir:—Expressions of mingled surprise and indignation are heard to me from various parts of the State at the delay in the Legislature in meeting. It is the general opinion that the proposed anti-race track amendment to the Constitution will be adopted. In addressing to you this open letter is to make respectful request that if the Judiciary Committee does not see its way clear to report to the Senate at regular meeting of the Senate for adoption the resolution pertaining to this matter now in their hands, you will in behalf of the Executive Committee of the State Citizens' League lay before the honorable Senators their petition that this matter will get action at once and in such way as it may be pleased to indicate, a hearing of citizens of New Jersey who are in favor of the prompt adoption of said amendment by the present Legislature. Very respectfully yours, EVERARD KEMPSHALL,
President State Citizens' League.

Purchasers of Property in White House Learn of a Mortgage.

There is great excitement in White house over notices received by villagers from Sheriff Poulson, of Hunterdon county, commanding their presence before Chancellor McGill on foreclosure proceedings at the suit of the First National Bank of Jersey City. Representative Pidcock has owned large tracts of land in that section, and the persons summoned had purchased their property of him.

They claim that they have warranty deeds given by him, but the records show that a prior blanket mortgage for $50,000, covering their property, was given to the bank by Pidcock as collateral. The bank now proposes to foreclose.

ALMANACS OF THE PAST.

A VALUABLE COLLECTION OF THEM IN THE HOTEL GRENADA.

They Range in Age From One Hundred and Sixteen to Sixty-two Years—Some Were Published Near Plainfield.

While the last sixty years have wrought wonderful changes in almost everything, the regular almanac presents almost the same appearance. That is, not the large newspaper almanacs of today, but the Farmer's Almanac and others of a like nature. Among the curiosities in the cafe of the Hotel Grenada, of which a few were described in yesterday's Daily Press, is a large frame containing ten old almanacs, which range in age from one hundred and sixteen years to sixty-two years. They were formerly the property of an aunt of Mrs. Wallace V. Miller and were given to Mrs. Miller some time ago. At the top are four almanacs called the New Jersey Almanac and dated respectively, 1825, 1826, 1829 and 1831. The cover of the oldest has the following inscription: "The New Jersey Almanac for the year of our Lord, 1825, Being the first after Bissotile and (until July 4th) the Forty-ninth of American Independence. Containing the usual astronomical calculations and a great variety of other useful and entertaining matter. By David Young, philom." Then follows the coat of-arms of New Jersey, below which it is stated the almanac was printed and sold by J. & E. Sanderson, Elizabethtown, N. J. The edition for 1829 is the same except there is no coat of arms above it and it was printed by Benj. Olds at Newark. It also contains weather predictions for the year. On the one for 1831 the cut is also different; this time being of an eclipse of the sun. Thos. O. Sayre, of Elizabethtown, published it in that year.

There are two copies of the New Brunswick (N. J.) Almanacks calculated by Joseph Cramer, with an old-style picture of men bundling grain on the first page. It was printed and published by Griggs & Dickinson, of Philadelphia, for Joseph C. Griggs, New Brunswick, (N. J.) Whether the publisher of that almanac was related to the present Governor it is hard to say. These two almanacs are dated 1827 and 1830.

New Brunswick was the headquarters of an older annual publication whose old-fashioned type and simple cover present a marked contrast to those of the present day. This was the New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania Almanac for 1802, "being the second after Bissextile or Leap Year." A. Blauvelt, of New Brunswick, was the publisher, and it was said to contain "everything useful and necessary in an almanac." Humor was catered to by the almanac publishers, and R. H. Elion, of New York, is named as the publisher of the "Comic All-my-nack" for 1834. The first page is decorated with a cut of a man carrying an elephant on his back, and "embellished with forty comic engravings." There must have been a large demand for them as it is marked second edition.

Benjamin Franklin's "Poor Richard's Almanac" seems to have made a demand for a great variety of contents in the earliest almanacs.

The United States Almanac for 1782, "being the second after leap year and the sixth year of American Independence, shows great energy by its compiler, Andrew Ellicott, Esq. It contained, among many other things, "The motions of the sun and moon; the true places of the planets; chronology of the most remarkable battles, sieges, retreats, etc., in the present war; days for holding courts in New Jersey, also a variety of interesting and entertaining matter, both in prose and verse." Its home was not far from here. It was printed and sold by Shepard Kollock, of Chatham, at his office, where shopkeepers and others may be supplied wholesale and retail.

The oldest of all these almanacs is opened and two inside pages are shown. Its name of publisher is not stated, but it is marked 1780. On one page is the following rhyme:

War begets poverty, poverty peace,
Peace makes riches flow, fate ne'er doth cease,
Riches produce pride, pride is war's ground,
War begets poverty, so the world goes round.

Then follows a list of the eclipses for that year, two of the moon, and one of the sun, and the time of the beginning, middle and end of each. There is also a list of the members of the Supreme Executive Council of the Common Wealth, of Pennsylvania, which is headed by his excellency, Joseph Reed, esq., the president. On the other page is a table of values of dollars in pounds, shillings and pence, and a tide table giving the time of high tide at Philadelphia, Boston and New York.

A RICH WASHERWOMAN

MRS. ELIZA STEPHENSON LEFT $5,000 AS SAVINGS OF A LIFETIME.

She Had Worked Out by the Day for a Number of Years, and Deceived People as to the Amount of Wealth She Had.

A familiar figure about the city for the past twenty years has been Mrs. Eliza Stephenson, an apparently poverty stricken old woman who eked out a precarious existence by doing washing and housework for various families in the city and borough. For a number of years she has resided in three small rooms in Stiger's alley, where, when she was not away at work, she worked, ate and slept. Though she managed to keep busy most of the time, people who knew her life thought that she barely secured a living. Her constant toil and lack of the necessities of life told on her physical system and a week ago she was attacked with malaria.

She disliked to spend any money for a physician, and for some time she took a few simple remedies that are resorted to the household. She continued to feel worse, however, and finally sent for Dr. Clawson. He treated her, but as she lives alone and had no attention other than what the neighbors sympathetically gave, she failed to improve. Tuesday, application was made to the Muhlenberg hospital and she was admitted to that institution. Her system was so weak, however, that she died Thursday.

Mrs. Stephenson has no relatives here, and so Dr. Clawson visited her rooms to see what arrangements he could make for her burial. There he found a little hand-bag hanging on a hook, and on looking into it, he was startled to see a note for a considerable amount of money made payable to her.

Dr. Clawson then hunted up Chief Grant and the two returned and made a search of the house.

Laying in a promiscuous manner on the bureau they found another note for a large sum, and after a little investigation discovered six notes ranging in sums from $100 to $600 made out in her favor and with ample security. A bank book was also found in the hand bag crediting her with deposits in a local bank. The total amount of notes and deposits approximate $5,000.

Chief Grant put the valuable in the hands of Judge DeMeza, who will take charge of her affairs.

Mrs. Stephenson has one daughter, Isabella, twenty-six years of age, who is a domestic in Newark, but who has not lived in Plainfield for several years. Her address is not known, and Chief Grant was unable to get any trace of her from the Newark police this morning.

THE MARX APPOINTMENT.

MAYOR GILBERT EXPLAINS WHY HE SELECTED MR. MARX.

Reforms are Contemplated in the Conduct of the Office and Mr. Marx is Considered to Have the Experience.

There is a determination on the part of the city officials that the poor of the city shall be cared for more methodically and economically in the future, and to accomplish this, a sweeping change is contemplated in the conduct of the office of the Overseer of the Poor. Mayor Gilbert stated this fact to a Press reporter last night, who had called on him to obtain an expression of opinion as to his reasons for sending the appointment of George H. Marx as Overseer of the Poor to the Common Council Monday night. For sometime the Alms committee of the Council, together with the outside organizations which are devoted to the distribution of charity, have been considering the feasibility of establishing a poor house on the sewage disposal farm, where the expense of instituting it would be comparatively small, inasmuch as the necessary buildings and almost all there. When such a scheme is consummated it will be necessary to have a superintendent there, and it was with this in view, in securing the right man of experience to perform such duties, that the appointment was suggested to and accepted by the Mayor.

The suggestion to the Mayor came in the shape of the following petition:

Hon. Alexander Gilbert,
Dear Sir:—The undersigned members of the Board of Managers of the Plainfield Relief Association, respectfully request that on the first of February the term of office of the Overseer of the Poor expires, and that a person to fill this position, who is respectfully commended to your favorable consideration, George H. Marx, who is at present superintendent of the Y. M. C. A. and the Relief Association, we feel that with a man of his character and intelligence the poor matters will be wisely administered, and much will be done to solve the perplexing problem of outdoor relief.

Emily C. F. Randolph, president; Mary S. Myers, vice-president; Mrs. H. F. Reynolds, treasurer; Mrs. Wm. Hamilton Applegate, D. J. Yerkes, Marie L. Simpson, Mrs. Theo. Pond, Mrs. Charles B. Ryder, Mrs. Mason W. Tyler, Mrs. J. Evarts Tracy, Mrs. H. B. Newball, Mrs. Edward Cooper, Mrs. Samuel Huntington, Mrs. Henry M. Maxson, Mrs. Charles W. McCutchen, Mrs. Charles Williams, Mrs. Wm. A. Woodruff, H. F. Reynolds, of Advisory Committee; Mrs. Charles F. Leggett, Mrs. Wade H. Hall, Mrs. Mary F. Wyckoff, Miriam W. Openlyke, Mrs. Charles J. Fisk.

Dec. 11th, 1891.

The Mayor took the petition under consideration, but up to Saturday night was undetermined as to what action he would take. There were several candidates for the appointment. He decided that if A. Vanderbeek, the present incumbent, was able to accept a reappointment, he would continue him in office, as he had performed the duties in a satisfactory manner for the city. But Saturday night he learned that Mr. Vanderbeek was not physically able to accept a reappointment, and it was then that he was compelled to make another selection.

Considering the applicants for the appointment he naturally recognized the reasons advanced by Mr. Marx's supporters as being strong, since a reform was proposed in the conduct of the office.

The appointment of Mr Marx subsequently followed. The Mayor said last night that the claim that Mr Marx is not a citizen is not so.

He did not express any opinion as to what action he would take on the case in the future.

Worse Than Smoking Cigarettes.

A young lady, boarding on East Fifth street, had a rather unpleasant experience several mornings ago. When she awoke she was horrified to find that the room, the bed, herself and everything had turned black. A little investigation showed that it was lampblack. The oil stove that the landlady had started in the room early in the morning had smoked furiously all the time, and anyone that has met a smoking oil stove will understand the situation.

NOVEL SUIT TO BE STARTED.

A Vermont Church Will Sue for Money Left by a Plainfield Man.

An effort is now being made to secure for the Congregational church, of Hartford, Vt., a legacy of $1,000 left it by Edward W. Marsh, who died in this city, in 1866.

The wealthy man who owned some property in this city, wanted to sell it, and found a purchaser. The purchaser's lawyer, in looking up the title of the property, ran across the will of Mr. Marsh, who had formerly owned the land. The legacy to the Vermont church had apparently never been satisfactorily settled, and the lawyer wrote to the church authorities, who investigated the matter.

The will provided that in event of the executors failing to remove the bodies of Mr. Marsh and his brothers to the town burying place in Hartford the Congregational church of that town should receive $1,000. A brother, Leonard Marsh, and Carman Parse, were named as executors. Leonard, who was also a residuary legatee, never qualified as executor, and Parse administered the estate.

So far as known, the provisions of the will either as regards the disposal of the bodies or the paying of the money, have never been carried out, and a suit will be started to reopen the estate, though nearly thirty years have passed.

A FEAST FOR ENDEAVORERS.

Big Arrangements Being Made for the State Convention in October.

The press bulletin of the New Jersey Christian Endeavor State committee, issued this week, has the following about the State convention to be held in this city next October:

The committee has the arrangement of the programme for the next State convention have held a number of meetings. The important places have been filled, as far as possible. The Plainfield committee of arrangements has secured the programme committee to secure the best speakers possible. Accordingly the Endeavorers of the State are to have a feast of good things next fall at their convention at Plainfield, such as they never had before. The chairman of the committee, Rev. Cornelius Brett, D. D., authorizes the announcement at this time of two of the speakers of the convention. Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage has accepted the invitation to preach Jay evening, and Rev. H. Pay Mills will give an address the following morning. The latter is to commence meetings in Plainfield the Sunday before the convention and will continue throughout the week, afternoon and evening, in the churches and in the rink. The Hon. John W. Foster will preside at the opening of the convention proper, and Mr. Mills' meetings as well.

A BRILLIANT EVENT.

FASHIONABLE WEDDING OF MISS EDITH HAROLD TO W. O. CHAPMAN.

The Church Beautifully Decorated—Elaborate and Stylish Dress Worn by the Bridal Party—Reception Afterwards.

Plainfield's wealth, beauty and culture has seldom presented a more brilliant assemblage than was witnessed Thursday at the First Baptist church, when Miss Edith Harold, niece of Lemuel Wright Serrell, of West Front street, was united in marriage to William Oscar Chapman, of 428 East Sixth street.

It was one of the most fashionable events of the season, and fully 700 persons were present. Around the high platform and organ there was a complete garden of flowers, consisting of stately palms, lilies and roses while the organ pipes were entwined with beautiful southern smilax, sent on for the occasion.

Seated at the organ was William Earl MacClaymont who, while the guests were arriving, executed perfectly the following classical selections from well-known composers:

Bridal Marriage	Dubois
Intermezzo in F	Cabault
Minuet in A minor	Bakin
The Golden Wedding	Gabriel-Marie
March Triumphal	MacClymont
Selections from Carmen	Bizet
Chanson Ballade	Bachman

Upon the completion of the above the bridal party had arrived, and the first notes of the Lohengrin wedding march was the signal for their appearance.

On the left of the church in front came the flower girls, Anna Marguerite Serrell and Josephine Irene Serrell, cousins of the bride. They were gowned in white organdie over white silk, and carried roses. Then followed the bridemaids, Miss Margaret Walker Harold, of Philadelphia, sister of the bride, and Miss Florence Ethel Serrell, cousin of the bride. They were charming in gowns of white organdie over Nile green silk, trimmed with embroidered chiffon bands and Nile green satin ribbon. They carried large bouquets of pink roses.

Following the bridemaids came the ushers, Arthur Serrell, Edgar I. Serrell, cousins of the bride, George C. Worth and James Maynard Kissam, of Queens, L. I.

On the right of the church in front entered the groom and best man, David H. Lennox. Those entering on the left proceeded slowly and gracefully down the left aisle. When about half-way down, a very pretty portion of the ceremony was witnessed. The party separated and formed on either side of the aisle. They then reversed and returned to the altar, followed by the bride leaning on the arm of her uncle, who gave her away in marriage. The ceremony was performed at 7:30 by Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, pastor of the the church. The beautiful and impressive service of the Episcopal church was used, and the responses were very clear.

The bride was richly gowned in white satin, en train, trimmed with duchess lace and pearl ornaments. The conventional veil was worn and she carried a handsome bouquet of white roses.

As the familiar notes of Mendelssohn's wedding march were rendered the bride and groom left the church by the right aisle, preceded by the flower girls. Then followed the best man, bridemaids and ushers.

Immediately after the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's uncle on West Front street.

The spacious rooms were beautiful with a choice arrangement of flowers, principally smilax, roses and orchids. The bridal party received and gave additional brilliancy to the happy event.

During congratulations, Austin's orchestra of Brooklyn, gave a rendition of music that was decidedly pleasing. A delightful supper was served by Marsal during the evening.

The costly, handsome and useful presents received by Mr. and Mrs. Chapman was the admiration of everyone. The collection included silverware, cut-glass, gold, and many other articles of great value.

Mr. and Mrs. Chapman left last evening for a bridal tour. The places they will visit are a secret and was not divulged to their most intimate friends. Guests were present from this city, Philadelphia, New York and Somerville.

Office Improvements.

A number of changes are to be made in the present office of the Postal Telegraph and Cable Company on Park avenue. New and elaborate signs will be painted on windows and doors. The rear of the room will be partitioned off as a private office while a new and improved desk and counter, of the style built especially for the company, will replace the present furniture. The entire office will be thoroughly renovated and Superintendent W. E. Martin has been empowered to make other changes as his judgment dictates.

New Jersey is becoming virtuous and proposes to have a more stringent marriage law. This will hurt the divorce business, but perhaps that is precisely what the reformers are aiming at.—Rochester Union.

FOUND DEAD IN BED.

MRS. SARAH A. FRANKLIN HAD BEEN MISSED SINCE TUESDAY.

She Lived Alone at the Corner of Park Avenue and Seventh Street, and is Supposed to Have Had a Hemorrhage.

Death came silently to Mrs. Sarah A. Franklin at her home, but when it came no one knows. Mrs. Franklin, who is a woman about 75 years of age, has been living all alone in the large house at the corner of Park avenue and East Seventh street, opposite Dr. Endicott's residence. She was last seen Tuesday, when she appeared in her usual good health. Her sister, Miss Anna Louise Spencer, who resides at 827 Madison avenue, became worried about her non-appearance, Wm. T. Kirk, who lives across Park avenue, also noticed that the house remained closed. He spoke to Policeman McCue, who in company with Miss Spencer, went to the house and ten o'clock Saturday.

He broke in the cellar window and entered and fired off his revolver in the cellar to see if any one was in the building. He then broke down the cellar door and the door leading into Mrs. Franklin's room on the ground floor. There they found the body of Mrs. Franklyn lying on the lounge, wrapped in a quilt.

"She lay there just as peaceful as she could be with one hand resting on her breast," said Miss Spencer in describing her appearance to a Daily Press reporter.

Policeman McCue said that there were traces of blood on her lips and he thinks a hemorrhage caused her death.

The house is part of the Spencer property and Mrs. Franklin has lived there four years. She has made her home in Plainfield for over twenty years. She was born in Providence, R. I. She has four brothers and one sister living, beside Miss Anna L. Spencer. None of them reside in town, however.

DESTROYED BY FIRE.

D. S. Pound's Barn and Contents Burned to the Ground.

The sound of the fire alarm whistle and a bright light in the sky in the direction of Bound Brook left the impression with most of those in this city that saw it last Friday, that Bound Brook had another conflagration. But that poor borough escaped this time. About 7 last Friday evening, Harry T. Pound was sitting by the window in his father's house, 1330 West Front street, when he chanced to look in the direction of the barn and saw the interior all ablaze. He told the household and sent in an alarm from Box 49, at the corner of Clinton avenue and South Second street.

Daniel S. Pound lives just beyond Clinton avenue and there are no hydrants in the neighborhood.

The fire department responded promptly, but the barn, which was well filled with hay, burned very rapidly in the heavy wind that was blowing. The steamer was sent for, but it was impossible to do anything but save the adjacent buildings.

The barn and all its contents, which included three horses, was destroyed. The barn was insured for $300, and its contents for $790. It is estimated that the insurance will cover the loss.

AN EVENING OF PLEASURE.

The American Social Club Gave Their Friends an Enjoyable Time.

The third reception of the American Social Club, under the auspices of Lucetta Council, No. 28, D. of L., was held last evening in Central Hall, corner of Park and North avenues, and was attended by a large number of young people from this city and vicinity, who spent a very pleasant evening in dancing till the early hours this morning.

The grand march was led by the floor manager, W. W. Stratton and Miss Bertha Naylor, and was assisted by the assistant, G. S. Martin and Mrs. Hattie Robinson.

Those who had charge of the affair were: W. W. Stratton, chairman, Mrs. A. A. Wykoff, secretary, Mrs. Hattie Robinson, treasurer, Mrs. C. L. Stratton, Miss Emma Angleman, Miss Bertha Rockfellow, Miss Daisy Sprague, J. Bowman and G. S. Martin.

THE TOOTH OF TIME.

In a Country Like Ours It Works Great Changes.

Some Things It Destroys, Others It Shapes and Grinds Into Beautiful Forms—The Village of Hamburg and the Nation's Capital.

Special Washington Letter

There is a popular quotation that "time makes all things even," but, as a matter of fact, in some directions at least, it may be said that time makes many things uneven. The streams, forests, plains, mountains and coasts of the new world have been changed by time and altered by man until they bear no semblance of their original condition in many places. Progress and improvement have turned things topsy turvy. One of the handsomest eminences in the world, overlooking a river of splendid proportions and remarkable meanderings through a country of boundless fertility and beauty, was formerly the home of the proud and peerless Anahostan Indians, and from its heights far front sank of the invading Susquehannas were driven in defeat when they undertook the conquest of the south. The hill remains where it was reared by omnipotence, but it no longer is the thing of grandeur and beauty which nature created. For many years the naval observatory was located there, and therefore it retains and will ever retain the name of Observatory hill, although the original powers called it Anaiostan castle in a guttural tongue which is now extinct.

Long before the most poetic dreamer of state craft or prognosticator of the future of the new world conceived the idea of an independent republic, and many years before George Washington had selected the site of the capital city of the new nation which grew from the point of his puissant sword, a little village of civilized traders was located on the river front below Anaiostan castle. It was called Hamburg, and was at the headwaters of the "Powtowmack river." It was at this point that Gen. Braddock landed his troops, and upon this hill that he organized his forces for that disastrous march towards Fort DuQuesne, where Pittsburgh, Pa., is now located. Braddock and the majority of his men fell before the skilled French and Indians; and Col. George Washington saved the little remnant of the misguided and unfortunate expedition. The so-called "western frontier" has gradually moved towards the setting sun since that day, until at last there is no western frontier; and the war department has recognized that fact by recently abolishing many of the forts and barracks in the western section of our country.

One of the earliest settlers upon the ground which is now the national capital was Fleet, an English fur trader, who grew very rich out of his traffic with the Anaiostans and other Indian tribes. He kept a bonnet of fish. The Indians in one night commonly will catch 30 sturgeon in a place where the river is not above 12 fathoms broad. And as for deer, buffaloes, bears, turkeys, the woods do swarm with them."

One mile from Anaiostan castle was a little stream which also abounded with fish. It was called Goose creek by the people who came here during the early days, and is now the advent of Fleet. And when the capital city was located here it was given the name of Tiber, in memory of the river of ancient Rome. Thomas Moore, in sarcasm wrote of it: "What was Goose Creek once, is Tiber now." Gottlieb Grammer, an early settler, wrote that "the valley of Goose creek has for innumerable years been periodically visited by the Indians, who called it their hunting ground, and they assembled there in great numbers in the spring months to procure fish. A point, now called Greenleaf's Point, was the principal camp and the residence of their chiefs, where councils were held among the various tribes thus gathered there."

There is to-day nothing left of the ancient hamlet of Hamburg but two brick chimneys, standing near the river front, like sentinels of the past, helpless watchers of the growth of a city and the destruction of the land marks which were once dear to the rich trader who dwelt in his palatial mansion, and exchanged cheap beads, gaudy ribbons and deadly whisky for the products of the chase which the simple people of the land brought to him. In those days the furs which were sent to Europe from America brought almost fabulous sums; and the wealthy ladies of the courts of the world wore beaver, coon, opossum and muskrat furs. They came high, but they had to have them, just as the daughters of Eve must have the fur of the seal, even though the extermination of that Arctic beauty must surely follow the extinction of the buffalo of the plains. The big brick chimneys are crumbling. The river front is not a fashionable section, and the wharves of commerce are nearly a mile lower down the river, near the arsenal. The land is, however, held at exorbitant figures.

Out in the middle of the Potomac river, during the past century, alluvial accretions formed an island, which was submerged at low tide. Grasses, weed and tiny trees grew upon it, and sportsmen found rich harvests of pleasure and profit in quest of the reed birds, ducks and geese which make the place their fall and winter dwelling place. Then came the engineers of the war department, making use of liberal congressional appropriations, began what was called the "reclamation of the Potomac flats." With scows and dredges they scooped the alluvial deposits and constructed them. They surrounded them with stone walls, and filled them with earth taken from various points in the city where building operations were going on. Today the old Potomac flats are almost forgotten and in their place is an artificial island about a mile in length, and nearly half a mile wide. It is covered with trees of many varieties, and skilled *landscape gardeners are trans*forming it into a park and pleasure drive which bids fair to become justly celebrated for picturesqueness and beauty.

When the great civil engineer, Maj. L'Enfant, prepared the plan upon which the capital city was built, and out of which it has already grown far beyond the expectation or imagination of the designer, the village of Hamburg still existed. The people there complained bitterly that the 30th street should run right through their hamlet, regardless of their property rights. They expected a London or a Paris to immediately grow upon them, and were indignant with the engineer who prepared its plans. They protested against their approval. But they have long since been gathered unto their fathers, and the village of Hamburg is almost a faded reminiscence. Their rights were never disturbed, and they lived to the ends of their days upon the lands which they had acquired by priority of settlement. Their heirs moved into the more popular portions of the new city, and their property is now, by purchase and sale, in the hands of men and women whose grandfathers were then unborn. They could not dip into the future and see all the wonders which should grow around their primitive habitation. They never saw the *Potomac flats, nor heard the hills re*sound with the whistles of palatial steamers plying the placid stream on which their shallops floated. I have often imagined how the man whom Pocahontas saved would rub his eyes and plank himself to realize that he was the same John Smith, if he could row his heavy boat up the Potomac from Norfolk to-day and gaze upon the transformation scene.

But Anaiostan castle is no longer known by that name, and Observatory hill is no longer the place where scientists study the heavens and wield the ponderous telescope. The entire plant of the naval observatory has been transferred to the heights back of old Georgetown, that former suburb of Washington, which is now a very important part of the city proper; that world-famous locality which the rightful lord of the domain called the "Rock of Dumbarton;" for that splendid and vast elevated acreage was originally granted to a Scotchman named Ninian Beall, who named here from the vicinity of the medieval Dumbarton castle, which is celebrated in the interesting fiction of the "Scottish Chiefs," by Jane Porter. Everything has changed and is constantly changing, so that the student of current history is involuntarily reminded of the saying of the Apostle Paul: "Old things have passed away. Behold! All things have become new."

Fifty years ago the eminence beyond the street called the Boundary was farming land, and a little village called Mount Pleasant was just being formed. Fifteen years ago that eminence called Pleasant heights was being purchased by a syndicate and laid out in town lots. Ten years ago the horse cars on 14th street were started up the hill. Five years ago a cable line was begun And now there are 10,000 people in Mount Pleasant, while 15,000 more have settled along the heights from Seventh to 25th street. The old Boundary is called Florida avenue, and circuits the northern part of the city with a beautiful sylvan drive. Only a few years ago would search in vain for the farmhouses and stumps along the country road. All have passed away. Time works wonders in this progressive age. While the city is crowded out to the country, and the Boundary will soon be near the long-neglected grave of L'Enfant, the designer of the city which has grown so great within a generation.

SMITH D. FRY.

The Constitutionalist.

A DEMOCRATIC WEEKLY.
PUBLISHED AT
PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Terms—$2.00 per year.

A. L. Force, Editor and Proprietor

Uncle Sam's credit is pretty good after all.

For appearance sake the Legislature should at least make a pretense at work.

Since science has demonstrated that the brain can be photographed there is satisfaction in knowing that photographs cannot talk.

Will they be recorded in New Jersey history as the Lazy Legislature? Senators! Assemblymen! answer No!

Having deprived the people of the means of knowing what the laws are, by doing away with their publication in newspapers, the lawyer-legislature have very consistently decided that five mortal Supreme Court judges are needed to deal out justice.

A colored Republican club of Orange has resolved that "the object of this organization is not to accept nor even to ask for the feeble presentment commonly known as beer and cigars." Which looks as though a presentment more material would be gratefully accepted.

Which is better for the Republican party to lose, New Jersey's electoral vote next fall, or to pass the anti-race-track gambling amendment now? That's the dilemma, and as surely as there is a moral sentiment in New Jersey it will be one or the other.—Elizabeth Journal.

The reaction against that most un-American organization, the A. P. A., is beginning to be felt in the sections of the country where it was strongest. Its disintegration must come. It has no place or sympathy in the hearts of those who realize the principles taught in the landing of the passengers of the Mayflower.

When a Chicago court convicts a Chicago editor of printing bad things in his paper and sentences him to two years in prison, it is time to think that there is still hope of reform in the inland metropolis before the G. O. P's meet there when smutty smoke and a high thermometer will turn them into Ethiopians before they can reach a bath tub.

The Daily Press has nothing to lose or fear in the display of the lack of harmony in the Common Council Monday evening, as insinuated by the News Tuesday. The Press approves or criticises such acts and proceedings as it believes the interests of the city or justice requires, and does so with no further expectation of reward than the confidence and respect of the people. The editor of the News inspires to be a political dictator, and no doubt a candidate for political honors if the leaders of his party will ever consent to take him seriously, and is therefore unable to fairly discuss any question of public interest without being prejudiced by his own individual considerations.

There is no "favorite son" for New Jersey to waste votes upon in the national conventions, and the choice of Jerseymen of either political faith is not fixed upon any great party leader. The great majority want the delegates at the conventions to do what seems best for their country and their party, and to reach that conclusion by conference with delegates from other States, and by carefully estimating the strength of the various forces at work. A large number would like to have the Jersey delegation on the winning side in each convention, but it is still better to be on the right side. The selection of delegates should be according to the capacity and fairness and acquaintance of the candidate for the delegation, and not with too much effort for one Presidential aspirant or another, the situation being such that combined judgment at the convention would be better than preconceived opinions.—Newark Call.

It is expected of Governor Griggs that he will make good appointments to office. That is easier said than done. He may have the best intentions in the world, yet not quite succeed by reason of circumstances which are more powerful, or he may not have that special insight into character which in the selection of officials is the most important qualification, but which is extremely rare, although nearly all men think they possess it. But the good purpose is the main thing, and when mistakes are made in spite of the excellent intention, they are overlooked. The Governor is supposed to consider party service to some extent, and his friendships will naturally guide him more or less; but it ought to be easy to learn whether a candidate is able to perform the duties well, whether his personal character is untainted and whether he has a reasonable share of public confidence These things being determined, politics and personal relations may then be considered.—Newark Call.

The three cent car fare is being agitated in both the New Jersey and New York Legislatures

Fleming's Anti-Cigarette bill is one of the interesting measures now before the Legislature. On the face of it, it would look like a strike, because it prohibits the manufacture and sale of cigarettes in the State of New Jersey, and it would be impossible to give statistics of how many are so in this State; but Fleming claims to be sincere in his advocacy of the bill, having, as he says, a horrible example of excessive cigarette smoking right in his own family, and the bill is the result of solicitations by his near relatives. He is further encouraged by the reception of letters from a number of parents throughout the State, urging him to fight hard for its passage. Several local divisions of the Women's Christian Temperance Union have passed resolutions commending him for his stand. The bill, however, has been referred to the committee on education, and they are looking around to see just how and why cigarette smoking comes under the scope of their deliberations. Some seem to think that it belongs to agriculture.—Newark Advertiser.

Petitions are being presented for signature in this city, asking that the Legislature make a State law fixing the location of the names upon applications for liquor licenses and that no petition be signed by twelve freeholders who have not signed for any other license. Another petition accompanies the first, asking for the passage of restrictions of any kind, fixed or movable, which prevent any of the saloons from the street be forbidden, as in the interest of peace and good order, alleging that where such screens are used the liability to disturbances of the peace, and the chances of law breaking on days when saloons are closed, are greater.—News.

The enactment into law of the recommendations in these petitions would affect the whole State, but so far as the first suggestion is concerned it is already a part of the special city charter under which liquor licenses are granted in Plainfield and one which is observed in all the application filed with the Council each year. Regarding the second suggestion it may be said that the city law prescribes that all screens or obstructions to a free and open view of the bar shall be removed during the hours in which sale is prohibited, and this is also observed. It is not compulsory, however, to have an open view during business hours, and The Press questions the right and justice of the Legislature to pass such a law. This amendment added to the present excise law of this city would be highly inconsistent, inasmuch as the law recognizes the fact that no license is granted by the honorable members of the Common Council unless they are satisfied that the dealer is of a character that they will not state the confidence they have reposed in him to conduct his business peaceably and within the limits of the law.

Editor Runyon realized as soon as he saw a copy of The Daily Press last Friday that he had been badly beaten in the report of the Bound Brook disaster. Forthwith his double barreled intellect began to heave and surge, and he ground forth an eulogistic editorial to the effect that the News was the only paper in Plainfield that could be depended upon to give all the news and in its best form. The fact that The Daily Press sold 3,000 extra copies on Friday—double or treble the number sold by the News—is evidence enough as to how the people sized up the merits of the two papers. In the last few days The Press has published exclusive information of the following events: The fortune left Mrs. Edward Lauffer; commencement of divorce proceedings by Mrs. Anna Bonte; Elias H. Bird receiving taxes; acceptance of the terms of street railway extension ordinance by the street railway officials; secret marriage of Miss Sadie Smith to Harry E. Baglin; death of John Henry Whitney; petition presented to Mayor Gilbert for the Marx appointment; proceedings in the Somerset Board of Freeholders over the Johnson jury bills; formation of the New Jersey Inter-scholastic Athletic Association. These were matters that were current news, and yet Editor Runyon has the unmitigated gall to say that people have to depend on his paper for the news. During this time The Press was not beaten on one single piece of important news.

GRIGGS' NOMINATIONS.

HE SENDS THE FIRST BATCH TO THE LEGISLATURE LAST NIGHT.

Talk of Impeaching a Prosecutor—Petitions Before the Senate—Resolution Against the Township School Law.

Gov. Griggs sent to the Senate last Monday the following nominations: For Prosecutor of Passaic county, Eugene Embley; for District Court Judge of Paterson, ex Assemblyman William J. Lewis; for District Court Judges of Jersey City, Roderick B. Seymour and Joseph D. Bedle; for member of the Board of Managers of the State Hospitals for the Insane, ex-Assemblyman John C Eisele, of Newark.

In nominating the two District Court Judges for Jersey City, Gov. Griggs named one Republican and one Democrat. The Democrat is Joseph D. Bedle, whose father, when Governor, nominated the first District Court Judges in the State, and for Jersey City nominated one Democrat, Judge Randolph, and one Republican, Judge Blair. The Democratic Senate at the time refused to confirm Judge Blair, and Gov. Bedle appointed him ad interim. Gov. Griggs, as a member of the Legislature, was one of the most active in securing the passage of the bill establishing District Court Judges, and now, in nominating a Democrat, he is following the examples of Govs. Bedle and McClellan.

Governor Griggs sent into the Senate a second batch of nominations. They were: Thomas McCarter, Jr., and Fred F. Guild, for District Court Judges of Newark. McCarter is a Republican and Guild a Democrat.

Senator Daly presented to the Senate last night a petition which he asked to have referred to the judiciary committee without its being read. The petition was signed by John Kehoe, of Lyndhurst, Bergen county, and made serious charges against Prosecutor Peter W. Stagg, of the same county. Kehoe desires the impeachment of Stagg but why he did not present the petition to the House, where impeachment proceedings originate, instead of addressing it to the Senate, is not apparent.

The petition makes general charges of failure to prosecute persons charged with high crimes and with acting in a cruel and inhuman manner against persons charged with light crimes.

The Bergen members speak of Kehoe as a man who has had trouble with Prosecutor Stagg, and who is probably actuated by some personal feeling in the premises.

The Senate last night did nothing but receive petitions and bills, with the exception that Senator Rogers' anti-religious garb bill came up in the regular order and was laid over at the request of the introducer, who said he would later on ask to have the bill set down for a special day.

Senator Hoffman presented a resolution of the State Board of Education against the report of the township school law. Senator Ketcham introduced a bill to enable Newark to erect a $200 000 public library. Senator Voorhees introduced a resolution to have one Republican and one Democrat appointed by the Circuit Judge in each county to constitute a commission to prepare a list of persons eligible for jury duty.

The Assembly's Committee on Railroads and Canals gave a hearing yesterday on Mr. Flemming's bill to compel all railroads in Newark and Jersey City to elevate or depress their tracks at grade crossings. George McEwan, of Jersey City, a law partner of his brother, Congressman McEwan, spoke in favor of the measure. He said that in the past year there had been twenty-eight fatal accidents on the Erie Railroad grade crossings, and the demand for raised tracks was imperative.

James Allen, counsel of the Erie road, said he did not want to reply in detail until he had heard all the speakers in favor of the bill. He claimed that many of Mr. McEwan's statements had been misleading, particularly as to the number of accidents which he would disprove by official reports.

The committee adjourned until next Monday night.

In the House last night Assemblyman Allen introduced a bill prohibiting the formation of trusts in the State, and asked that the bill be referred to the committee of the whole.

Assemblyman Hogan introduced a resolution directed against the combination of anthracite coal carriers to control the output and price of coal. The resolution, which was made a special order for today, directs the Attorney-General to inquire into the alleged combination, and, if it is found to exist, to proceed against the same or recommend necessary legislation to enable him to do so.

A SCRAP AT DUNELLEN.

PLAINFIELDERS ALLEGED TO HAVE ASSAULTED LANDLORD TAYLOR.

The Kennedys and a Man Named Keller Drank Bound Brook Whiskey and Got Wrathy—Arrested—Held For Grand Jury

There was a row at Dunellen on Friday that resulted in a free fight and plenty of work for the courts. The Kennedy brothers, who drive hacks in this city, and a man named Kellar were among those that viewed the damage by water and fire at Bound Brook.

Although business was almost at a standstill, the dealers in alcoholic stimulants reaped a rich harvest and, in consequence, there were many who were gloriously drunk. The Kennedys and Keller imbibed some of the unnamable compounds that were dealt out and felt rather happy. They came home by way of Dunellen and stopped at Taylor's Hotel to get something to eat. One of the party says that they wanted to purchase some sandwiches and that Taylor refused to give them what they wanted. The Dunellen side of the account is that they wanted to run the hotel.

However, it may have been, there was a general scrap. According to the terms of the warrant afterwards issued, Mike Kennedy maliciously assaulted Mr. Taylor. The rest of the party joined in the chorus and assisted in the grand finale. Mike Kennedy was arrested and taken before Justice Huff, in Dunellen, and was held in $200 bail to appear before the Grand Jury of Middlesex county. The rest of the party come up there this afternoon charged with being disorderly.

The plaintiff will be represented by City Judge DeMeza, of this city.

The Horse Floundered.

F. O. Smith, of West Front street, lost a valuable horse Saturday in a peculiar manner. He was driving through the lowlands back of his home, for the purpose of securing some hay for a man who had lost it during the recent storm. The horse walked into a deep muddy place, and became fastened. Mr. Smith thought that by the ure of a heavy rail, which was nearby, he could extricate the animal. In attempting to do so the horse's hip was broken. A veterinary surgeon was called and after an examination advised that the horse be killed, as it would take a very long time for the break to mend. Accordingly the animal was killed.

BIG FIRES!

Great Fires Are Constantly Burning.

Still They Will Go Out in Time if Not Replenished—Food is Fuel for the Body.

History records the occurrence of most disastrous fires. A few times our own country has been visited in this way with tremendous force. Yet how confident they seem when compared to the raging fires of the sun. A recent writer in one of our monthly journals, illustrates the enormous heat which the sun gives out, as follows: he says that if all the coal which exists on this globe could be placed in one mass, and then immediately burned up, it would not produce as much heat as the sun throws off into space in one-tenth of a second. Of course, we cannot comprehend what this means. But there is another fire constantly burning, of which many of us are not aware, although we live very close to it.

We all know that the human body is warmer than the surrounding atmosphere; while during cold weather the difference is very marked. What keeps the body warm? Because it is constantly burning up.

To replenish the fire in the stove by adding more coal or wood. The oxygen of the air unites with this fuel and heat is produced. The fuel for the body is our food; and the oxygen obtained from the air we breathe combines with it and heat is produced. This heat is constantly escaping from the skin. During summer we dress lightly to aid its escape. During winter we put on flannels, because wool is not a good conductor of heat, and will not allow it to escape so freely from the surface of the body.

If a person is plump in flesh, that is, if he has a layer of fat just beneath the skin, he has a medium which holds in the heat of the body, as a layer of wool does, and prevents the outside of the skin. Persons who are plump in flesh do not shiver with every cool, invigorating breeze. Neither do they require so much food, for as the heat cannot escape so readily, so it is not necessary to add as much fuel. Plumpness means protection; defense against coughs and colds; shelter for an escape from neuralgia and sciatica; a shield to throw off nervous prostration; better security from the germs of consumption; an escape from a thousand aches and pains which cling to a body that is poorly nourished. Plumpness is prosperity, thrift, good nature, happiness.

Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites will not make you over-fat, simply plump, just about right. It puts that cost of fat over the body, pushes up the skin, and more nourishment and muscle.

Scott's Emulsion contains more pure Norwegian Cod-liver Oil than any other emulsion in the world, that will stand the test of time as being a perfect inseparable emulsion. Ask your doctor.

PRAISE FOR THE SEWERS.

Opinions of Plainfielders Who Favorably View the New Improvement.

The last issue of the Morristown Chronicle contained the following interviews with business men in this city concerning the sewerage system just put in operation:

E. C. Mitchell, prominent real estate dealer and owner of realty in Plainfield, said that he had been engaged in the business here, and that the assertion that a sewerage system in Plainfield, which was made for a number of years, would not last than a number of prospective residents from New York and Brooklyn, who came to inspect a sewerage system there has been a decidedly better feeling.

J. T. Vail, real estate—I think sewers are a benefit to Plainfield and property would be much larger if we had had a sewerage system years ago. The people from the city who are looking for a place of residence in the country are used to sewers, and in a number of instances I have known them decided to locate here, but the question of sewers came up and Plainfield lost a number of desirable residents simply because people would not locate in a town where there were no sewers.

W. D. Tuckerman, real estate—A number of people, who had heard of Plainfield as one of the garden spots of the State, have come to me to purchase real estate, and frequently the fact that there was a sewerage system here, although we had every other inducement possible, deprived them of locating here.

A. D. Thompson, real estate—The want of sewers has kept Plainfield back for years, and we would today have at least five thousand more inhabitants if we had had the system years ago. We have excellent water, schools, churches and everything that is needed in a town of the size of Plainfield, and we are now back we have always had to fight has been the question of no sewerage system. Introduced. Plainfield is an up-to-date town and growing right along. As fast as the property owners in one hundred houses undertake to put in this place, and a good many have already done so, they will have here had it not been for our first-class sewerage system.

T. O. Doane, Chief Engineer and Inspector of Buildings—I am pleased with the sewerage system. I was actively engaged in the building business in Plainfield for thirty years and during that time I found that there were a large number of people from New York who desired to live in the suburbs of Plainfield in the country, and having heard Plainfield spoken of as a town of beautiful homes and that we were without a sewerage system, in very many instances would not come here, they located elsewhere.

Dr. E. Darmus, President of the Board of Health of North Plainfield—I am not in favor of the sewer system of Plainfield; think it a mistake, and that a system of cesspools here is better than a sewer.

Dr. Harrison—If the cesspool is on some one else's property and far enough away, it's all right, but if it is on your own property, it's all wrong. All physicians and sanitary experts believe in a sewer system.

Among the others quoted were Frank W. Runyon, Dr. Probasco, Perby C. Ohl, Assemblyman W. R. Codington, Dr. Murray and A. L. Force.

Rev. John Reid, Jr., of Great Falls, Mon., recommended Ely's Cream Balm to me, and I can emphasize his statement that "it is a positive cure for catarrh if used as directed."—Rev. Francis W. Poole, pastor Central Presbyterian Church, Helena, Mont.

It is the most effective of all others for catarrh, and is worth its weight in gold. I can use Ely's Cream Balm with confidence and it does all that is claimed for it. B. W. Sperry, Hartford, Conn.

No Hope for Prentice.

Ex-Marshal William N. Pangborn, of the borough of North Plainfield, received a letter from Dr. Ward, of the State Asylum, at Trenton, in reply to a letter of inquiry as to the condition of Alexander Prentice, of Washingtonville. The letter states that during the past few days Mr. Prentice has been growing worse and there is little hope of his rallying from the disease. It will be remembered that Mr. Pangborn took Mr. Prentice to the Asylum some time ago in the hope that he would be benefitted.

IT IS CHIEF GRANT AGAIN

THE POLICE BOARD REAPPOINTED THAT OFFICIAL FRIDAY NIGHT.

And Thereby Editor Runyon Gets a Political Slap in the Face—Three New Offices Created—Other Appointments.

The perennial attempt of Editor Runyon and his sweat shop sheet to oust George W. Grant from the office of Chief of Police has again failed. The police board met Friday evening and reappointed Mr. Grant and thereby, as might be expected, gave Mr. Runyon a political slap in the face. A month ago many people imagined that Chief Grant was doomed to retirement, because of the infusion of new blood into the Council who, it was thought, would pay some attention to the frauds and disgraceful attacks made on this official by Editor Runyon for personal reasons. But two weeks ago it was understood among those who were in a position to know, that no other man than Chief Grant would be reappointed, and this conclusion was verified Friday night when the police board, composed of Mayor Gilbert, President of the Council See, and Councilmen Barrows and Ginna, met at the Mayor's residence and made the appointment. Mr. Fisk, one of the members of the board, was not present, but the action of the rest of the members met with his approval. The appointment of Mr. Grant was without dissent.

The Board decided to create the office of Sergeant, and Officer Patrick Kiely was made the Sergeant de facto as well as in name, which he has carried for some years past. The suggestion in the report of the police committee to the Council as to the appointment of two roundsmen was also complied with, and Policemen Christopher Frederickson and William J. Mattox were selected for these places. These new appointments and the duties which will go with them will necessarily remove these three officers from their present beats, and in order to maintain the efficiency of the force in the matter of affording protection to the sections which they now patrol, it will be necessary for the Mayor to appoint three new policemen and this will probably be done at the next meeting of the Council. The selection of these men rests entirely with the Mayor. It is possible that he may decide to take three of the special men and make them regulars.

The members of the police board convened in the Mayor's office last Saturday evening and summoned all the members of the force before them, when announcement of the changes and appointments were made to them. The Mayor addressed them and complimented them on their efficiency and on their devotion to the duties for which they are sworn to perform. He also paid a compliment to Chief Grant for the manner in which he administered the affairs of the city entrusted to his judgment.

While the exact duties of the new appointees were not announced, they will be about as follows:

The Sergeant will be on duty nights and will act as the Chief's assistant when the latter official is away or off duty at home. He will visit all parts of the city and see to it that the duties of the other officers are properly performed. He will be mounted on a bicycle.

The territory in which the roundsmen will serve will be in two districts, with Park avenue as the dividing line. They will be mounted on bicycles and will visit the outlying sections of the city which is impossible for a regular policeman to get over with any degree of regularity. They will also keep a supervising eye on the regulars. The changes in the force will probably go into effect the first of next month or at the time the three new policemen begin their duties.

SPIRIT OF TENDERNESS.

A NEW YORK PAPER HUMOROUSLY VIEWS THE HIGH SCHOOL CADETS.

The Conclusions Drawn From the Friends' Protest Are Not So, Yet It Makes an Interesting Gossipy Story After All.

The New York Herald published the following from Plainfield on Friday last:

The old trouble about a choice between the sword and the ploughshare, the spear and the pruning hook has been revived here, in the very citadel of tenderness and brotherly love. The sword is in the lead at this moment, but it is only a toy sword, just big enough to prick a sensitive conscience.

The stout young soldiers of the High School Cadet Corps are thee-ing and thou-ing one another in these days, and it is said that they even contemplate holding a public drill in front of the meeting house of the Society of Friends. Pious Plainfield hopes that so great a scandal may yet be averted.

The cadets are no respecter of persons, and they have just learned that the Friends object to the corps, as tending to instill a warlike feeling in the breasts of the young, and have sought to prevent the "regiment" from securing several stands of harmless rifles, which the boys think are now alone necessary to gratify completely their swelling military pride.

There would be a row over a matter of this kind in almost any town other than Plainfield. The spirit of brotherly love is all pervading here. Opposing factions abuse one another only with honey. The Friends have in their fold many of the most respected men in town. The town generally prefers a pruning hook to a spear.

It remains for the irreverent soldier cubs to talk of Quaker interference and intolerance. The Board of Education and the Friends are content with assuring each other that both are Christian bodies, equally opposed to anything like threatening and slaughter. But, leaving war out of the question the Board does not think the boys should be deprived of the pleasure of playing soldier.

Even in Plainfield there were truants and idle boys who could not see anything useful in geometry and geography. To interest these scholars and give the boys generally a better carriage, a healthful companionship and a fine exercise, the Board, after, some consideration, sanctioned last fall the formation of the cadet corps. The boys were all enthusiasm. They had long burned with envy because of the blue and gold uniforms of luckier fellows in a private school here. Uniforms were accordingly bought, and the High School lads were soon carrying their chins up and their chests out and wheeling like regulars. There were no more truants and there was less illness.

But what is drill without arms? The boys longed for the firing exercises and the public marching under arms. A few weeks ago the rifles were ordered.

It was then that the Society of Friends which had watched the growing war spirit with anxiety, thought it necessary to protest—deplore is better word, perhaps. No one of them imagined that the cadets might fall to sucking the town, but it accordance with the tenets of their faith, the Friends have always set their faces against wars and rumors of wars.

So, when the Board of Education met last Monday evening, A. M. Powell, representing the Quakers, sent a communication expressing heartfelt regret that military drill had been introduced, and that guns were being secured. The Friends protested, wrote Mr. Powell, because they believed that a fostering of the military spirit was opposed to the teaching of the Divine Master.

At last P. C. Lounsbury, who is in business in New York and who is the secretary of the Board, said he thought every Christian must be in accord with the general idea expressed in the communication. The other members nodded gravely.

Mr. Lounsbury's proposition was one from which it was not safe to dissent. After some silence some one moved that the secretary courteously acknowledge the receipt of the letter. Then the matter was dropped.

It will end there. The boys will have their guns and their glory, and the fostering of the war spirit will be continued. Brotherly love, however, is still undiminished, and covers the town as a mantle even though a mischievous drill sergeant will say occasionally:

"I tell thee, brother Harry, thy erring feet are not at an angle of forty-five degrees nor are thine eyes front."

An Entertaining Lecturer.

Captain Jack Crawford will deliver a lecture in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church next Saturday evening for the benefit of Marconnier chapel. Dion Boucicault, the famous dramatist, says of him: "When an entertainer can cause smiles and tears to struggle for supremacy on the faces of his auditors, his powers cannot be questioned."

ODD DECISIONS IN LAW.

W. A. LORD SUES FOR $10,000 AND IS MULCTED FOR $5,000 HIMSELF.

Lord Lost His First Suit, and Was Then Made Defendant and by a Technicality of Law Was Beaten in the Other.

The Dry Goods Economist, of New York, published last week the following report of two suits in which William A. Lord, who lives at Netherwood, and who is well known in this city, was one of the principals:

A suit of special interest to commission firms and employers was decided last week before Judge McLean, at the Special Term of the Supreme Court in the suit of William A. Lord, as ex empleo of the firm of Spielmann & Co., for damages for an alleged breach of contract. Spielmann & Co., who are one of the leading dry-goods commission houses of this city, with headquarters at 87 Grand street, employed the appellant in this case from 1892 to 1893, to manage their tie silk department.

The suit of Lord was for $10,000 damages, and for an accounting of all the properties of the department for several years prior to 1893. Lord claimed to have a partnership interest in the business, and that under his contract with the defendants, he had a proprietary interest in the stock of the department. He also affirmed that in March, 1893, he visited Europe, in accordance with his usual custom, for the purpose of conferring with the foreign manufacturers with whom the firm dealt, and procuring sample collections for the ensuing year. That, on his return in May, 1893, Spielmann & Co. forbade his entrance to their store, and refused any explanation for their so doing.

In their answer, the firm of Spielmann & Co. claimed that Lord was an employe of theirs, subject to their control. That in the spring of 18 3 they were made aware that he (Lord) contemplated abandoning the business of the firm, and starting out on his own account, with other parties, prior to the termination of his contract with them; that his contract ran until the first of January, 1894. That with this purpose Lord endeavored to obtain from the manufacturers, whose accounts were in the hands of Spielmann & Co., promises that they would transfer these accounts to him if he left Spielmann & Co. As an inducement for their so doing, Lord, it is stated, affirmed that he would be able to make arrangements which would result to the greater advantage of these manufacturers.

Spielmann & Co. testified that Lord had approached their manufacturers with this intent in February, 1893, and in March of that year, when the appellant expressed his intention of going to Europe, they forbade his departure and told him that if he should go, contrary to their instructions, it would be considered a breach of the contract. They further testified that Lord went to Europe in defiance of this command, and while there sought to divert the trade of the foreign manufacturers from Spielmann & Co. to himself, as before set forth. In consequence of this Spielmann & Co. terminated their contract with Lord and refused him entrance to their building.

Judge McLean dismissed Lord's complaint, holding that he was merely an employe of Spielmann & Co., and that because of his misconduct they were justified in discharging him. The Court also ordered a judgment against Lord and in favor of Spielmann & Co. for $5 025.23, the amount of cash advances made to him while he was in Spielmann & Co.'s employ, over and above the amount to which he was entitled.

MEDICAL MEN KICK.

CONTRACTS WITH BENEFICIAL ORGANIZATIONS FORBID.

Union County Society's New Ruling—It Means More Expense to Associations Employing Physicians—Hard Feelings.

The Union County Medical Society, which includes a large number of physicians from all over the county, in regular session have passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That it is unlawful for a member of this society to enter into any kind of contract whatsoever, either with a family or a beneficiary society, to attend such family or society as its physician, even if such family or society should agree to pay the regular fees specified in the fee bable; and be it also

Resolved, That any member who is at present the physician of a family or beneficiary society under contract with the same, be and is hereby directed to give notice to such family or society that his contract with them must terminate on February 1, if possible, or not later than April 1 next. These resolutions do not apply to municipalities or railroad corporations.

This announcement has created much excitement in all the secret and benevolent societies of Elizabeth especially the Independent Order of Foresters, which now has eight courts and nearly 1,300 members. It means a much greater expense to the various courts, as by the old agreements so much per capita per year was paid to each doctor or an average of a dollar a visit. With the new rule the regular fee of two dollars a visit will be charged.

A number of the members of the medical society who have a list of societies to look after are incensed at the society's action, and they will resign before they will break their contracts.

In several instances doctors have sent in their resignations to their benevolent orders, causing not a little inconvenience and no little ill-feeling over their breach of conduct.

The druggists of Elizabeth have also decided to raise the price of subscriptions to benevolent orders from a contract price of twenty cents per prescription to the regular price, with ten per cent discount.

Somerset st., North Plainfield.

If you have not engaged your work I should be pleased to do it for you.

I buy only first-class Marble and Granite and do not sell unless at prices that will enable me to put up the work with credit to myself and justice to the parties purchasing.

I employ no agents, and therefore am enabled to make a reduction in the price of my work to the customer, of the commission generally paid to agents.

I am under a very small expense in running my shop, myself and my son doing the larger portion of the work, and we personally attend to the setting of all work, and look upon business in this light, that Good Work and Good Material, at Fair Prices, is a standing advertise for my business, which will tend to build up trade, and I feel safe to warrant that no dealer can sell you the same material and same work any cheaper than I can.

Hoping to be favored with your patronage, I am yours respectfully,

The above reports were received and filed.

In a communication W. J. Buttfield stated that he had conformed to the grade in laying a sidewalk on the northwest side of West End avenue, and had found that the grade was wrong. The matter was referred to the street committee.

On account of poor health, E. P. Stevens resigned as a member of the Board of Health. Later it was accepted and the Mayor appointed N. B. Smalley to fill the unexpired term which terminates January 15th, 1899.

G. F. White, Thomas Rutledge, J. H. McVey, A. Lutkins, H. H. Lowrie, L. Bird, Mary Shreeve, residents and owners of one-fourth of lineal feet on Warren street, petitioned Council to close Warren street in the proposed opening of Watchung avenue. The matter was referred to the Street Committee.

Mr. Peck reported that all bids on the fire tower and bell were in and it was expected that a report would be made, but owing to the fact that the Committee had been unable to hold a meeting to consider the matter, it would have to be laid over till next meeting. He stated that the Electric Light Company had discontinued the service in blowing the fire gong and that a man had been engaged to remain at the engine house day and night to look after the bell, till other arrangements could be made. The report was received and filed.

Mr. Smith reported that $12.50 worth of work had been done during the month, chiefly within the past few days. In regard to the petition to change the name of Emily street to Lincoln place, the Committee recommended that the change be made. He reported that snow plows had done excellent work. The only damage to Harrison street during the recent storm was in the gutters.

Commissioner J. H. Cooley made a brief report in relation to the Watchung avenue opening, and stated that the commissioners had met, organized and were at work. They had met with excellent success thus far. He said that the sentiment seemed to be in favor of closing Warren street as the land would be of little value to the property owners. On the other hand it would be a great saving to them. He reported further that as soon as the petition was acted upon the commissioners could go ahead, and report at an early date. Mayor Hegeman gave his word that it would be attended to.

After the bills were presented, audited and ordered paid, Mr. Schutt offered a resolution that in view of closing Warren street, the clerk be instructed to give such notice and that objections to the same be made not later than February 27th. It was so ordered.

A resolution by Mr. Smith provided for the drawing of a warrant for $1,561.16 to meet the eight months note of $1,500, the same to be charged to the road account. Mr. Valiant offered an ordinance which provides for the changing of the name of Emily street to Lincoln place. It was adopted on second reading and laid over till next meeting for final passage.

Mr. Valiant offered a resolution requesting the Finance committee to meet before February 21st, for the purpose of examining the books and accounts of the Collector, Clerk and Overseer of the Poor. It was adopted, as was also another resolution by the same Councilman that Tuesday, March 3d, be set as the time for the Board of Registry to meet and revise the registry list.

A resolution which provides that the collector submit a report on March 6th, of all taxable borough real estate in years previous to 1895, was offered by Mr. Valiant and adopted.

Mr. Howell made a motion that when the Council adjourned it be to meet Friday evening, February 21st. The motion prevailed.

Mr. Peck then offered a resolution, which was adopted, that a warrant be drawn for $1,912.50 to meet the three months' note of $1,900, and that it be charged to the fire department account.

Mr. Valiant at this point called up the ordinance relating to shows, entertainments, and also the amendment to the ordinance in regard to bicycles. On his motion an amendment was made to the former so as to read "excepting residents of the borough giving entertainments for benevolent purposes." This was done so that the churches in the borough and other like institutions would not be obliged to secure a license every time they gave an entertainment. Both ordinances were adopted on the whole, and after the usual time limit, which is February 29th, they will go into effect.

The ordinance relating to Sunday closing was laid on the table, after which the Council adjourned.

A LITERARY FEAST.

The First Event in Mrs. Hall's Series is a Great Success.

The first of a series of three entertainments was given Thursday afternoon, when at the residence of Chas. E. Case, of Central avenue, Mrs. Laura E. Richards read selections from her own writings, much to the delight of Watchung people. The charming writer of story and verse be spoke favorable interest in her, but additional interest was felt in her coming, because she is the daughter of Julia Ward Howe, whom all honor, and the sister of Florence Howe Hall, of whom Plainfielders are proud. The spacious house of Mr. Case, admirably adapted for such a function, was well filled with an appreciative and enthusiastic audience. Mrs. Richard's personel is very pleasing, her voice good and her elocution natural and effective. After pleasant and elaborate introduction by Mrs. Hall, Mrs. Richards read an extract from Captain January, in which the hearty old sea captain tells to his darling little granddaughter the story of her own rescue when a babe lashed to a spar on the bosom of her dead mother, she came from the wrecked vessel to be the light and joy of the old captain's life. The sad narrative, reverently told and the childish pleasure over the tragic story of the babe made a strangely pathetic mingling of sentiments.

The next selection was a poem descriptive of the fall of the Ottoman Empire. The first division of the poem is called "The Sick Man" and represents Turkey in a dying condition surrounded by the different Nations, greedy to take her ill-gotten possessions. The second division is named from a seatence, which interpreted means "Carthage Is Fallen," and describes the downfall that is in store. Another poem followed entitled "Great-Grandfather." The request of the boy for his great-grandfather's old gun to shoot sparrows, draws from the boy's father the story of Bunker Hill and the execution done by the old gun in shooting redcoats. The gun is refused the boy for his sparrow shooting.

The entertainment concluded with a dialect story called "Jim Kellas, in which the nautical language of seafarers, the „homely phrase of the down-easter and the patois of the Spaniard are all charmingly given. The story itself is unique, the prisoner in jail having stolen a hen from Miss Palmyra Henshaw and being required by the selectmen and the "upper house" to pay the penalty in work. He begins his labors by ministering to Miss Henshaw and proves himself so valuable an assistant, that the story ends with his marriage to the spinster.

The minority of the Legislature is not such a nonentity as the Republicans imagined before the first of January.

Senator Voorhees is liable to get his party tangled up in a perplexed mess with anti-race legislation if he is not careful.

It is an admirable thing for Plainfield to be complete in municipal improvements and acquisitions, but the Common Council needs to proceed carefully. The tax rate should not go any higher.

THE CORONER'S JURY.

COUNTY OFFICIALS INVESTIGATE THE DEATH OF THE NEGRO GIANT.

One Witness Swears that Ben Hall, One of the Men Charged With the Assault, Told Him that He Done Up Vanderveer.

The inquest in the case of the State to learn the cause of the death of John Vanderveer, colored, which occurred at Muhlenberg Hospital late Monday afternoon, was opened in the city court room Thursday afternoon at 2:15 by Coroner Keefe, of Elizabeth, Prosecutor N. Y. Dungan, of Somerville, and Assistant Prosecutor Dunn, of Elizabeth, were present for the plaintiff, while Steele & Meehan, of Somerville, represented the defense. Official Court Stenographer Herbert W. Knight, of Elizabeth, was present and recorded the proceedings. The following men compose the jury: J. E. Mosher, Garrett Wood, Charles Howard, I. D. TenEyck, W. W. Coriell and H. E. Cramer.

The first witness called was Dr. Davis, of Bound Brook. He was the attending physician in the early part of John Vanderveer's illness, and he described the man's condition when he was first called. He said that he found a cut over the left eye in the forehead which was about a half-inch deep. He took several stitches in the cut and after that at different times Vanderveer complained of severe pains in his head. The doctor did not think there was a fracture of any bones. Vanderveer had told him that Benjamin Hall, Horace Hall and George Brokaw had attacked him on Christmas morning.

John Huff was the next witness, but he knew very little about the affair, excepting what he had heard.

Dr. E. W. Hedges was then placed on the stand and stated very briefly his knowledge of the case.

He said that about 10 o'clock in the morning, on Jan. 30th, when Vanderveer was brought to the hospital, he saw the man and found him in an unconscious state, with a high fever. He noticed that the scar on the forehead was healed. In all he attended him a day and a half, and during that time the man was violent.

Vanderveer's father had told him that he, Vanderveer, said that some persons had sandbagged him. But his condition improved and he seemed to regain strength, when suddenly he went into a stupor. Two days afterward he brought him to the hospital.

The next witness was Dr. Probasco. He stated that he attended Vanderveer from Saturday to Sunday morning last. Dr. Hedges having called his attention to the case. He found the man in an unconscious state, and whenever he saw him his condition was the same. He made no diagnosis of the case; and said that twenty-four hours previous to his death no medicine was administered.

Charles Riker, of Bound Brook said that on Christmas morning he heard men's voices near his home on Main street. It was very early and at that time he was not able to tell who the people were. Twenty minutes later he went down the street 100 yards and saw Ben Hall, Horace Hall and George Brokaw, carrying John Vanderveer from the street to the gutter, where they left him. He made a strangely affecting mingling of sentiments.

The next witness was Peter C. Vanderveer, the father of the dead man, stated that about New Year's day his son told him that Ben Hall, Horace Hall and Geo. Rogers had struck him. Justice of the Peace Ayers Coddington told in a few words what he knew about the case, but Vanderveer had told him that he didn't know who struck him.

Andrew J. Sherman, colored, a waiter at the County House, Somerville, said that on Christmas Eve he attended a dance at Port Reading Hotel, at which there was a free fight. After the men had been released on bail he met Ben Hall, who then the latter remarked that he had done John up. Horace Hall said it was a settlement of an old grudge between John and Ben.

George P. Norton, of Somerville, said that on Wednesday, Jan. 27th, he called Ben Hall in his house, and in talking about the affair Ben said he done to John, and that Horace Hall and George Brokaw had nothing to do with it.

Mrs. Ritchey, of South Bound Brook, said how she found Vanderveer lying in the gutter when she, with some friends, returned from the ball at the Port Reading Hotel.

It makes but little difference to the people who was instrumental in getting the advantageous terms for the government in the issuing of bonds. This time there is no opportunity for cries of fraud or oppression.

Among those who were bitterly opposing John Kean only recently there is now a disposition to favor his election as a delegate-at-large to St. Louis. This is especially true of the friends of Senator Foster M. Voorhees, says the New York Tribune this morning.

Dr. G. C. Osgood,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
Dr. J. F. Kincheloe,

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular proprietary articles, we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

ATHLETES MEET.

Students Gather in This City and Form an Association.

The New Jersey Interscholastic Athletic Association was formally organized at the High School building on Saturday by representatives from the following schools: Plainfield High School, Newark Academy, Pingry's School, of Elizabeth, Stevens Preparatory School, of Hoboken, Rutgers Preparatory School, of New Brunswick, and the Montclair High School. The Paterson High School and the Peddie Institute, of Hightstown, were unable to send delegates, but stated their wish to join if the league was successfully organized.

The delegates present were: George P. Smith and Wilbur F. Cornwell, of the Plainfield High School; A. H. Mitchell and H. Schulz, of Newark Academy; G. Myers and A. B. Eaton, of Pingry's School; W. E. Probasco and G. G. Stanford, of Stevens School; T. S. Janeway and D. K. Hoffman, of Rutgers School; and subsequently Oliver Badgley and Warren Lyon, of Montclair High School.

The meeting was called to order by George P. Smith and the following officers then elected: President, George P. Smith, of Plainfield High School; vice-president, A. B. Eaton, of Pingry's School; secretary, A. H. Mitchell, of Newark Academy; treasurer, W. E. Probasco, of Stevens School. The executive committee will consist of one member from each school. A constitution was then drawn up and adopted.

Each school must hold an athletic meet every year. The State athletic meet is to be held on the first Saturday in June, and the annual meeting of the association on the same day. No one over twenty-one years old will be allowed to compete at the annual athletic meet. The by-laws were then drawn up and adopted. The executive committee is given complete charge of the athletic meet and will decide all protests. The association will control track athletics, base ball, foot ball and cricket.

The executive committee was elected to consist of the following members: H. Schulz, Newark Academy; T. S. Meyers, Pingry's School; G. G. Stanford, Steven's School; D. K. Hoffman, Rutger's School; Wilbur F. Cornwell, Plainfield High School; Oliver Badgley, Montclair High School.

Crippled By a Fall.

"When my little daughter was four years old she had a fall which resulted in hip disease. She became very nervous and the pain in her limb was so severe that she would wake and scream at night and I thought she would have fits. The doctor ordered a brace to be put on and I began giving her Hood's Sarsaparilla. She wore the brace fifteen months, and kept giving her Hood's Sarsaparilla during this time, and no one would know that she was ever a cripple except that she limps a little in walking. She is now the picture of health and growing rapidly." Mrs. C. L. VanDyke, Box 3, Rocky Hill, N. J.

Fences Blown Down.

The fence at the corner of Somerset street and Jackson avenue, opposite the school, was blown down by the wind Thursday night. A portion of the fence belonging to John Darling, of Prospect avenue, was also blown down.

DELIGHTFUL STUDIO TEA.

Mrs. Colles T. Pond Exhibits the Hand Painted China of Herself and Pupils.

Delicate china, painted in an artistic manner, was tastefully arranged about the parlors of the charming home of Mrs. Colles T. Pond on Willow avenue Saturday afternoon and and her studio tea was largely attended by those who came to look at and admire the beautiful work of their hostess and her pupils. The tea lasted from two until six o'clock and was a charming affair throughout. The following were received at the door by Mrs. Pond, Mrs. Wheaton S. Lowrie, Mrs. Samuel Clark, Miss Mary Brown, Miss Florence Pond and Miss Grace Langdon. In the back parlor the china was arranged in tasteful array on small stands and tables.

There were plates of all patterns, and included one of the latest things in china painting, the brown and raised gold work and the raised gold on blue. Besides the plat s on the first table, there was a writing set including blotter holders, ink well, tray and all, everything of the finest china decorated with small bunches of roses and a blue border.

A lovely chocolate set in apple green and gold, ornamented the next table. This set was part of the exhibit of the New York Ceramic Club at the Atlanta Exposition which took a gold medal. Mrs. Pond is a member and the corresponding secretary of the club and secured honorable mention in a recent club contest.

Miss Mary Brown's work was mostly in pale yellow with pink and yellow roses, and mirror frame, several Trilby hearts, a hair receiver and a mirror were among her best works. Great aptitude was shown in Miss Samuel Clark's work, which was mostly in pale blue. Her forsteny and china clock were very beautiful. A pale green oatmeal bowl was exhibited as a portion of Miss Grace Langdon's work.

The dining table presented a very attractive appearance with its pink decorations. The chandelier was also festooned in pink and and a broad pink ribbon dropped from it to the opposite corners of the table where they were fastened with large bows.

Mrs. Fred Green and Miss Jennie Jeffers presided at the table while five young ladies assisted in passing the dainty cups of chocolate and tea. They were as follows: Miss Ethel Green, Miss Martha Covert, Miss Arline Drake, Miss Lulu French and Miss Delephine Bowers.

THE THING FOR BUSINESS MEN.

A Collecting Agency That Comes With Good Recommendations.

A long-felt want has been supplied at last to the merchants of Plainfield and vicinity, who now have an opportunity of subscribing to a thoroughly responsible mercantile agency. The Press refers to the New Jersey Mercantile Agency, incorporated under the laws of New Jersey with a capital stock of $25,000. The home office of this agency is rooms 724 and 725 Prudential Building, Newark, N. J. They also have branch offices in different parts of the State, and have recently established a branch in this city at 101 East Front street. They have secured Craig A. Marsh, Esq., as counsel to attend to the legal branch of the agency's business in Union county. Under their arrangement all claims entrusted to the agency for collection are paid direct to the subscriber or at the office of Mr. Marsh. The methods employed by this agency in handling poor and worthless claims are very effective, and it is predicted for them the success which they are justly entitled to.

A total of 186 bills have been introduced into the Legislature during the four weeks they have been in session and just one of them has been passed and become a law. In the Senate four bills have been passed. A number of important bills lay dormant in the committees of the Senate, because, it is claimed, they were introduced by Democrats. This is a record that the reform Legislature ought to be ashamed of.

BOUND BROOK IN RUINS.

The Opposing Elements, Fire and Water, Almost Annihilate the Town.

A NIGHT OF TERROR SPENT BY RESIDENTS

The Damage Will Run Way Up Into the Thousands —One Man Lost His Life in the Seething Current in the Attempt to Rescue People From Their Perilous Position—The Business Portion of the Town Wrecked By the Flames—Details of the Awful State of Affairs.

From The Press of Feb. 7.

Never before has this section of New Jersey experienced such a catastrophe as was enacted by two diverse elements—fire and water—at Bound Brook, last night. Providentially, the loss of life was only two, and for this the people should give up thanks to Heaven. The details of the affair follow:

Fire and water combined last night to destroy the borough of Bound Brook, and succeeded fairly well in the business portion of the town. The great amount of water that fell nearly all day caused the trouble and resulted in thousands of dollars of damage. Bound Brook is situated on the north bank of the Raritan river, while Bound, Green and Middle brooks all pass in or near the town before joining the Raritan. These streams were swollen early in the morning, but gradually grew in proportions until they overflowed their banks. The Middle brook and several other streams west of the village were the first to pour their torrents into the surrounding country. The bridge over Middle brook on the Jersey Central, about half a mile west of the town, was unable to carry the enormous amount of water that came rushing down and it followed along the bank of the railroad to find a way to the river.

At about 3 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon the water reached the town and it quickly rose until Main street, the principal business thoroughfare, was submerged to the depth of seved feet, while in the lower districts the water was over ten feet deep. The open lots, east and west of the borough, resembled an inland sea, and the houses, except those on the high ground, were completely flooded and the inmates driven to the second stories.

It was the same case in the flooded district of the town, for the water came into the first stories and the residents were driven upstairs to await the going down of the water. The water followed the railroad bank toward Dunellen for about one-quarter of a mile, and then escaped under the bridges. The openings were of insufficient size to allow all the water to pass through and that region was submerged for almost a mile. The violent wind added to the violent current that tore through the town.

As soon as the first signs of a flood were seen, the Bound Brook fire department took all the apparatus out of the engine house and stored them in the truck house, which is situated on the high ground just behind the business section of the city. Between 7 and 8 o'clock flames were discovered in L. D. Cook & Co.'s lumber yard. The cause of the fire is not exactly known but it is thought that the line in the lumber yard became slacked and ignited the lumber.

The flames spread rapidly until the entire mass of lumber was on fire. The lumber yard was a large one, about 300 feet square, and had been stocked only recently. As much of the fire department as could reach the high ground went to work to prevent the spread of the flames. The next building to catch fire was the large Presbyterian church. It was built of wood and burned like tinder.

The firemen worked with might and main and soon had four streams of water on the fire, two from East street and two from Second street. But it was impossible to do anything but save the adjacent property. The house and store of James T. Ferrie caught, but was extinguished before the fire had gained much headway. Bound Brook Hall backs right up to the lumber yard, as does the post-office and several smaller buildings. These repeatedly started but little damage was done. Alger's house on East street was also severely burned. The church was burned to the water's edge and at about two o'clock was a mass of smouldering ruins. The lumber yard, however, burned fiercely all night and attracted the attention of people for miles around by the bright light in the sky.

The Raritan river itself rose fifteen feet in ten hours and overflowed its banks all the way to New Brunswick where the water was three feet deep in the business portion of the city, near the river. At New Brunswick, the loss is estimated at $150,000. At Bound Brook, the Raritan presented a very different appearance, changing from a slow and sedate stream, to a raging torrent that rushed along carrying everything before it.

The water was about two feet below the bridge that connects Bound Brook and South Bound Brook. The large factory of the Standard Paint Company, which is located a short distance below the bridge on the south bank, was inundated and the fires in the furnaces extinguished. Considerable damage was done to the property of the company, while the pump works, which is situated just below the other factory, suffered also from the high water.

Below the bridge on the north side, there is a small saloon and hotel about one hundred yards from the river. When the torrents poured through the valley, the occupants, a man and woman, were placed in a precarious position. An attempt at rescue was made and a man named Miller attempted to reach the place in a boat. The boat was swamped, however, and Miller disappeared. It is supposed that he was drowned. The works of the American Engine Company are on the same bank a little farther down but on higher ground. Had the water reached them the damage would have been extensive as the buildings contained some very valuable machinery.

The water soon overflowed the railroad near the Middle brook bridge and by ten o'clock nearly a mile of the railroad was under water. Bridges were washed out and the track undermined. The water extended toward Dunellen for about one hundred feet beyond the Bound Brook station. The station, telegraph office, and Union News Company's stand were all partially flooded. No trains passed through Bound Brook after six o'clock last night. The five o'clock train from Jersey City went through all right, but after that one train was laid up at Bound Brook and the rest at Dunellen, from which place all the trains started this morning. The Lehigh Valley railroad and the Port Reading railroad were both blockaded by the water and several trains were stalled on each line. Plainfield first heard of the fire at about ten o'clock. An alarm of fire was turned in from box 45 by some one who saw the bright light in the direction of Bound Brook. The department was just returning when Superintendent Olhausen of the Jersey Central railroad, and a Bound Brook fireman, arrived here on a locomotive. The Plainfield department was asked to send some long ladders and hooks to Bound Brook. There was no need of a steamer or hose, as the fire was too far from the track to be reached.

Two coal cars were coupled on behind the engine and the apparatus placed in them. Then a detail of firemen, under the command of First Assistant Chief J. A. Martin, and a few others, climbed in and the special train started at about 10:30 o'clock. It began to hail and the shivering crowd was glad to huddle together for warmth. At last the party reached the scene of action and a horrible sight met their eyes.

The railroad embankment was apparently a long point projecting out into an immense lake. The water was on every side and the houses, with the water half-way up the first story, loomed up like grim spectres.

The burning lumber yard and church lit up the scene until it was almost as bright as day. The cold wind and hail made it impossible to stand still very long and the party of Plainfielders, which numbered about one hundred, tramped up and down the track or took refuge in the stalled trains and the Lehigh Valley railroad station, which was not flooded. It was impossible to reach the high ground on the other side of the flood as the current was swift and timbers, outhouses and other debris made navigation impossible.

Richard Stevens, of this city, sent a folding canvas boat up in the train, but the chances of reaching the other side were too slim, and it was not used. John Petrie and several other Plainfielders discovered a rowboat near the depot and brought it down. The nearest building to the track was a livery stable and on the roof of that was a man. A line was thrown to him. Two of the longest ladders were fastened together, and with a telegraph pole as a central brace, they were stretched over. The boat was pushed alongside of the ladder and William Robinson, of this city, at the risk of his life, managed to reach the roof. He learned that two women and five children were in a house in close proximity to the fire and that this man wanted to get them to a place of safety. He was given a short ladder and Robinson returned to the embankment. It appeared to be an all night affair and the Plainfielders prepared to spend it as best they could by either sleeping or wandering around on the small space not yet flooded.

To a Daily Press reporter a Bound Brook man told the story of the very rapid rise of the water and how he and friend were caught on the embankment on their way home. He estimated the loss by both fire and water as several hundred thousand dollars.

At about 2 o'clock the "special" returned to Plainfield with its load of ladders and men.

Somerville and South Branch also also felt the high water. Bridges and abutments were washed away while portions of the track were undermined. An unknown man was drowned in the stream near North Branch. The trains were stalled at Somerville, while all telegraphic connections with Bound Brook were cut off. The telephone office at Bound Brook remained open until the operator was driven out by the increasing water, and the telegraph wires in all directions were broken.

Raritan suffered considerably from the storm. The high water washed the electric motor power plant and invaded the finishing room at the Raritan Woolen Mills, owned by Louis Mack. A large amount of valuable cloth was destroyed. The famous old Finderne bridge gave way during the evening and carried the Port Reading bridge with it. The embankment of the Port Reading railroad, which runs parallel to the Raritan river, was swept away level with the river. The Delaware and Raritan canal was partially washed out, but the full extent of damage to it has not yet been ascertained. One end of the big bridge of the P. & R. railroad over the Raritan river was forced over by the raging waters and all traffic stopped.

Somerville, Dunellen and Plainfield were all invaded by an anxious crowd of travelers and commuters, who spent the night in trying to get to their destination, but without success.

THE LATEST NEWS.

A Daily Press Reporter Writes From Bound Brook This Morning.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Bound Brook, Feb. 7, 12 m.—In the parlors of the Berkeley Hotel, opposite the Central Railroad depot, where The Daily Press reporter is writing up his account, the paper on the wall shows a high water mark of over three feet. Taking into consideration the fact that there is a raised platform of nearly two feet and then from the sidewalk to the street two more, it will easily be seen that over seven feet of water passed through the main street. Over $100,000 damage is done the different storekeepers along the main street. The heaviest losers will be Wm. H. Powlison, grocers; Alpaugh & Rutt, grocers; Bonny Bros., grocers; A. S. Coriell, grocer and dry goods; Isaac Giles, baker and confectioner. Wm. Schure, baker; Hotel Berkeley and several others.

L. D. Cook & Co's loss is over $45,000, with about an insurance of $20,000.

The Presbyterian church, which was burned to the ground, had for its pastor Rev. T. E. Davis. Everything was lost. The church was insured for $10,000, while an additional $2,000 covered the organ. Plans were already out for a new church edifice for this congregation in another part of the town. The estimated loss on the church is not taken into consideration. The organ was a first-class one.

Fred Miller, of South Bound Brook, while attempting to reach Mulvey's Port Reading Hotel last night was drowned. His body was taken down the Raritan river and lost. A report also says that John Connolly lost his life, but it is not verified.

The body of Fred Miller who was drowned near Mulvey's Port Reading hotel, is tied along the river near where he lost his life, awaiting the arrival of a Middlesex county coroner.

Crowds of people throng all along the line of the Central railroad, even as far as the White House station were here to criticise the unfortunate flow of fire and water that has again devastated Bound Brook. The water in its course through Main street of the borough did considerable damage to the recently completed sewer. In the centre of the street where the sewer runs the water excavated the earth for nearly three feet.

The bank of the Delaware and Raritan canal, directly opposite the Bound Brook station, is bursted, and the water is madly pouring into the Raritan river.

The large crowd that occupied the piazza of the Berkeley Hotel were treated to many an amusing sight by the anxious ones who insisted upon crossing by boat or plank, which had an easy trick of throwing about every fourth person into about four feet of water. The laughter that greeted every unfortunate was so loud that it made everyone in good humor.

Ed. Gilmore, the section boss of the C. R. R., with all available men is replacing the tracks in an expeditious manner.

The first photographers to "pull the cloth" was Hastings & Miller, of 113 Nassau street, New York.

Three boats have been working a "pole-ferry" across the Main street all morning.

At the time of going to press the water is rapidly receding and at two o'clock it is possible to cross the street.

THE FIRE OF 1881.

Bound Brook Was Once Before Devastated by Flames.

On Tuesday, April 29, 1881, Bound Brook was visited by a disastrous fire. A spark from a passing locomotive on the Jersey Central railroad set fire to a frame house of James Ramsey, just west of the depot. A brisk southwest wind carried the flames down Main to John street. The post office and a large number of business stores and residences were destroyed. Help from the Plainfield fire department was sent, but before the flames were extinguished twenty families were made homeless and two acres of ground were burned over. The Constitutionalist on the following Thursday reported the following incident in saving the Presbyterian church, which was burned last night:

"Messrs J. Gavett and P. B. Vail, of the Plainfield Bicycle Club, who were coming from New Brunswick on their machines, saw the smoke and arrived on the scene just in time to save the old Presbyterian church which has been standing since 1725. The athletes found that the roof had caught from falling sparks and that the crowd around were standing stupidly gazing with sorrow on the prospects of the building's annihilation. They succeeded in gaining the interior of the building through a hole in the roof and soon put out the starting fire."

The fire involved a loss of $80,000.

MAN KILLED AT RARITAN.

Walking along the Track to Find a Place of Safety.

Raritan, N. J., Feb. 7th.—Dennis Murphy, of Raritan, was killed on the Central railroad west of the Raritan station last evening. He was unmarried and about 45 years of age. A trackwalker found the remains alongside the track.

The Raritan canal burst through the banks just above Farmer Long's about one mile west of the town and the water rushed wildly through the yards of the Raritan woolen mills doing considerable damage. A report is in circulation that John Fleming and Walter Long while out shooting muskrats yesterday afternoon in the vicinity where the banks burst, were compelled to climb a tree where both the young men remained for the night.

Somerville, N. J., February 7, 1896. —The bridge at Finderne was washed away by the freshet of yesterday. The bridge on the South Branch of the Jersey Central, and sixty feet of the embankment at Neshanic, was also taken down the stream. Yesterday afternoon Robert Shaw, the delivery clerk for N. B. Richardson, was out delivering orders, and in attempting to cross Peter's brook, usually a quite insignificent stream, the horse and wagon was carried away and lost, while the driver narrowly escaped with his life. Had not assistance been at hand he would not have lived to tell his experience.

Robert J. Shaw and Daniel Kenearth, of Somerville, attempted to drive over the High street bridge in Somerville. The water had risen above the level of the bridge and swept horse, wagon and occupants overboard. Shaw & Kencarth were rescued, but the horse, which belonged to Grocer U. B. Richardson, of Somerville, was drowned and the wagon wrecked.

Owing to the high water, which threatened the furnaces, the American Engine Company's Works shut down today. The high wind of last night threatened the main building and it had to be tied down.

HARRY J. SARGEANT DEAD.

A Well-Known Theatrical Manager Ends His Career in Poverty.

Word was received in New York city yesterday that Henry J. Sargeant, formerly a prominent theatrical manager, had died in Leeds, England, in one of the city institutions for the poor.

H. J. Sargeant was well-known in this country. He lived on Arlington avenue, opposite the city park, in this city for two years and was well-known by many people here. He first came into prominence in theatrical circles as the manager of Mme. Modjeska on her first tour of this country.

He was always conspicuous in his attire, and acquired the soubriquet of "Scarfpin Harry" from the fact that he had a collection of 150 scarfpins.

ON THE SAVANNE RIVER.

Interesting Records of the First "Riel Rebellion."

Where Sir Garnet Wolseley Did Not Win Laurels - A Country Where the Mercury Freezes Very Often in Winter.

Special Savanne (Ont.) Letter

It is doubtful if any place on the American continent is better calculated to impress the spectator with the terrible grandeur of winter than is this "half-way house" on the Canadian Pacific railway, midway between Rat Portage and Port Arthur. Its location is on the height of land where the waters divide and flow to their final destination in widely divergent sections of the continent and the terrible northern gales sweep down in unobstructed and terrific force. The brakeman on a North Dakota freight train may think that he knows something about weather, but a day on this table-land in mid-winter would disabuse him of this idea.

There is much about the place that is keenly interesting, both in its historic and contemporary life. Not a furlong from the railway station, on the banks of the Savanne river, the skeleton remains of four huge bateaux are lifting their gaunt and ribs to the blasts—ironical reminders of the days when Sir Garnet Wolseley, the present commander in chief of Great Britain's armies, was "winning his spurs" on the northwestern frontier. He was assigned the task of putting down the first Riel rebellion, or rather war of defense, of 1869-70, and the settlers here point to the slowly rotting boats as an evidence that he did not find it quite so much of a pastime as he anticipated.

He started at Ottawa, passed through the American canal at Sault Ste. Marie and then put up the Matawan river in these bateaux, passing into Mille Lac lake (Lake of the Thousand Lakes).

Here the soldierly trials of the future chief of Britain's hosts began, for the men, according to the traditions which had survive, were compelled to tramp the old "Dawson road," skirting the Savanne river, and tow the heavy boats, loaded with provisions and "impedimenta of war."

On reaching this point they were forced to abandon the bateaux for the still greater hardships of canoes and portage.

After leaving this place the course of their campaign was into the Lake of the Woods, down Finnipeg river into the lake of that name, and up the Red river to its confluence with the Assiniboine river, where stood old Fort Garry, the seat of the Metis government. Sir Garnet's nothing boats, which he was encouraging to have held a hundred men, are all that is left to tell the tale of the somewhat inglorious expedition; but the sight of them has inspired many a vengeful look in the eyes of the surviving Metis. Old Manitoges, now gone to the happy hunting grounds, was the last survivor of the half-breeds who remembered the expedition. The Des Champs, who boast a direct strain of blood from the St. Simons of France, are the present leaders of the Metis in this section. True to their Indian nature, they lead a roving life and range the entire country from Long lake to Rainy lake.

The student of human nature will be amply repaid for the pains of a visit to this remote place by making the acquaintance of old Allan Grant, the keeper of the railway station and the head man of the colony of 12 or 13 people. Not in the streets of Inverness or on the heather-grown highlands of Scotia is there a purer type of the old-fashioned Scotchman than Allan Grant—and he has a perfect companion in his matronly wife, who once rejoiced in the name of MacNab. This quaint old couple and their buxom daughter appear to have stepped out of the lines of "The Cotter's Saturday Night."

The wild howlings of the northern winds are but music to the fortunate stranger who is safely housed under the hospitable roof of the old Scotchman's big, rambling house, with its cavernous fireplaces, heaped with blazing logs and its walls hung with antlers and other trophies of the chase. Fancy could not picture a more ideal spot in which the lover of winter might spend his favorite season and enjoy the full force of its wild sublimity.

The house, although built entirely of logs, is a palace in comparison with most of the dwellings of this section. It is a story and a half in height, has a broad expanse of roof which slants up from the ends as well as the sides of the structure, and contains more room than one could possibly credit it with at first sight.

The big dining-room, in which the overland passengers are feasted on venison, bear meat, wild fowl, caribou, ptarmigan and other products of the country, is the most pretentious part of the house and is almost medieval in its picturesqueness.

When lighted by the flaming pine logs in the fireplace and by tallow dips ranged along the dining tables in their quaint brass candlesticks, it is a place to inspire the poet and the romancer with fresh visions of the days when romance was the commonplace reality.

To realize that the dog-catcher is an unknown personage in Savanne, one has only to take a glimpse at the space behind the station's kitchen, where the entire canine population of the northwest, so it would seem, congregates each morning to fight over the food which the hurried travelers leave behind them.

In this howling, yelping and ravenous pack are dogs of every degree, color and shape. From a hasty census of the morning's gathering I estimated that every human inhabitant of Savanne must have at least five dogs—with a liberal surplus remaining for distribution among the roving Indian population on the outskirts. The latter would certainly be able to pass through a five-year famine and not know what it is to be without meat in the pot, if the dogs which assemble in the rear of the Grant kitchen should not make a sudden and discreet vanishment.

There is but one inhabitant of the village who lords it over the dogs. He is a half-grown bear cub who guards the door of the Hudson Bay company's warehouse. There is scarcely a cur within the limits of Savanne which has not felt the sting of a blow from Jack's paw, and not a few of them have been permanently put to sleep through this terrible agency.

Of course no man who has escaped from the walls of a city and goes out upon an inviting expanse of snow such as surrounds this place could think of foregoing a dog sledge excursion. But from sad experience let me offer all who may find themselves confronted with this temptation the advice so frequently proffered to those about to marry: "Don't do it."

My experience was this. I determined to visit Lake Ka-pi-si-ka-pi-ka-gu-mak and its famous painted rocks. This lake is about 200 miles northeast of Savanne, and I was told that a good dog team would haul me there in two days, and that it would be a most delightful journey. A-mick (The Beaver) who was said to own the best dog team in Savanne, encouraged this pleasant fiction and agreed to make the trip for five dollars. He was engaged and we set out early one morning. A light-weight buckskin-colored dog named Windigoob was in the lead, followed by four sober-faced dogs, each of which was nearly twice his weight. The path broke out of Savanne with an eager yelp, which quite won my heart, and I marked him for a favorite. Had I known that Windigoob is choice Indian slang for a worthless, shirking cur, I might have suspected the crafty deceiver, but I was blissfully ignorant of the meaning of the word.

The first five miles over the hard snow was exhilarating sport, and I anticipated the entire journey. Then the sledge began to slacken its speed, and I noticed that the traces between Windigoob and the next dog were limp. A-mick also recognized this fact, and the lash of his whip shot out with a stinging crack in the direction of Windigoob's back. The tawny cur heard the descending rawhide; and suddenly rolled himself up into a ball, the other dogs piled upon him, and, as a well-calculated result, the backs of the other dogs caught the lash.

It required a half hour to unravel the tangle into which Windigoob had contrived to knot the traces.

Again we started on and all went well for some ten miles, when a rabbit suddenly started up from a bush beside the trail. An exultant yelp escaped from the leader and was taken up by his followers.

The whole pack turned off at right angles and I was rolled out into the snow. When I had picked myself up the dogs were 40 rods away and the sledge was touching the snow only at rare intervals.

Another hour elasped before we overtook the penitent pack, and again extricated them from the tangled traces.

Fortunately we were near a typical northwest maison—one that had been built and deserted by a couple of adventurous young Englishmen a year before. Here we camped for the night and turned our faces homeward the next morning. To make the experience still more aggravating, the dogs knew well enough that they were going in the direction of the home kennel in the rear of the station kitchen, made the distance without a mishap and in one-fourth the time required for the outward journey.

THEATRICAL.

"The Lady Slavey," opened at the Casino Monday night and is in for a run. Canary & Lederer have observed their policy of princely casting. The group of leading principals they present in the play is already remarkable for extravagant strength. The beauty of the chorus physically and vocally is on a par with all past productions of the firm. Miss Ida Fuller's "fine chance" from "Salome," which is introduced in "The Lady Slavery," is a sensational spectacle that entails the unseen assistance of a corps of 15 manipulators of an intricate combination of calcium and electric lights.

The famous Bostonians began their engagement at the Broadway Theatre in New York, yesterday, presenting an elaborate revival of that most successful and brilliant light opera "Robin Hood." Extravagant fiction is unnecessary to sound the praises of this most perfect organization. For a term of years they have held undisputed sway in the light opera field, and they still remain easily the first. While the mutations of time find some slight changes in the personnel of this organization, the infusion of new material is so adroitly effected and the ensemble are so artistically and carefully sustained that the ear of the auditor is never jarred. The production of "Robin Hood" will be made on a most elaborate scale and since it has not been seen in this city for two years, when its remarkable and unprecedented run at the Garden Theatre was the wonder of the town, there is every reason to believe that its forthcoming presentation will have as great a vogue.

Caught In The Trick.

At various times the questionable methods which the sweat shop News has resorted to to coerce business men to advertise with them have been referred to, and now another instance in this same line has just come to light. At the last meeting of Franklin Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., a bill was presented by the sweat shop News for 75 cents for advertising a lodge matter some time ago. The committee in charge of such matters knew nothing of the claim and after an investigation no one could be found who had ordered the advertising, and the only way it could be accounted for was the suggestion that some member may have given one of the News reporters the information for a news item and the proprietor had taken the liberty to put it in the form of an advertisement, with the hope that it might be overlooked and he would thus increase his revenues. But Mr. Runyon was caught in his little trick and the bill was ordered not paid.

Funeral of Ambassador Runyon.

Arrangements have been completed for the funeral of Ambassador Runyon, whose body is now on its way to this country. The funeral will be held in St. Paul's church, Newark, on February 21st. As Mrs. Runyon and her two younger daughters will not return from Europe until May, the body will be placed in a receiving vault in Mount Pleasant Cemetery, at Newark, until their arrival. The arrangements for the funeral are in charge of Amzi Dodd, who is General Runyon's executor, and Franklin Murphy, a member of St. Paul's church and also a close personal friend of the late Ambassador, who was requested so to act by Mrs. Runyon in a cable message.

Joe Miller Indicted.

Twenty indicted saloonkeepers were arraigned before the Union County Court Saturday, charged with selling liquor on Sunday. The greatest crowd ever seen in the court room was there to witness the proceedings. Eighteen men and two women were called upon to plead. They were held in $500 bail each. The trials will begin on February 24th. Among those indicted was J. B. Miller, one of the proprietors of the Elm House, and formerly of this city.

BASKET BALL.

Among the most enthusiastic basket ball players in the Y. M. C. A. are the members of the business men's gymnasium class, which meets three times a week. For the last two meetings the members of the class have been divided into the Plainfield and North Plainfield teams. The borough team won the two games already played, but the city players make a strong fight for victory this afternoon.

Caught Six Possums.

During last week's flood J. Hazlewood Craig, of Dunellen, captured six opposums near Jefferson avenue, Dunellen. He has five of them alive at present.

The Orator Fined $3.

Jim Emmons, for raising a disturbance at Music Hall Saturday night, was given his choice by City Judge DeMeza between a $3 fine or fifteen days at Elizabeth.

A Baker Assigns.

Owing to his inability to collect accounts that were outstanding, Henry A. Voehl, the North Plainfield baker, on Saturday made an assignment to Jacob Voehl.

LIBRARY LIBERALITY.

Now That Plainfield Has a Library It Should be Properly Supported.

To the Editor of The Daily Press: — I ask space in your columns for the following paragraph of statistics relating to the free public libraries of Massachusetts:

In Massachusetts during the past year, (1895,) sixteen towns and cities have received handsome new library buildings through the munificence of wealthy citizens, while the towns in which no public libraries exist comprise, in all, only two per cent of the population of the State. Of the 353 towns and cities in the State, more than two-thirds (247) have free public libraries under municipal control, and the free libraries in the manager ment of which the town has a voice; 22 have libraries under free rules controlled and 9 have free libraries supported entirely by private individuals. During the past year the State has given $200,000, individuals have given $100,000, and besides this, $150,000 has been voted in bequests for the assistance of public libraries.

While it contains nothing new to many of your readers, it may, by showing what has been done in that State, lead others of them to appreciate more fully the gift of the late Job Male and to encourage with vote and influence a wisely liberal use of public funds for its support and extension. When one considers these Massachusetts figures, together with the fact that the libraries of some of the smaller towns were founded in the last century, and even before the War of Independence, one feels that Plainfield, in view of its wealth and population, waited long enough for a public library. Certainly we cannot now afford to take a grudging attitude toward an institution which should rank in value with our schools, and should command a support no less liberal and hearty.

Howard Prescott Reynolds.

Presence of Mind Saved a Fire.

A peculiar accident occurred Friday evening at the home of Dr. Richards on East Front street. About the time that C. F. Williams, of West Second street, fell upstairs with a lamp, which fact was recorded in The Daily Press, a lighted lamp on the dining room table at Dr. Richards' home exploded. Mrs. Richards was nearby, and wrapping the lamp up in the table cover, threw it out doors before any damage resulted. Two accidents of a like nature seldom happen so near together.

Horse Lost His Life.

While driving along the borough end of Grant avenue, Saturday afternoon, the horse attached to the painter's wagon of Ferdinand Smith, of West Front street, met with an accident that caused its death. The horse stepped in a soft place in the road and sunk in. In struggling to get out, the animal sank deeper and deeper and at last fell over on its side snapping the bones in one leg so that the bone protruded through the flesh. The suffering equine had to be shot to end its sufferings.

If You Can't Eat, Hear the Music.

The ladies having in charge the supper in the lecture room of Trinity Reformed church, on Thursday evening, have thought best to charge an admission fee of ten cents to their friends who are unable to take supper and yet desire to hear the musical programme and eat a plate of cream. Therefore if you cannot take supper with them you can call and hear the musical programme by paying ten cents admission.

A Noted Lecturer Coming.

The next lecture in Mrs. Hall's course will take place on Friday afternoon, February 21st, at Seminary Hall, when Prof. W. Hudson Shaw, M. A., the Oxford University Extension lecturer, will give a historical lecture on Venice. The hour has been changed from three to half past three, and the tickets for this lecture of the course, placed at fifty cents, for the benefit of the teachers and scholars who wish to hear Dr. Shaw.

Mr. Love will move into his house April 1st, when Mr. Tilby will occupy the house No. 87 Duer street, belonging to B. J. Shreve and the present residence of Rev. George Hauser, pastor of the German Reformed church. Mr. Hauser will move into the new parsonage, corner of Duer street and Park place, before April 1st.

A Great Opportunity.

Ten cents per line will be charged by the Leader for obituary notices for all business men who do not advertise while living. Delinquent subscribers will be charged five cents. Advertisers and cash subscribers will receive as good a sendoff as we can manufacture, top of column, next to reading matter, without any charge whatever. Send in your advertisements and subscriptions, as the grip is abroad in the land. Omit doing so and you do your heirs and estate a manifest injustice. —Westfield Leader.

AUCTIONEER WITH DIAMONDS.

George O. Stevens Does Good Business For a Borough Church.

The Guild of the Church of the Redeemer conducted a very successful parcel sale at Dr. Johnstone's school rooms on Prospect place Tuesday. The rooms were well filled with the members and their friends, who bid quickly on the articles for sale. Each person present brought parcels and there were about 150 in all.

George O. Stevens made a fine auctioneer, and an adornment of diamonds, weighing from one ounce to one pound, added very much to his position. Albert Sprowl was his clerk. The prices obtained ranged from one cents to $1.50, but the purchaser did not know what he had until reaching home. The proceeds, which were between $75 and $100, will be placed in the building fund.

The president of the Guild, Mrs. A. E. Faber, Jr., was in charge, assisted by Miss Grace Brown, Miss Emily Thompson, Miss Edith Clapp and Miss Florence Pond. The affair was entirely successful, and a similar entertainment will be held in the near future.

A GOLDEN WEDDING.

Mrs. and W. C. Stanbery, of Scotch Plains, Married Fifty Years.

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Stanbery, of Scotch Plains, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary Tuesday at the home of their son, W. R. Stanbery, where they were assisted by his wife and son. It was the intention of celebrating the event with a large gathering of relatives and friends, but owing to the death of Mrs. Stanbery's brother, Ambassador Theodore Runyon, the festivities were abandoned, and nothing but a quiet family dinner marked the unusual event.

Mr. and Mrs. Stanbery were married in the house on West Front street, opposite the First Baptist church, on Feb. 10th, 1846. Mrs. Stanbery is in rather feeble health, and has been under the physician's care for some time. Mr. Stanbery, however, is in the best of health, and is almost a daily visitor to this city, where he is a member of the Asbestos Club.

A singular incident of the celebration is the fact that the fifth wedding anniversary of their son, W. R. Stanbery, also occurs on the same date that his parents fiftieth takes place.

OVERDOING CHARITY.

Few People Realize How They Encourage Mendicancy by Alms Giving.

Andrew Carnegie in his speech donating the Pittsburg Library said that out of every thousand dollars given to charity nine hundred is given in such a way as to defeat the very object for which it is given. Promiscuous and liberal alms-giving promotes mendicancy. The well-meant efforts of the early Christians in the care of the poor almost resulted in national bankruptcy. In Italy, Spain, England and other countries, where institutions for the care of the poor were under the care of the church, the prosperity of the nation was corroded. Blind and pernicious almsgiving diffused habits of improvidence among the poorer classes; industrial energy was paralyzed, and as the historian has said: "The poverty retired was insignificant compared with the poverty produced."

During modern times, and especially in our own country, charity has become a civil and economic question. It is treated as a business.

The Organized Aid Association, working in harmony with the Relief Associations and with the aid committees of the various churches, aims to see that the largest amount of want is relieved with the smallest possible expenditure of money; that relief is not duplicated; that the causes of poverty and want are removed as fast as possible, and that the professional beggar is driven to work or is cast out of the community.

SOMERSET'S LOSS. $75,000.

That is the Estimated Damage Done By the Flood Last Week.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Somerville, N. J., Feb. 11.—The Somerset County Board of Chosen Freeholders are now in session. The estimated loss to bridges of the county by the flood of last week is about $75,000. The work of rebuilding and repairing the bridges will begin immediately. The most costly one that was totally destroyed, that is, the one that will cost the most to replace, is south of Somerville over the Raritan river, and known as the Veghte bridge. At Neshanic there is considerable loss. Two new bridges will have to be built and a large amount of filling in must be done, as many yards of the bank was washed away. Then there is more or less loss sustained by washaways near approaches to bridges that will necessarily entail much expense. The county will be a large sufferer by the flood and $75,000 is a fair estimate of its loss.

VARIOUS SPORTS.

The Hunters' Arms Co., of Fulton, N. Y., have combined their gun and bicycle business at their New York store, 204 Broadway, from which the firm will soon remove to more commodious quarters in the same locality, as they find their present store wholly inadequate to meet the demands of their largely increased business. The New York branch will be under the management of C. E. Teel of Plainfield, N. J., who is a well known figure to wheelmen in the metropolitan district. In addition to his position as manager of the New York branch, Mr. Teel will also act in the capacity of superintendent of agencies.—Sporting Life.

SAVE THE PALISADES.

That is The Cry Heard on all Sides at Present.

Members of the Joint Palisades Committee, appointed by the Governors of New York and New Jersey, having solicited co-operation from the women of both States, this accompanying petition has been formulated, and it is hoped that as many individual clubs or individual members thereof as are in sympathy with the movement will in every way endorse and further the proposed bills ceding to the Federal government the strip of Palisades scenery and providing for its maintenance as a National Reservation:

To the Governor and Legislature of New Jersey and to the Members of House Committee on Military Affairs at Washington:

The undersigned, representing the New Jersey Federation of Women's Clubs, impressed with the importance of bills before you, do in all earnestly express the hope of a favorable hearing and prompt action looking toward the preservation of further defacement and the establishment of a National Park and pleasure ground. The advantages of which would be enjoyed by a rapidly increasing population and the unique and beautiful features of which serve to be further marred and protected.

The Officers of N. J. Fed. of Women's Clubs.

Apropos to the petition the following from the Baltimore News is opportune: Not only the inhabitants of New York and New Jersey, but every American who knows the Palisades of the Hudson, must feel a pang of sorrow and mortification when he hears, that their unique beauty is in danger of speedy destruction. Sorrow that one of the gems of the earth, the most distinctive feature of our lovellest river, a scene whose charm lies in its unparalleled combination of natural loveliness with a situation overlooking the great centre of American commerce, should be in danger of irrepairable defacement. Mortification that this defacement should be possible for the sake of a few thousand dollars' worth of broken stone.

AN ABSOLUTE DESPOTISM

TURKEY'S GOVERNMENT IS THUS CHARACTERIZED BY DR. RIGGS.

The Ruling Head is Not a Civil Officer or Hereditary King. But a Military Leader and Ecclesiastical Prelate

"The Ottoman Empire" was the subject of the University Extension lecture delivered Tuesday by Dr. James F. Riggs in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church. The subject is an especially interesting one at this day, and a large audience was in attendance.

The Selybok race, with whom the Crusaders fought, said Dr. Riggs, must not be confounded with the Ottomans. The history of the Selyook dynasties is aptly compared to a series of violent thunder storms. But after the race of Osman took the lead the course of events was quite different. The early Sultans exhibited real military genius.

Osman, who gave a name to the race, died in 1326, and the same year Orkhan captured Brusa, and made it the capital of the empire. Murad I., 1359-1389, conquered large sections of territory in Europe, sweeping all around Constantinople, while that city remained in the hands of the Greek emperors. His successor, known as the "thunderbolt," Byazeed I., 1389-1402, made an unsuccessful attack on Constantinople, but was compelled to hasten back to the east to meet the army of Tamerlane. Mohammed II., 1451-1481, was the final conqueror of the city, which was occupied by the Turks, May 29, 1453. Mohammed was anxious to retain the Greek population in the city, and he showed them every kindness. While the finest churches were converted into mosques, many were left to the Christians, and are still churches of the Greek faith.

For more than a century after the fall of Constantinople the Turks were the terror of Christendom. The reign of Sohman I., "the magnificent," 1520-1566, marks the highest point of Ottoman glory, and was a period of military achievements and architectural triumphs. During the reign of Selin II, son of Sohman, the Ottoman naval power was shattered at the battle of Sepanto, 1571, and from that time the terror of Europe was relieved.

A long line of Sultan's followed, but the story is a painful one, of corruption and decay. Extravagance and vice increased, while the original vigor of the race steadily diminished. That which was the scourge of nations is now the object of derision.

The government of Turkey is an absolute despotism. The head of the state is not a civil officer, or hereditary king, but a military leader an an ecclesiastical prelate.

Besides the Ottoman population, there are in the country Jews, Greeks and Armenians. The Jews came from Spain, being expelled during the reign of Ferdinand and Isabella. The Greeks pride themselves upon being the true owners of the soil, and say that the time will come when Constantinople will be again a Greek city.

The Armenians are an especially interesting people to us, just now. They have a very interesting ecclesiastical history, having been very early identified with Christianity. Their church is Episcopal in form, with bishops and a liturgy. They have quite an extensive literature, both in the classic and the modern Armenian language. The greater part of the Armenian population are shepherds and farmers, but many in the large cities have become prosperous merchants.

The following are the Lenten sermons at St. Mary's church: Feb. 19—Subject, "Mortification." Rev. F. J. Murphy. Feb. 26—Subject, "Mortal Sin." Rev. C. H. D., Seton Hall College; Mar. 18—Subject, "The Justice of God." Rev. W. A. Brothers, St. John's church, Paterson, N. J.; Mar. 25—Subject, "The Mercy of God." Rev. D. J. Cerley, [illegible] of the Holy Name, N. Y. City; April 1—Subject, "The Love of God." Rev. G. D. O'Neill, Seton Hall College.

The little daughter of Mr. Fred Webber, Holland, Mass, had a very bad cold and cough which he had not been able to cure with any thing. I gave him a 25 cent bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, says W. P. Holden, merchant and postmaster at West Brimfield, and the next time I saw him he said it worked like a charm. This remedy is intended especially for acute throat and lung diseases such as colds, croup and whooping cough, and it is famous for its cures. There is no danger in giving it to children for it contains nothing injurious. For sale by T. S. Armstrong, Manager Reynolds' pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues.

A GLOBE TROTTER IN JAIL.

Plainfield Does Not Care For Such Celebrities.

City Judge DeMeza held court Tuesterday afternoon and dispensed justice to two culprits. The first was a traveller, the story of whose arrest was told in yesterday's Daily Press. He gave his name as John Mahon and his occupation as "globe trotter." The Judge thought that such characters should give Plainfield a wide berth and as a remembrance to keep away and behave himself, the stranger was given sixty days in jail.

An Italian, whose English was not of the best, appeared before the Judge charged by Patrolman McCue with stealing coal. The Judge looked surprised when the man gave his name, but Chief Grant translated the gibberish into Samuel Kitchen. He was given his choice between a fine of $5 and twenty days in jail. He paid the fine.

HENDERSON CONVICTED.

Found Guilty of Manslaughter by the Jury After Ten Minutes Deliberation.

The trial of young Theophilus Henderson, which was begun in the Elizabeth Court on Monday, was unexpectedly closed Tuesday, the defense putting in very little testimony. The jury, after ten minutes deliberation, returned with a verdict of manslaughter.

Henderson, who had struck and killed a farmer with a brick during a picnic quarrel last summer, was remanded to the jail to await sentence. The trial has been a sensational one throughout, owing to the hysterical grief of the several girl companions of the prisoner, who were called to testify unwillingly.

STREET RAILWAY CONTRACT.

It is Understood That L. W. Serrell, Jr., Will Do the Work.

It is understood that the Board of Directors of the Plainfield Street Railway will award the contract for building the extensions of the street railway, authorized by the ordinance recently passed, to Lemuel W. Serrell, Jr., of this city. The price for the work is not yet given out.

Mr. Serrell will probably commence the work just as soon as the weather permits. He is engaged in electrical construction in New York, and will doubtless make a job satisfactory to both the city and company.

Old Dominion Line Dinner.

The fourth annual dinner given by the Old Dominion Steamship Company to its officers, agents and underwriters, took place Friday evening, the 7th inst., on board of the steamer "Old Dominion," Wall street, New York. At the conclusion of the dinner the president reviewed the work of the company in general during the past year, and the vice-president spoke of matters relating to the traffic department. George V. IS A CALL A CAMP.

The Sons of Veterans Yearly Average is Ninety Per Cent.

An interesting meeting of John Hand Camp, No. 28, S. of V., was held in their rooms last Monday. The report of Division Inspector Fremont Tietze was received, showing the Camp's yearly average to be ninety per cent, and is accordingly in Call A. The Inspector also complimented the Camp on its fine condition and military style of transacting business.

A committee of three on paraphernalia was appointed and is composed of Raymond McVoy, Fred Sutton and C. F. Stephens.

The Camp is now a member of the Funeral Benefit Association, having received its credentials at the meeting last evening.

The Division Encampment will convene in Trenton tomorrow, and this Camp will be represented by H. J. Martin and C. F. Stephens. They will be accompanied by Fred Sutton, H. C. McVoy, Willard V. Sutton, Raymond McVoy and James Stryker.

It was decided by the good and welfare committee to arrange for an informal entertainment and smoker for the next meeting.

Two Fresh Damsels.

Two young girls created quite a scene at the corner of Plainfield avenue and West Fourth street Thursday afternoon. A peddler, with a pack upon his back, was spied by one of them and they at once made him the object of their attention. They pulled on the pack till they nearly upset him. Then they punched and pummeled him in quite an artistic manner, all the while, making use of objectionable language. Finally the man broke away and succeeded in escaping from his tormentors.

MAKING APPOINTMENTS.

GOVERNOR GRIGGS SELECTS TWO UNION COUNTY MEN.

Robert S. Green, of Elizabeth, Made a Member of the State Board of Assessors—One of Mr. Reed's Bills Has Passed.

Gov. Griggs Tuesday afternoon nominated Robert S. Green, of Elizabeth, a son of the late Gov. Green, and Stephen J. Meeker, of Newark, as members of the State Board of Assessors, says the Sun. Both are Democrats, the law providing for two assessors of each party. He also appointed Major Carl Lentz, of Newark, a member of the State Board of Taxation, and reappointed Charles C. Black and and Albert H. Slope. Major Lentz is Chairman of the Essex County Republican Committee, and he had been seeking the Chancery or Supreme Court clerkship in payment of services he rendered last fall. These were a little too rich for the Major, who gets a place worth $2,000 a year. Other appointments were: Edward S. Atwater, City District Court Judge for Elizabeth; H. Burdett Herr, Law Judge of Hunterdon, and Walter F. Hayhurst, Prosecutor of Hunterdon.

The legislative day was given up mainly to committee hearings, the important one being that accorded to lawyers interested in the reorganization of the Court of Errors and Appeals. Two score or more lawyers spoke, and agreed that what was wanted was a court separated from the influence of Judges who hear the cases originally. But they differed as to the methods by which the result was to be reached. Wm. H. Corbin made a proposition which startled some of the other lawyers. It was to abolish all courts except the Supreme Court That court he would divide into three sections, with law equity and appeals jurisdiction. Samuel H. Grey submitted a proposed amendment for a court of five Judges, to be appointed by the Governor, and who were to have no connection with any other court. Senator Williams has another proposition which would make the new court consist of the Chancellor and Chief Justice, a Vice-Chancellor and Associate Justice to be designated by them, and three new Judges to be appointed by the Governor. This makes four separate amendments on the subject now before the committee, and others are to be prepared. Another hearing will be given next week.

The Senate yesterday afternoon passed the following bills: Ceding to the National Government jurisdiction over the Hunson River palisades as a military park; giving municipalities power to adopt uniform ordinances governing bicycles; permitting the use of revised lists of last registry lists at spring elections in cities of over 40,000 population.

Bills were introduced by Senator Voorhees, giving to the widow of an intestate all the personal property after debts are paid; by Stokes, increasing the annual appropriation for public schools from $200,000 to $300,000. The bill authorizing Newark to issue $300,000 in bonds for a new library was defeated.

The House passed bills requiring official envelopes used at elections to be of yellow paper, which was introduced by Assemblyman Reed of of Somerset, and providing for the erection by the State of tombstones over the graves of soldiers and sailors who died previous to 1884. Bills were introduced by Mr. Allen requiring railroad companies to carry as baggage all bicycles, and be liable for damage to them the same as other personal property, and imposing a penalty of $50 on personal conviction of throwing into the road anything that will injure bicycle tires; by Mr. Wildes, providing for a reduction in salary of all public officers who get more than $1,000.

A BIRTHDAY PARTY.

Mrs. Elizabeth Waldron Pleasantly Entertains a Party of Friends.

An enjoyable birthday party was held at the residence of Mrs. Elizabeth Waldron, of Greenbrook road, last Monday. It was Mrs. Waldron's thirty-sixth birthday, and the party was arranged by a few of her friends. The affair was a very pleasant one and will be remembered with much pleasure by all who attended. During the evening some excellent music was rendered by Oscar Vaughan on the harmonica and guitar; Herman Smith on the accordion; Will Murray on the violin, and George Perry on the violin.

It was not until long after midnight that the merry party thought of dispersing, having in the meantime partaken of a generous repast, which had been prepared by the young women.

Among those present were: The Misses Teansi McInnes, Reta McInnes, Lizzie Waldron, Minnie Pickett, Ida Perry, Faunie Overland, and Mrs. Annie Overland and Mrs. Waldron, and the Messrs. Herman Smith, Gustave Sezear, George Pickett, George Wilson, Al Springer, Oscar Vaughan, Will Murray and George Perry.

IS IT A GANG WORKING?

Looks as Though the Borough Was Afflicted With Sneak Thieves.

Another bold attempt at robbery was committed in the borough Tuesday about 7 o'clock, at the home of Assemblyman Charles A. Reed. The family were at dinner when a servant in the employ of Mrs. Boome was sent to the home of the former on an errand.

The burglars had placed a ladder at the side of the house, hoping to reach the upper part of the dwelling and secure whatever they could while the family were downstairs. The approach of the servant frightened them, while they were getting ready to make an entrance, and they escaped before she could get an opportunity of recognizing them.

Mr. Reed was informed at once of the attempted robbery, but it was too late to make a capture.

The police have no clue as to who the burglars are and it is not likely that they will be caught.

HER CHECK WAS A CINDER.

There Was Enough Left for Identification, and She Got Her Money.

Many curious stories have been told concerning bank checks. Some of these relate to the largest drawn and others to the smallest. One of the largest checks ever drawn in this city was at the time that the capital of the Nevada bank was increased from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000. This check was by Flood & O'Brien for $5,000,000. As to the extreme, checks have been drawn to the value of a single cent. Other stories relate to the circuit made by checks before they are finally taken up and destroyed. Some of these migrations have covered different states and hundreds of miles. In these journeys checks have gone over ground several times. Checks are wonderful moneysavers; that is, they save the handling of vast sums of money every day. They also serve to minimize the loss of money from mistakes, thefts, or other causes.

But one of the greatest curiosities in the check line has just come to light in this city. A lady brought it to the Bank of California to be cashed. It was in a paper box and had to be handled very carefully, for it was in two pieces and both were burnt to a crisp. There was not a decipherable word on either piece. The lady said the bits of crisp paper represented a check for $125, which she had received in a letter. The check, she said, was drawn by the national bank of D. O. Mills, of Sacramento. She had removed the letter from the envelope and had thrown the envelope on some live coal in the grate. Upon reading the letter she had found a reference to an inclosure of check for the sum named, and turned to the fire in the grate with sore disappointment. The fire had done its work. The crisp paper lay on the coals. She carefully removed the same, placed it in a box and hurried to the bank of California to get the money before the pieces here further crumbled.

After listening to the story the officers of the bank made a careful examination of the burnt paper, and by the aid of powerful glasses, they were able to make out portions of words from the pen impressions made on the paper. From these portions of these lines left to show that "Ella" had been written, and part of the word "hundred" was also made out, with two or three letters of the name of the bank. These discoveries corresponded with the story of the lady, and the bank officers then communicated the circumstances to the national bank of D. O. Mills & Co., of Sacramento, and asked for a duplicate check in behalf of the lady, the same to be refunded as the money was paid. The circumstance disproved the charge about the curiosity of women. Had there been more curiosity about the inclosure of the envelope the trouble would have been avoided. The moral is applied to the story is to be careful that what you throw into the fire has no further value for you.—San Francisco Bulletin.

LONGEVITY OF DEER.

A Century Is Not the Limit of Their Days of Age.

It is difficult, writes a Highland forester, to speak with certainty as to the age of deer, but we have undeniable testimony that there were in the old Glengarry forest stags upward of 80 years of age. Some maintain that deer attain the age of six and seven score years. In 1829, while Macdonnell, of Glengarry, and Lord Dunmore were hunting at Terrna-corrafi a huge stag, with brigantine antlers, fell dead by the hand of Glengarry shot him. Finding that it had a certain ear-mark, he asked his forester to explain whose it was. "That," replied the forester, "is the ear-mark of Eoghain Mac-Iain-Oig." (Ewen-son-of-John-the-young.) Ewen was a noted forester who had died 150 years previously! The antlers of the stag (we are told) were preserved in the old Glengarry family ever afterward.

The age of the deer is thus described in an old Gaelic saying:

"Thrice the age of a dog the age of a horse; thrice the age of a horse the age of a man; thrice the age of a man the age of a deer; thrice the age of a deer the age of the eagle; thrice the age of the eagle the age of the oak tree."

We have incontrovertible testimony that a white hind lived in the forest of Loch-Treig during the recollection of three generations. Every hunter in the district knew her well. She was white as snow, and so watchful and mysterious that no one ever got within gunshot of her.

It may be added that the old hunters and Seumachies in Badenoch and Lochaber still (1893) speak of this famous hind.

For 40 years a stag roamed over the Monadth-Liath, in Badenoch, and defied the best sportsmen of that district. "Many a brave man (to use the idiom of our Gaelic author) lost the sleep of the night and the skin of the fawn in pursuit of him." Unfortunately, he was wounded, but not killed, by a gentleman of the name of Macdonnald. Thirty years afterward he was shot in Upper Badenoch, and the bullet lodged in him by Macdonnald was then found in his shoulder! He could not have been under 140 years of age.—Scottish Times.

The Austrian Crown.

At intervals a rumor is frequently set going in the European press to the effect that the emperor of Austria desires to set aside the pragmatic sanction and settle the crown on his youngest daughter, Grand Duchess Marie Valerie, married to her cousin, Grand Duke Franz Salvator, of the Tuscan house. The consent of the Austrian and Hungarian legislatures, as well as of all in the male line of succession, would have to be obtained before so serious a modification of the constitution could be effected. Even then it is likely enough that at Franz Joseph's death the arrangement would be upset; nobody is sure any proof that Princess Marie Valerie is capable of administering so ticklish an inheritance.—Boston Globe.

BEATS ALL RECORDS.

Wonderful Intelligence Shown by a Veteran Texas Roach.

Last week, writes a Houston (Tex.) Post contributor, I came home one night and by accident opened the pantry. I was surprised at finding at least 100 big beetles scampering across the floor to escape into their lair. I saw that they all disappeared down a circular hole in one corner of the closet. Next night I sallied forth on a tour of extermination. I prepared a wooden plug to stop up the hole, and a flat cudgel with which to annihilate the critters. I approached the pantry with a lighted candle, opened the door suddenly, and before the roaches fully realized my presence I had their escape completely blocked. It was a sight worth seeing. Some of them were in the corner playing "Copenhagen." Some were in the center of the pantry playing "Ring around-rosy." When they saw the light they suddenly interrupted their sports and made a bee line for home. Astonishment was written on every lineament of their black bodies when they saw their escape cut off. I set the candle on the floor and belabored them right and left with my weapon. Soon I had the floor strewn with corpses. All at once my light went out. A venerable looking, patriarchal sort of cockroach, realizing that the salvation of his family and relatives lay in darkness, had climbed up the candle and thrown himself across the flame. Like Arnold Winkelried, he died to save others, but before I could strike a match the last of the still living bugs had found some secret means of exit and had disappeared. That's what I call intelligence. I have that hero's body embalmed in my collection, and since that adventure I have the greatest respect for roaches. When I want to exterminate them now I treat them royally to ten cents' worth of poison.

THE FLOOR STREWN WITH CORPSES.

ENTIRELY TOO SMART.

How an Intelligent Horse Betrayed His Master's Weakness.

A Washington professional man has an intelligent horse. The gentleman is in the habit of going on occasional sprees, and when he does the horse knows at once that his driver does not want to go home, and takes him to a country house about seven miles from the city.

The professional man, when about to spend an evening among the boys, sends word to his wife that he has been called out of town, and in this way has been able to keep the fact that he drinks a secret from everyone except the companions with whom he goes on sprees.

A few evenings ago the wife and a lady visitor started for a drive. The horse noticed that something was wrong with the way the lines were grasped, and started for the country place, supposing that the owner was intoxicated again. No amount of pulling or whipping could be made to change his course, and about dark he halted in front of the resort. "Here, Tom," called the proprietor, "——'s drunk again. Come help me carry him in. And, Dan, put up the horse."

Now the lady is visiting her mother in Virginia, and it will take a strong pledge upon the husband's part to induce her to return.

Big Man and a Little One.

Ligonier, Ind., claims to have living there the largest and smallest men in that state. George Washington Walker is 46 years old, weighs 560 pounds, and his weight is steadily increasing. He is five feet ten inches tall, measures 76 inches round the waist, 68 inches round the chest, and his arm is a trifle more than two feet in circumference. During the hot weather he lives entirely in the cellar of his house. Jesse Allen, a neighbor of Walker, is 19 years old, his legs exactly a foot long, and stands but three feet six inches high. He weighs 75 pounds.

THE LAST BEFORE LENT. TALK BY W. D. MURRAY.

PARK CLUB JUNIORS ENJOYED A PLEASANT DANCE LAST NIGHT.

HE DEPRECATES RESORTING TO FAIRS, ETC., FOR RAISING MONEY.

The Event Closes the Park Club Festivities for This Season Until After Easter—The Names of Those Present.

As far as the junior members of the Park Club are concerned, the social season is at a close until after Easter, for the dance given by them in the Park Club house last Friday was the last before the beginning of Lent. There was a large attendance, as is usually the case with all the delightful affairs held in that charming little club house on Washington Park. The ballroom was brilliantly lighted and presented a gay scene with its whirling couples, the ladies in their beautiful evening gowns and the gentlemen in their more convential attire.

The dance was arranged by the junior committee, Edmund Rushmore and Charles S. Cook, whose efforts were crowned, as usual, with success. The patronesses were: Mrs. Charles A. Reed and Mrs. George T. Rogers.

Among the members and guests present during the evening were:

Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Carman, Dr. and Mrs. D. R. Thies, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. A. Reed, Mrs. James R. Joy, Mrs. E. B. Williams, Mrs. Emma S. Brown, Mrs. O. B. Leonard, Mrs. Edwin Douglass, Mrs. George T. TWO KILLED ON THE RAIL.

Bridge Builders Looking for Work Run Down by an Engine.

Two men were run down and instantly killed by a shifting engine on the Central Railroad, between Somerville and Finderne, about seven o'clock last Friday. A third man, who gives his name as John Donahue, barely escaped with his life by rolling from the track.

The three men were bridge builders, and Donahue says they had been trying to get work at Round Brook. The engine was backing upon the eastbound track and the headlight did not show. The men were not expecting a train from that direction. Donahue says that one of the dead men is Patrick Kelly, of Lawrence, Mass. The other he only knew by the name of "Tom," he lived at Dover. The bodies were terribly mangled. County Physician Wagoner was taken to the scene of the accident on a special train. After viewing the bodies and inquiring into the circumstances he granted a burial permit, exonerating the railroad company from criminal negligence.

The County School Tax.

Union county's school tax this year will amount to $98,192 on a valuation of $34,622,900. After this has been paid into the treasury and 90 per cent repaid, the balance apportioned was $9,819. The county's special taxes was $150,324, of which $52,809 was for text books, $31,175 for buildings and repairs, and $63,620 for current expenses, teachers, etc. The regular appropriation is from tax levied at the rate of $5 for each child of school age. —Westfield Leader.

A Healthy Revival.

The series of revival meetings at the Filmore Baptist church have resulted in the conversion of twenty three persons, while twenty, who had heretofore professed to have religion and had fallen from grace, have been reclaimed. Rev. W. S. Taylor, of Richmond, Va., will preach tomorrow. The meetings close this week.

Special Inducement.

Wishing to fill its beautiful rooms with bright young men and women, the Plainfield Business College now offers to sell a complete scholarship for either commercial or shorthand course, for $60 in monthly installments or $50 cash. The holder can study day or night, and as long as necessary to complete the course. This new offer should be eagerly accepted.

Associations Should Do Good Work and Then People Will Willingly Furnish the Financial Means—Other Good Points.

The members of the New Jersey Young Men's Christian Association are patriotic as well as enthusiastic. The Hedding Methodist Episcopal church, in Jersey City, where the State convention is being held, was richly decorated with flags and the National colors Thursday. The second day's proceedings opened with a Bible session. Robert E. Speer, of New York, presided. William D. Murray, of this city, former president of the State convention, reviewed the reports of 1895. He deprecated fairs and similar attractions as a means of raising funds, and said: "I believe the proper way is for the associations to do such good work that the Christian people of the town will want the work to continue and supply the means." He was elated over the conversion of 483 men and 107 boys through the instrumentality of the associations. The work had been hampered, he said, by eleven general secretaries having resigned, and he expressed the hope that the secretaries would be recognized as leaders and receive the cordial support of the associations. This was regarded as an intimation that the retirement of the eleven secretaries was due to a lack of harmony.

J. C. Morse, of Springfield, Mass., gave an address on "The Means for Secretarial Equipment." Willard Smith, of Orange, in speaking of "Business Methods in Association Work," advocated the keeping of statistics and accounts. The financial management should be businesslike, he said, and bills should be paid promptly.

The afternoon session began with an address on "The Relation of Our Association to Kindred Movements," by the Rev. E. Morris Ferguson, of Trenton. He solicited the aid of lay workers in the solution of practical problems.

In speaking of the "Better Utilization of Social Facilities," President Cowles in opening said: "The usual order of placing the departments of our work are the religious, educational, social and physical. I would have them religious, and next social, educational and physical work and all religious. A young man's social facilities are more highly prized by him than any other thing outside of his means of getting a livelihood. This is shown by his conduct. If we can meet his social cravings we can count on enlisting him. You cannot catch oysters without taking the shells. A fly hook is needed for some fish, but only dredging tongs for oysters.

"You must adapt your tools to the work. The young man is our oyster. He is rough, that is why we want him, for he needs us. We have examples of how they are caught. The saloonkeepers do not ask the clean young man to come and try their whiskey. The hook is disguised with the bait of sociability. Our work is uplifting. Take the young man as he is, shells all on, and when he is in our boat we can trust to association with others to improve him."

Rev. Walter Hughson, of New York, delivered an eloquent sermon in a Bible lesson on "The Divinity of Christ." Secret sectional conferences were held during the afternoon. The subjects and presiding officers of these conferences were "Men's Meetings and Personal Work," H. A. Cozzens, Newark; "Railroad Work," Frank J. Griffith, assistant superintendent of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company; "Physical Work," Leonard M. Monin, of Newark.

In the evening a parlor conference was held at the home of Dr. P. J. Koonz, 273 Communipaw avenue, by the presidents and directors. Ex Assemblyman W. E Drake presided. A meeting was also held in the First Bergen Presbyterian church. A song service was led by Edward W. Dunham, of Trenton, and Miss Anna Park played the cornet. Colonel John J. McCook delivered an address on railroad work, and Rev. Dr. Amory H. Bradford, of Montclair, made an address.

NO TROLLEY CONSOLIDATION.

President Young Thinks the Story is Without Foundation.

President E. F. C. Young, of the Consolidated Traction Company, denies the published report that all the trolley companies in the State are to consolidate and be operated under one head.

"There is no plan that I know of for uniting the several trolley companies," said Mr. Young, "and certainly none so far as the Consolidated Traction Company is concerned. I have attended no such meeting and do not know anything about the alleged plan. I do not think I would be left out in the cold if there was such a scheme on foot, and I certainly have not been informed of it."

Minstrels in March.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher, That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting the government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

BETTER MAIL SERVICE.

POSTMASTER HETFIELD TO MAKE SEVERAL DESIRABLE CHANGES.

Pacific Coast Mail to Leave Later—An Evening Delivery to be Made in the Business Section of the City Soon.

Postmaster Hetfield, with his usual energy and forethought, has prepared or is preparing several beneficial changes in his department. Commencing yesterday, the through mail pouch to the Pacific coast does not close until six o'clock in the evening instead of 4:30 o'clock. This change is made for the convenience of those that receive a letter on the morning mail from the west and south and wish to answer it the same day. The advantages of the through mail are many, as the delays and accidents of passing through the New York postoffice are done away with.

After Monday, storekeepers and business men whose places of occupation are on Front street and Park avenue in the business section of town, will enjoy the benefits of another delivery when the mail, received at 5:30, will be distributed.

By the eight-hour law, mail carriers can only work that number of hours, and Ed. Hann, who has the business portion as his district, has been kept so busy that he has not had time to make that delivery before. He will now give up his early morning collection and use the time in the afternoon delivery instead. The early morning collection in his district will be made by the other carriers, each taking a portion.

Postmaster Hetfield has offered to place letter boxes in front of all the public schools if the Board of Education will put up posts to hold them. The matter will be brought up at the next meeting of the Board, and there is little doubt but that they will accept the offer, as the benefit to teachers and pupils is plainly seen.

MISSIONARY WOMEN ELECT.

The Annual Meeting of the First Presbyterian Church Held.

The annual business meeting of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the First Presbyterian church was held in the chapel of the church yesterday afternoon and was well attended. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, Mrs. J. Ramsey Blair; Secretary, Mrs. Gifford; Treasurer, Mrs. E. M. Shotwell; Secretary of Literature, Miss Kate Bond. The officers, which goes toward paying for a sholarship in the Asheville, N. C., missionary school, amounted to $19.

The Secretary's annual report showed that the society was in a good spiritual condition, and that the meetings had been very helpful. Two barrels of clothing was sent away last year, one to the south and the other to the west for the Indians. The treasurer reported that after paying all bills there remained in the treasury $9.

Knights to Convene.

Captain J. E. Flannery, First Lieutenant M. Turton, Second Lieutenant Jacob C. Blimm, Jr., and John H. Tier, Jr., of Crescent Commandery, No. 13, Uniformed Rank, K. of P., leave Tuesday for Trenton to attend the annual meetings of the first and second regiments and the brigade. An election of officers will be held.

A TALK ON ICELAND.

Three Women's Clubs Listen to an Interesting Talk By Miss Adams.

By invitation of the Friday Afternoon Club, of North Plainfield, the Rasores Club and the Current Event Club met at the residence of Mrs. Clapp, of Mercer avenue, Thursday afternoon, to listen to a talk on Iceland by Miss Adams, of Brooklyn. Miss Adams is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Adams, and sister of Mrs. E. L. Suffern, of Linden avenue. Added to a most attractive personnel and clear voice, Miss Adams talks fluently without note or manuscript, and yesterday the audience of more than fifty ladies was charmed with the vivid accounts of her trip last year from Scotland to Farve Island and Iceland. She described the scenery, the plains of lava and lack of verdure in these places, and her analysis of the character of the inhabitants was most interesting. All are taught to read and write; no child of eleven years being without these qualifications. In Iceland, the educators are the parents and the pastor, the elementary schools not being in favor. While there is little wealth there are no paupers. Incidents of travel connected with stops at Icelandic farm-houses and the many inconveniences of journeying in so sterile a land, were very amusing, but interesting, withal. Miss Adams' travels have taken her through Norway, the Sandwich Islands and the Azores, about which countries those who heard her yesterday will hope to hear at some future date. The entertainment concluded with tea and social chat.

LOOKING FOR A WIFE'

Farmer Sullivan Wants One Over 30 Who Hasn't Cold Feet.

Farmer Daniel Sullivan, of Rahway, was at the Barge Office Free Labor Bureau in New York yesterday in search of a wife. Farmer Sullivan is a widower about seventy years old, with a whisker bush. He displayed to Mrs. Boyle, the matron, tax receipts and deeds to prove that he is possessed of a farm and two houses. The woman he would marry, Farmer Sullivan says, must be over thirty years old, and not have cold feet. She is at liberty to come to New York every day to work if she finds life on the farm top monotonous, but she must be home early every night.

Opening of the Epworth House.

The Epworth House, the new addition to Monroe Avenue chapel, will be opened and dedicated Tuesday evening, February 25th, when Dr. Ryman, of Elizabeth, will make an address. Friday afternoon, February 28th at 3:30, Marvin R. Vincent, a nephew of Bishop Vincent, will make an address before the women of the chapel. The young women are also planning to take same active part in the dedication.

Loan Exhibition of Portraits.

The loan exhibition of portraits to be held in the Congregational church, on the evening of February 20th, will interest some of the people of Plainfield. A large collection of the "old masters" will be a feature of the exhibition. Artists of the modern school will give sittings to all those who desire portraits. Souvenir catalogues can be obtained upon entering the gallery. Tea will be served.

FAIR IN FULL BLAST.

PLENTY TO INTEREST ALL WHO ATTEND THE HOPE CHAPEL EVENT.

Booths Presided Over by Those of Persuasive Tongues Who Will Make the Fair a Profitable Venture for the Chapel.

Lord Chesterfield very aptly said, "What is worth doing at all is worth doing well," and a better demonstration of the above words has seldom been seen than at Hope chapel, where the Industrial Fair and Loan Exhibition is now in progress.

Everything possible to make the affair a success has been done, and to say that it is complete would be a mild way of expressing it.

After hard, earnest work by those in charge, under the direction of Donald McInnes, the interior of the chapel has been transformed into one of the most cheery and delightful places imaginable. Those who are wont to attend this place of worship hardly recognize it now as the same place.

The first thing that strikes the eye when entering is the abundant display of the National colors, red, white and blue, and this gives one a feeling of patriotism, for no true American could witness such a display without having a stronger love for his country.

The stationery booth, which is the first on the left, is arranged in the most artistic manner through the use of red and white bunting. Here you can purchase anything to be found in a first-class stationery store. The Daily Press is also on sale and last evening the demand was great when it was learned that Dr. Richards' opening address was to be found in its pages. Those in charge are the Misses Stewart, Lillian Newman, Carrie Dewey, Griffen, Marguerite Burnett, Booraem, Ellen Low, Scott, Marie Newman, Elizabeth Colony.

Just to the right of this booth is to be found the "ten room," one of the coziest places in the chapel, and the tea was just to the taste. Pink and white were the prevailing colors and the decorations were artfully arranged. Here Mrs. F. Wharton, Mrs. F. Canfield, Mrs. C. Leland and Miss Ada Nash were in charge, while Miss Helen Hall was the cashier.

Adjoining, was the men's industrial booth, where the handiwork of man was finely displayed. There were novelties in steel and wood, all made by the men in the chapel, and they found ready sales. Messrs. Harris, Mundy, Holland and assistants from Mr. Munger's class, were in charge and had no trouble in disposing of their wares.

One of the most familiar sights was the "Country Grocery," where anything from fire-wood to a bag of flour could be purchased. Mrs. Hansen, Mrs. Pearson, Mrs. Bushby, Mrs. Radin and Mrs. T. Chamberlain, in old-fashioned gowns and hats, carefully looked after the trade with the skill of a thorough business man.

One of the prettiest booths is the Woman's Industrial. Here the art of woman is at its best. Everything on sale has been wrought by her hands and the sight is really beautiful as one looks upon the endless variety of articles.

At this booth you will meet Mrs. Donald McInnes, Mrs. Struthers and Mrs. Neal Head, who made good bargains for all who wish to buy.

The fancy booth, in charge of Mrs. R. Gray, Miss Firstbrook, Miss Naylor and assistants from Mr. Travell's class was a pretty sight and received special mention.

In a cozy nook is to be found an artistic booth where fruits and flowers are supplied by Burton Metler, John Cose, Clarance Leland and assistants from Rev. G. K. Newell's class.

One of the striking features, and really an important one, is the candy booth, with a thatched roof covered with straw. A choice variety of delicious home made candies are in charge of Mrs. H. C. Squires, Miss Emma Schoonmaker, Miss Louise Bushnell, Miss Gertrude Walz, Miss Gertrude Andrews, Miss Mary Bushnell, Miss Marguerite Yates, Fred Squires, Charles Squires, while Mrs. Harry Squires is the efficient cashier.

The orange tree laden with luscious fruit was in charge of Miss Carrie Hunter and Miss Estelle Place, assisted by their classes.

Next came the "Old woman in a Shoe." Pretty dolls were on sale, and an attractive feature is the large shoe in which was comfortably seated one of the little ones. Mrs. Robert Gow, Miss Emma Forster and Miss Lilly Duckworth are in charge. The booth is daintily decorated with blue bunting.

At the chocolate table Miss Sadie Hunter is in charge and serves a delightful cup of chocolate for twenty-five cents, and then makes the purchaser a present of a cup and saucer.

After wandering around one becomes thirsty and wants to stop at the lemonade table where this refreshing beverage is served by Mrs. Percival Danis, Miss M. Devere and assistants from Mr. Schoonmaker's class. The decorations are yellow and white and exceedingly attractive.

In the refreshment room, which is an attractive place, neatly decorated with red and white bunting, you can secure one of the best meals for twenty-five cents that was ever served. Those who look after your wants here include the Misses Hayden, M. S. Yates, Mary Brunson, Swayze, VanDeventer, Mrs. S. Smith and Mrs. William Gray. Miss Mabel Firstbrook is the cashier.

The last but not least is the loan exhibition and curiosity shop in charge of Rev. and Mrs. G. K. Newell and George H. Fountain. Here you find curious relics of Revolutionary times, works of art and manufacture, and besides many articles from the Holy Land that will interest everyone, such as English and Dutch Bibles over 300 years old, a miniature representation of the Tabernacle, and a large collection of Indian relics.

One very important feature is the handsome platform arranged similar to a parlor. The work is that of Rushton, Hansen & Luthman, the new firm of painters and decorators. It is really a work of art. The fair was crowded with patrons last evening and besides the many good things enjoyed was a fine programme of vocal music by a double quartette from Princeton University. On Thursday a musical programme arranged by Miss C. Dewey will be given, and this evening an orchestra will be present and in addition E. E. Runyon, Wm. N. Runyon, G. O. Stevens and Alfred Holmes will give choice vocal selections.

A BRILLIANT GATHERING.

Mrs. Alexander Gilbert Entertained Fifty Friends Yesterday.

High lights are brought out by deep shadows, and the beauty of Mayor Gilbert's home and the brilliancy of the scene Thursday, when Mrs. Gilbert's large progressive euchre party was given, were enhanced by contrast with the storm and dullness outside. Fifty ladies were present and twelve tables were played. The prizes were handsome and were won by the following ladies: Mrs. A. H. Atterbury, Mrs. Irving Brown, Mrs. E. C. Perkins, Mrs. C. L. Case, Mrs. L. H. Bigelow, Jr., Mrs. F. O. Herring, Mrs. Howard Flemming, Mrs. E. W. Conklin, Mrs. G. A. Chapman, Mrs. O. B. Leonard, Mrs. J. G. Foster and Mrs. W. J. Roome. Mrs. Gilbert is a charming hostess and she succeeded in giving each of her guests a good hand, and when after delicious substantial refreshments, the ice-cream was served in the form of a closed hand grasping three miniature cards.

ACCUSED OF VANDERVEER'S DEATH.

Coroner's Jury Bring in a Verdict Against Three Colored Men.

The inquest in the case of the late John Vanderveer was concluded yesterday afternoon in the city court room.

Dr. Whitehead, the physician who performed the autopsy, and Mr. Hewson, colored, of Bound Brook, were the only remaining witnesses. The case was then given to the jury, composed of W. W. Coriell, H. E. Cramer, J. E. Mosher, Charles Howard, I. D. TenEyck and Garrett Wood. After a short deliberation they brought in a verdict that John Vanderveer met his death caused by a blow from a blunt instrument in the hands of Benjamin Hall, and that he was aided by Horace Hall and George Brokaw. The three men who are now held in custody will be placed on trial for causing the death of Vanderveer, and steps will be taken immediately toward that end.

White Gets Pargiter's Stock.

Edward White, the progressive dry goods merchant, this morning consummated a deal whereby he takes the stock of goods of Alex. Pargiter, who has been conducting a fancy goods store on the corner of Park avenue and West Second street. Mr. White will move the stock of goods to his own store next week, and cut the prices on all articles right in half, selling them at fifty cents on the dollar. The goods are all fresh and of late styles, as Mr. Pargiter has only been in this city for a short time.

A Fair Association Dissolved.

The Somerset County Fair Association has disbanded. This is the corporation that conducted the fair last fall. They held a meeting on Tuesday evening, February 6th, and found that they could pay all expenses and come out a little ahead. The understanding is that they can reorganize at any time if it is thought best. A dinner followed the meeting at the Somerset. President Stelle, James J. Meehan, A. P. Burghen and others made addresses.—Somerville Unionist-Gazette.

A Social Dance.

A social dance was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Ferris, at Lebanon last Tuesday, and an entertaining time was passed. S. D. Frazee, of this city, furnished the music, and gave satisfaction to the guests. About thirty couple were present.

The Farmers' Friend.

Assemblyman Reed is aiming to help the farmer with his tax burden, by introducing a bill making the days when taxes are due a month later. Such a change would enable a farmer to sell his grain without necessitating a sacrifice in price.—Somerville Unionist-Gazette.

REDUCING THE SALARIES

REPUBLICANS WILL SUPPORT SENATOR VOORHEES' MEASURES.

War Will Be Continued on the Coal Combine—New Game Laws Proposed—Other Business Brought Up.

The Legislature reassembled Thursday after a holiday, but did little work. The coming together was mainly for the purpose of enabling the Republicans to hold caucuses to decide what action to take in respect to the reported coal combine and the pending and contemplated amendments to the Constitution.

The Republican Assemblymen decided to have new resolutions drafted concerning the coal combine. They are to be based on information given to the leaders by the Attorney-General at an informal conference on the matter. The resolutions will be introduced next Monday evening, and will declare war on the alleged combine.

The joint caucus discussed the proposed constitutional amendments, but decided that no decisive action could be taken at present, in view of the fact that another hearing is to be given to the lawyers in an attempt to have them agree on some plan to reorganize the Supreme Court and Court of Errors and Appeals. The sentiment was general that if nothing is done the anti race track amendment would be adopted later in the session and submitted to a vote of the people next summer.

It was stated that the Citizens' League would not embarrass the Legislature by insisting on action on the amendment this year if there was a probability of action on other important amendments. In that case the anti-race track amendment will be amended and allowed to go over for another year.

Some of the Republicans are dissatisfied with the present system of electing Assemblymen by counties, brought about by the action of Essex county Republicans two years ago in having declared unconstitutional the law under which the large counties were divided into Assembly districts. The subject was discussed in caucus yesterday morning. Senators Voorhees, Thompson, and Stokes, and a number of Assemblymen, favored an amendment to the Constitution providing for Assembly districts, with guarded provision against the unfair gerrymandering system introduced by the Republicans in 1881, and improved upon by the Democrats to the latter's advantage in 1891. They fear that a revolt against the Republicans in Essex county would result in a solid Democratic delegation, as is now the case in Hudson, and there is danger of a similar condition in other counties. Then the Republicans would lose control of the lower House. Senators Skirm and Parry and a part of the Essex Assemblymen were opposed to the change, and no decision was reached. Another caucus will be held to determine the question.

The caucus decided to support the bill introduced by Senator Voorhees yesterday morning, fixing the salary of the Chancery and Supreme Court Clerks at $6,000 a year, making them responsible to the State for the collection of all fees, and imposing a penalty of $100 a day for failure to file monthly reports with the State Comptroller of the financial transactions of the offices.

Senator Parry introduced a bill fixing the salaries of the Chief Justice and Chancellor at $7,500 a year, and of the Associate Justices and Vice-Chancellors at $6,000. This is a reduction of $3,000 a year for each. Mr. Parry also introduced a series of ten bills relative to the game and fish laws. They were prepared by the Fish and Game Commissioners. They prohibit the use of nets in inland tide-waters between May 15th and September 1st, under a penalty of $100; require pound-net fishermen to pay a license of $100 a year for each net or pound used; they must not fish within 1,000 feet of the shore at low tide; the size of the mesh is restricted to not less than four inches for leaders and two inches for pockets, and the owners must raise their nets at noon on Saturday and keep them up until the following Monday at noon; lobsters less than 10½ inches long must not be caught or had in possession under penalty of $20 for each; prohibit menhaden fishing within three miles of shore, except with the consent of the Commissioners, under penalty of seizure of vessel and apparatus; give the Commissioners power to appoint a game protector and fifteen wardens; providе method of procedure in enforcing the game and fish laws; appropriating $5,000 a year for maintaining fish hatcheries; fix the open season for game birds and fish, and cover some minor subjects.

In the northern game district, comprising Mercer and the counties north, the open season for partridges and pheasants, black and fox squirrels is from October 1st to December 10th, both inclusive; for quail, hare, rabbits, European pheasants and grouse, October 25th to December 10th; English or Wilson and gray snipe, March and April and between August 10th and December 10th; grass or upland plover and doves, August 10th to September 10th; reed and rail birds and marsh hens, August 25th to December 10th; black bass, May 30th to December 1st; trout, April 1st to July 15th; pickerel, May 1st to the following February 1st; eel pots and baskets for eels and catfish may be used all the year. In the southern district the seasons for hare, rabbits, quail, partridges, squirrels, pheasants, grouse and woodcock, is between November 15th and January 1st; for other game and fish the season is the same as in the northern district.

Among the bills passed in the House was that appropriating $5,000 for the erection of monuments, markers and tablets to designate the positions of New Jersey troops on the Chickamuga battlefield. Both Houses have adjourned until Monday evening.

In executive session of the Senate all the nominations sent in by Gov. Griggs were reported except those for the two District Court Judges in Jersey City and for law Judge and Prosecutor of Middlesex county. It is said that the new Judges desire to exchange and each take the district for which the other was appointed, so action was delayed in order to permit the change to be made. In Middlesex county it was said that there are a number of important cases pending with which Judge Rice and Prosecutor Adrain are familiar, and it would not be fair to make a change immediately.

HIBERNIANS INSTALL.

New Officers of the A. O. H. Took Their Places Last Night.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians met last Friday in their rooms, Sons of Temperance hall, and transacted routine business after which County President Canty, of Elizabeth, installed the officers-elect as follows: President, P. Casey; vice-president, E. Birmingham; recording secretary, D. J. Shea; financial secretary, C. Ryan; treasurer, M. Nugent; sergeant-at-arms, Wm. Casey. The meeting was then thrown open and a large number of persons were admitted as guests. A feature of the affair was the refreshments, which were served in great abundance, after which a smoker was enjoyed. Everybody had a good time and with speeches and songs the evening passed very pleasantly.

The Living Topics Magazine is a unique publication which will greatly interest all who wish to keep informed concerning the progress of the world, and especially all owners of cyclopedias.

It records such items concerning current events and the progress of knowledge as one would naturally look for in a first-class cyclopedia were it up to date—which no cyclopedia is or possibly can be. Even the latest cyclopedias are generally one to five years behind date of consultation; and yet the average reader inquires more concerning things of the past three years than concerning things of the preceding three centuries.

Topics are treated in strict alphabetical order, and as often as the alphabet is covered a new volume begins and the same course is resumed. Subscriptions only 50 cents for each 500 pages. Specimen sent free on request. John B. Alden, Publisher, 10 and 12 Vandewater street, New York.

Damages to Bridges.

The Somerville Messenger prints the following this week in reference to the damage done Somerset county bridges last week by the flood. In addition to the Finderne bridge, new bridges will have to be constructed at Neshanic station, Burnt Mills, over the North Branch near C. S. Shurter's, and innumerable smaller ones in every township. The bridge near Captain Davey's at Weston was washed away, but can be replaced, as can also one near Charles Zanders', below Basking Ridge, which floated about 100 feet down the road. The bridge near Bock's mill, in Dog Watch Hollow, was completely destroyed, notwithstanding Tom Collins' efforts to hold it in place.

ON GUIANA'S FRONTIER.

Warlike Adventure of a Party of American Prospectors.

A Noble Mastiff Saves a Thoughtful Master's Life During a Sharp Encounter with a Band of Venezuelan Guerillas.

Special Kingston (Jamaica) Letter.

Some ten years ago, or in 1886, when I was down there, the region of the newly discovered gold fields of British Guiana was about the most uncomfortable spot on the continent for any man of Anglo-Saxon tongue or race to occupy. Even Americans were not safe. The English troubles with Venezuela had just begun to assume an acute phase; the era of English police and Venezuelan troops had not arrived and the whole wide territory of the gold belt was patrolled by a horde of guerillas who, it was whispered, were secretly encouraged by Venezuela for the purpose of keeping back the advance of English settlement. These brigands were no respecters of persons. All was fish that came to their net, and the gold seekers of that time and place, like our wild west pioneers, had to labor with pick in hand and the rifle at foot. As Sir Charles Bruce, the government secretary, said when granting our license to prospect: "The gold is there and is yours for the taking, but you have no protection. You must look after yourselves. The risk you take, like the gold you get, is your own personal affair—and the extent of the one just now is as great as the other is alluring."

DELIVERED A RATTLING VOLLEY.

But we did not scare. We were a party of five American mining experts sent down by a wealthy New York syndicate to prospect and report to them on the reality of the auriferous wealth of the new gold fields. We were not sent to do fighting, but having got so far, and that being an incident, like yellow fever, we proceeded. Besides, the head of the party, Col. Layton Gibson, was a fire-eater of the civil war and would never turn back on account of burnt powder. But we got together some 30 hardy negroes, most of them time-expired privates of the Afro-West Indian "bush-whacker" regiments, armed them with rifles and the inevitable machete, and plunged into the gloomy, repulsive forests along the tumultuous and raging waterways that intersect them and lead to the land of Raleigh's Eldorado.

The country is certainly an Eldorado. It oozes gold in clay, in gravel, and in quartz, and the river and creek beds are paved with it. But I should not advise any American or other white man who can earn $20 a week at home to go after it. The horrors of that journey linger with me still. From Santa Fé by way of Magellan's strait, it is the worst part of America to penetrate. We traveled in the crankiest and crampiest of dugouts—Guiana's only conveyance. Once seated, you could scarcely move for fear of upsetting them. And in the first days we had to move in our cockle shells by moonlight with him a magnificent mastiff nearly as big as a calf, which, whilst a most intelligent and adaptable creature that was never in the way, brought on board a colony of fleas that nearly drove us mad. Incessant washings whilst passing cataracts soon cured that evil. But there remained the cataracts themselves, which are the fiercest and most complicated series in America. Only the life-trained skill of the Guiana "Bovieanda" boatmen can dare encounter them. Then there was the sun; a furnace door is no hotter than the rays he rained on us from the unclouded brazen sky through a perfectly stagnant atmosphere. The only winds of the Guianese penetralia are tornadoes. In the shade it was even worse. When winding through the dense forests that sunlight never pierces the rivers become pestiferous with the reek of nature's excreta, and to this and the intensified closeness of the air is added the incessant assailings of venomous vermin from the bushes that frequently meet right across the stream, and through which the boats have to drive.

The nights are still worse. You camp at the most inviting or least repulsive spot met with during the afternoon. Here hammocks are slung between the trees—seldom or never is there room for the smallest tent—and the weary traveler "rests" among saurians from the river and reptiles from the forest, that the crocodiles seldom leave the water, and the South African serpent is not aggressive. Usually venomous, the latter is never vicious until attacked. Like Uncle Sam, he holds his overwhelming lethal power in for defense, not defiance." It is the insidious malaria that one really has to dread. At night you can smell, see and even feel it as it rises and floats on the tideless air. Happy he in whose system it does not soak! Then there is the sneaking vampire. He sucks your life-blood from exposed nose or toe, and, fit host for the malarial microbe that he is, ere departing fills you with the poison.

Ten days of this brought us to the heart of the gold region, and our work began. We naturally met many other prospectors, and all told the same tale: The land was sown with gold, but the guerillas were abroad. Victims who had escaped with life were numerous, but they had been robbed of their very clothes and turned adrift naked in the forests. Many a whitening skeleton that we saw told of others thus treated to whom succour had come too late. We, however, pushed forward and soon made one of the best locations I have ever seen. When rainfront transport is provided, it will be a true Eldorado. And here befell our great adventure. The spot was an open space between the forest and a creek, across which we were working, reef testing, in a clump of hills. Reconnoiting our strength, probably, the guerillas had not attacked us, but sent word that we must go away as we were Englisih gringos and the land Venezuelan. The colonel told the messenger shortly to go to thunder."-Next day came the attack.

Day had scarcely dawned when a scout brought news that the enemy were coming. In ten minutes we were under arms and assembling before the colonel's adjuta, or hut. But ere we could form up, a file of a dozen soldierly-looking fellows, in military caps and tunics, filed from the forest. Following came a mob of about 70 men headed as they scampered anyhow. All were armed with guns and carrying bayonets. Without parley the soldiers delivered a rattling volley!

Three of our men dropped and several were slightly wounded. The mob then delivered an ineffectual volley

"Ah! Bayonets. That won't do. Run for the trees, boys, and keep up an incessant fire on them; it'll loosen the dog and give him a fighting chance and join you in a minute," said the colonel.

Firing as we went we rushed to cover, even as the mob of guerillas started on a wild bayonet charge at us. We won the race across the open, and then a real battle begun, the enemy frantically attempting to dislodge us and we to keep them from entering the forest. They outnumbered us two to one, but the advantage of cover and repeating rifles was overwhelmingly compensative, and after an hour's hot fighting our assailants made off, leaving half their original number for us to bury.

We had won, but where was our captain, the colonel? No one had seen him during the fight, and now he was missing! Our only other loss was three killed and eight wounded, including myself, but none seriously. Most of the wounds were inflicted by chopped lead and shot from the guerillas' guns a they "rushed" the forest in the teeth of our rifle fire.

We found the colonel just behind his adjuta, prone on his face and unconscious, with the great mastiff keeping ravage, jealous guard beside him. Some distance off lay the corpse of a guerilla with the head split open and body frightfully lacerated. The colonel had a bad blow on the head, and a bayonet thrust in one thigh which had bled profusely, and at first we thought him dead. But his worst trouble was loss of blood, for he soon recovered and told us how it happened.

His delay in releasing the dog was the cause. The charging guerillas were already between him and us when he came out of the adjuta, so he passed to the back to take cover there and work his way round to us through the trees. But as he turned the angle of the hut, running with rifle over his shoulder and sword bayonet just drawn to adjust it, he actually ran against three guerillas who were charging along with guns at the "trail." A bayonet pierced his thigh, he struck out with the sword and received a crashing blow on the head, all in one instant. He remembered else was the accompanying low growl and leonine rush forward of the dog.

"And that's how you took and repaid me for 'the fighting chance for life,' you dear, faithful old cur!" he would say, he colonel, feebly patting the great log's head.

Quay as a Presidential candidate is showing that gentleman in a new light. Few people ever thought he would have the nerve to pass as such.

Talk about silver being one of the most valuable products of this country, why the average annual product of silver is about one-third the value of hen's eggs produced in the barnyards of this country.

Real estate trade in this vicinity has already felt the renewed confidence of the people and shows signs of quickening. The assurance that the trolley road is to be extended is also a good thing for the realty market.

Assemblyman Reed may soon expect to be known as the humorist-assemblyman. Last night he introduced a bill prohibiting the use of X or cathode ray opera glasses in any theatre in the Senate. The Speaker declared the bill out of order.

Senator Voorhees has a Jury Commission bill which provides for the appointment of two persons not of the same political party, by the Circuit Court Judge in each county, to select the jurors for each term of the court. The jurors, as usual, will be summoned by the Sheriff.

It is announced that Robert S. Green, of Elizabeth, will be made a member of the State Board of Railway Assessors. He is a son of the late Robert S. Green, and is a Democrat. Such nominations, if followed out all through Governor Griggs' administration, will make him a popular executive.

New Jersey now has 200 miles of macadam roads built under the State Aid Road Law, and fifty miles additional will be built this year. The State appropriation this year for roads is $100,000. In the past four years the roads of the State have been benefited through the State Aid law nearly one million dollars.

When it comes to charity, Plainfield leads the van. This city, with 18,000 people, gave to the Muhlenberg hospital over $4,000 in profits from the Kirmess. Elizabeth, with 50,000 people, has just held a carnival for the city hospital which cleared only $3,000. Elizabeth has almost three times the population of Plainfield, yet this city contributed one-third as much again for similar institutions under like circumstances.

The Elizabeth Board of Trade has arranged for a big dinner which all the progressive business men of the city will attend, and at which speeches will be made concerning the growth of the city and its possibilities for the future. The Press likes to see Plainfield original in all phases of life, but nevertheless it commends the Elizabeth affair to the local Board of Trade as something desirable to emulate. Activity is a quality that the Plainfield Board of Trade does not possess to any astonishing degree.

In an interview published on Saturday, Senator Sherman expressed his belief that in the next Congress both Senate and House would be sound-money bodies. The test vote in the Senate a fortnight ago was 42 to 35 in favor of the free coinage of silver, with six pairs which, if voted, would have completed the total of 80 votes. The Delaware vacancy stands for a sound-money vote whenever it is filled; so that the present division may be said to be 48 to 42. Of the thirty Senators whose terms expire March 4th, 1897, twenty-one are for free coinage, and their successors must number enough sound-money men to raise the vote on that side to 45 or 46.

Because Washington's birthday falls on Saturday this year, many merchants are in doubt as to whether or not they will observe the day by closing their stores. Generally speaking, business will be mostly suspended on that day and storekeepers, as a rule, when questioned as to their probable action, remark that they "will do as the rest do." While competition must dictate the policy of business men nowadays, yet it seems that storekeepers ought to get together and observe the holiday other than in the breach. The time which the average clerk has for his own diversion is not overabundant, and to be compelled to work on a holiday, when most of humanity is taking a rest, seems a little rough. It would be an admirable thing if Plainfield merchants would act in unison, and close their stores on Saturday.

Senator Sewell in an authorized interview states that he favors no Presidential candidate in particular.

The cider-joints are doomed. The ordinance prohibiting them from conducting inebriating incubators has received the signature of Mayor Gilbert.

Assemblyman Reed's yellow colored ballot envelope bill was passed by the Assembly yesterday. The genial Charles knows how to get them through.

Here is an opportunity for some literary cuss. Coin a word to designate the cathode ray and your fame will be made. No one has yet originated a desirable word to apply to the science of the new process of photography.

Senator Voorhees proposes an amendment to the Naturalization Law, abolishing the thirty day limit to special or local elections. It is held that the present law is unnecessarily harsh, and disfranchises many people.

Since the introduction of the anti-cigarette bill in the Legislature The Newark Advertiser says that among others, Assemblyman Reed, of Somerset, now do all their their thinking with a briar wood stuck between their teeth.

The new Constitutional amendments will cover the same ground as the old ones, except that the biennial sessions feature will be dropped, a radical alteration will be made in the section referring to the Court of Appeals, and possibly a paragraph will be inserted authorising the creation of Assembly districts.—Tribune.

A marriage license bill has been introduced and is intended to stop the free marriages at Camden. A fee of one dollar is fixed, and the minister performing the ceremony is required to return a duplicate of the license fully filled in on the clerk issuing the same. Severe penalties are provided for any false affidavit.

There is no political trap laid in the anti-cigarette bill now before the Legislature, but a large number of the members of both houses regard it with some awe. Many of Legislators are addicted to the use of the little roll of paper and tobacco, and while they do not wish to openly antagonize the moral element who are seeking its passage, yet they view its presence on the calendar with a feeling that they are between the devil and the deep sea. If they oppose it the wrath of its projectors will descend on their heads, if they support it their position will be highly inconsistent inasmuch as most of them think the cigarette is not as bad as pictured, and if they fail to stand either one way or the other, they will be subject to condemnation for a lack of moral courage.

Hangman Van Hise, of Newark, is again knocking at the door of the Legislature for recognition in his high art of hanging people. He has discovered by experience that the average Sheriff is too tender hearted to let the drop fall on the doomed individual, and he has found enough of them to make a livlihood at one hundred dollars per hanging. He thinks it would be much better if the State would give him a monopoly on this gruesome work by making his tenure in office sure so that he could apply up to date methods in the carrying out of the terrible sentence of the criminal courts. Van Hise wants a bill passed making him the power supreme over an establishment, specially dedicated to the taking off of undesirable members of society. He wants a part of the State Prison set aside where executions can be made privately and artistically. He wants the old form of the dangling noose retained, not having any experience in the use of the electric current.—Newark Advertiser.

The appropriation bills already introduced in the Legislature this year aggregate more than a quarter of a million dollars and most of them are likely to pass both houses. The measures in the Senate provide for $10,000 for an armory in Camden; $50,000 for the Railway Reformatory; $30,000 for the Jamesburg Reform School; $15,000 for an epileptic colony; $10,000 for an examination of the valley of the Passaic; $6,500 for a State Board of Animal Industry, and $6,000 for a house for women nurses at the Soldiers' Home. Aside from the usual appropriation for inaugural expenses, the House of Assembly has voted $500 to the commissioners who are to report on the advisability of establishing a home for old soldiers and their wives. It will soon be called upon to consider measures appropriating $5,000 for tablets on the battlefield of Chicamuga and $500 for the commissioners; and $1,000 for investigating the San Jose scale pest and its extermination. There are also other appropriation bills waiting for a favorable time for introduction.—Trenton True American.

shake it off

The general belief among doctors is that consumption itself is very rarely inherited. But the belief is becoming stronger that the tendency to consumption is very generally transmitted from parent to child. If there has been consumption in the family, each member should take special care to prepare the system against it. Live out doors; keep the body well nourished; and treat the first indication of failing health.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil, with Hypophosphites, is a fat-producing food and nervetonic. Its use is followed by improved nutrition, richer blood, stronger nerves and a more healthy action of all the organs. SCOTT'S EMULSION has been indorsed by the medical profession for twenty years. (Ask your doctor.) This is because it is always palatable—always uniform—always contains the purest Norwegian Cod-liver Oil and Hypophosphites.

A Great Enterprise.

Plans for one of the largest retail dry goods establishments in the world have been filed by Kimball & Thompson, architects of the Manhattan Life Building, on behalf of B. Altman & Co., for remodeling the latter's present establishment on Sixth avenue, and for an addition running through the block from Eighteenth to Nineteenth streets. The addition will cover an area 150 by 184 feet and to make room fifteen houses have been torn down. The entire building when completed will cover an area of 200 by 300 feet, fronting on Sixth avenue, Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets, New York.

DARING SNEAK THIEF.

ALMOST MADE AWAY WITH MR. AND MRS. ROWLEY'S JEWELRY.

Entered Their Apartments While Both Were in the Store and Then Ran Into Mrs. Rowley on Her Return.

A sneak thief came very near carrying off all the valuables of Frank Rowley, proprietor of the drug store at the corner of Somerset street and Craig place, last Friday night. Mr. Rowley resides in the rooms over the pharmacy. At about five o'clock Friday night Mrs. Rowley came down to the store and remained there about an hour. When she went up-stairs again she went to the bath room after the keys which she had left on a window ledge there. Just as she opened the door, a man rushed out of the room, pushed her against the wall and fled down the stairs. Mrs. Rowley was badly frightened and called her husband. The two searched the rooms and found, on the bed, a pillow-case packed full of silverware, jewelry and other valuables. Among them were Mrs. Rowley's diamond rings which she prizes very much. The only articles missing were a pair of ear-rings, a necklace and a bracelet. It is supposed that the thief made his way up-stairs while Mrs. Rowley was in the store, opened the door with a skeleton key and selected what he wanted. He was disturbed in his work by Mrs. Rowley and hid in the bath-room expecting that she would pass on to her room. She was unable to give any description of the thief as the shock of his sudden appearance was so great.

A POSSIBLE EVENT

Rich and Maeder Trying to Arrange For "Midsummer's Night's Dream."

Negotiations are, pending between Rich and Maeder, managers of Music Hall, and Augustin Daly, looking tooking toward a production here on the evening of March 2nd of Mr. Daly's enchanting spectacle of "Midsummer Night's Dream" in the same sumptuous manner Shakespeare's fanciful magical comedy was done by the famous manager at his important revivals of it in New York and London. This will mean that in case the negotiations are satisfactorily completed, that all the wonderful scenery and musical accompaniments will be used—the choruses, large orchestra, and the general paraphernalia in electric effects, etc., that distinguished the original production. To comprehend all the requirements will necessitate the employment of some fifty people.

But Mr. Daly will not risk any possible loss. If there is any encouragement whatever from the people of Plainfield a book of subscription will be opened in advance. Then the persentation here will be provisional. It would hardly seem possible that such an opportunity would be neglected. Due notice will be given as to place of booking.

Rockaway Valley Road Sold.

The Rockaway Valley, Morristown Extension, Railroad, which is part of the Rockaway Valley Railroad system, whose total length is twenty-six miles, extending from the White House, on the Central Railroad of New Jersey, to Morristown, was sold under foreclosure on Wednesday, February 5th, at Mendham, Morris county, by Master in Chancery Lindley Rowas, and brought $15,500. At the last sale, which was in the railroad station, there were present bidders, hopeful stockholders and a few who knew in advance that the J. N. Pidcock faction would buy in the road. This is the third sale of the Rockaway Valley Railroad sections, and in each instance the Pidcocks have been the owners. The Pidcocks say that they are going to build up the road, because it is a valuable property with a prosperous future.

THE GAY MASQUERADERS

THE ANNUAL EVENT OF RELEGATING ETIQUETTE TO THE REAR.

Frolicsome Dancers and Fantastic Costumes Make a Merry Scene in the Gesang and Turn Verein Hall Last Night.

What the French ball is to the urbane citizen of the metropolis the masquerade ball of the Gesang and Turn Verein Society is to those Plainfielders who once a year like to don a mask, attire themselves in fantastic costume, and relegate all conventional manners to the rear for the time being. This eighth annual event washeld in Saengerbund Hall Monday night and was attended by about five hundred merry makers.

The grand entree was delayed in starting, owing to the lateness of the costumes for the committee in arriving. Twenty minutes after 9 when O'Reilly's orchestra struck up the tuneful march "Peerless" and the committee, composed of H. Haurand, C. F. Meyer, G. Houseman, H. Vogel, J. Wirth, O. Keller, I. Kohner, M. Meissner, C. Kegler, and A. Wolffe, preceded by two young lads as courtiers, started the march. From that time on fun of a kind that recognized no such thing as etiquette was participated in by those whose features and, in most cases, identity were concealed by the masks. The masqueraders accosted the onlookers at the hall, and with assumed pose and walk, and squeaky or unduly harsh voices, jibed original puns and pithy observations into the auditor's ears, never discriminating as to whether or not previous acquaintance warranted their conduct.

They were out for a rollicking time and they rode on the high wave of incognito until the unmasking time came, and then there was many a surprised ejaculation by those who had been deceived as to the identity of some near friend. But the immutable inclinations of the masqueraders was not to be changed by the lifting of masks, and the spirit of brisk action and talk, accentuated by frequent visits to the refreshment room below, continued to mark the conduct of the dancers until the final waltz brought the event to an end. The costumes and dancers were as follows:

Baker, F. Burke: Ma tha, Irish Washerwoman, Jr. Schantz. Clown; Grosser Bigger Woman, F. H. Parkinson; West Point Cadet, Miss Jennie Waters and Mrs. S. Moore; Pocket Book Boarder, Miss Harant; Protector Paris, John Ratzer; Evening Star, Miss Minnie Lehr; Night, Miss Lillian Woodland; Spanish Dancer, Allie Moore; Snowdrop, Miss Bessie Alpine; Clown, Master Chas. AN AUCTION CLOSED THE FAIR.

Hope Chapel Will Gain Financially by the Event of Last Week.

The attendance at the Industrial Fair and Loan Exhibition which was held in Hope chapel, last week, was not very large Saturday evening when the event was brought to a close. The crowd present was a buying one, however, and a goodly sum was realized by those in charge.

During the evening Miss Carrie Dewey rendered favorite piano selections, which pleased all. The Crescent Avenue church choir did not appear, owing to a misunderstanding, and many expressed their regrets that they were unable to hear the choir sing.

About 9 o'clock F. H. Andrew's assumed the duties as auctioneer, and he made a good one, too. Nearly everything was disposed of at excellent prices, and here again the projectors reaped a good sum.

After the auction those in charge began to take down the booths and the decorations and clear the place for the Sunday services. The balance of the work will be concluded this week.

The affair throughout has been a great success both financially and socially, and everybody has had a most enjoyable time.

THE HOSPITAL WINS ALL.

WILL RECEIVE $10,000 BY A COURT DECISION MADE YESTERDAY.

Wins The Contest Over The Will of Henry F. Stites and its Appeal From The Orphan's Court to The Chancellor.

Muhlenberg hospital has won its appeal from the judgment of the Union County Orphan's Court by the decree of the Prerogative Court filed at Trenton Monday. It will be remembered that after a protracted contest over the will of Henry F. Stites, late of Fanwood, the Hospital defeated the heirs and became entitled to the residue of the estate after the payment of certain legacies. No appeal was taken from this judgment. The next contest grew out of a dispute between the administratrix of Mrs. Stites and the Hospital as to who was entitled to certain dividends on railroad stock, etc., and whether the widow was entitled to an exemption of $200 in addition to her life estate.

All those questions were argued before the Orphans' Court and all but one were decided in favor of the Hospital.

Craig A. Marsh, who was counsel for the Hospital, advised the Board of Governors that, in his opinion, the Court was wrong in the only question decided against the Hospital and advised that an appeal be taken to the Prerogative Court, held by the Chancellor. The Board of Governors followed the advice and directed counsel to take the appeal. It was this appeal which has been decided in favor of the Hospital as stated above.

Elias R. Pope is the administrator appointed on motion of the Hospital, and he says that the land and personal property together, which the Hospital will get all told, will in round numbers be $10 000.

A PERFUMERY COMING.

XXX-Compound-Ray Process to Astound the Plainfield Public.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—After repeated interviews the officials of Plainfield fail to appreciate my plans or to acknowledge my greatness and I, therefore, turn to you for assistance in arousing public opinion to favor a public work of lasting value.

I am the Plainfield representative of the Bad Odor Remover and Perfume Manufacturing Co., Limited. The business of my company is to catch and to corner bad odors and by a XXX-compound-ray process convert them into a very delicate and delightful perfume.

My company is informed that serious legal complications are sure to follow the complete operation of the sewer beds.

Competent persons say the air around the sewer farm is apt to be filled with germs, bacteria and other frightful things; that people will shun the foul and unclean neighborborhood; that legal action will follow legal action until Plainfield will be in the hands of lawyers and receivers.

The purpose of my company is to help Plainfield to avoid the law and to turn the sewer beds into a veritable Garden of Eden by means of our XXX-compound-ray system. We propose to change the disagreeable odors into the fragrance of the flowers of June, to make the place healthy and exhilarating, to gladden the heart and strengthen the system so that all will make merry, to cause the waters of Green brook to become famous as a bracing tonic, renowned for properties of longgevity and peerless for sparkling purity and flashing beauty, and to make the spot a hygiene resort and the mecca of the world.

Carlsbad, Nice, Baden-Baden, Scheveningen, Saratoga, Hot Springs, Florida and California will all be eclipsed by the Plainfield sewer beds.

Railroad advertisements will read Niagara Falls and the west via Plainfield sewer beds.

The Pennsylvania, Lehigh Valley, D. L. & W., Jersey Central and local electric roads will run into town.

Large, palatial depots will be erected. Hotels and mansions will spring up in the night. Plainfield real-estate will boom and property located nearest the celebrated retreat will be the most desirable and valuable.

Think of the air always charged with the aroma of flowers, think of the springs of water with their diamond-brilliancy, think of health, virtue and purity, think of the purling brook and listen to the gentle murmur of the fountain of youth—what a place!! Ponce de Leon was born too soon—he should have waited.

We will guarantee to all these things if the Mayor and Common Council will advance $50,000 to pay our working expenses for the first year.

The XXX-compound-ray process is hereby respectfully submitted,

Chatham Lockinvar.

North Plainfield, Feb. 14th.

POLICE INSPECTION.

Metropolitan Methods Now in Vogue With the City Police.

A decidedly new feature has been in*troduced into the police department by* Chairman E. T. Barrows, of the police committee. Every Saturday afternoon the regulars are called into the chief's office and put through a systematic drill by Mr. Barrows, who is a military man. At the same time a thorough inspection is held, when each officer is obliged to show his fire-alarm and station-house keys, and he is supposed to have all the buttons on his clothes, and his accoutrements are expected to be in first-class condition.

Thus far the men have done good work and it is thought that before long they will become proficient in the drills.

Ought to be Stopped.

Some of the residents of Sandford avenue are complaining that a number of their neighbors of the borough deposit their garbage and ashes on the bank of Green brook and spoil the appearance of the place, besides endangering the health of residents.

FONDNESS FOR GOSPEL.

THAT WAS ONE OF THE LATE D. F. RANDOLPH'S CHARACTERISTICS.

Dr. Yerkes Says That The Life of Christ Was in Him and Changes Did Not Unsettle Him to any Known Degree.

The funeral services over the remains of the late Daniel Dodge Fitz Randolph, were held from his late residence, corner of Seventh and Liberty streets, Sunday afternoon at 2:30. The was a large attendance of friends and relatives, and noticeably a number of aged people who had known Mr. Randolph for many years.

A quartette composed of Misses Nancy Randolph, F. May Grant, Mr. Smith and William Holmes, under the direction of C. W. McCutchen, rendered an impressive selection, after which Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes read appropriate scripture selections and spoke in part as follows: "We are summoned through the Providence of God to pay our respects to our brother, who is dead, yet lives. There is a feeling of satisfaction mingled with grief on an occasion like this when a child of God is permitted to live here awhile and is then taken home. There are great changes peculiar to human life and the world constantly taking place.

"There are many present today who can go further back in their acquaintance of our brother than I can during the three score and fourteen years that he lived. We are inclined to think of time as duration, which is more in *years than in time. It is not meas*ured in time, but by our acts and deeds. What enters into our lives and history is what affects us. These great changes are everywhere. The world is not the same today as it was a year ago.

"There are new theories, doctrines, etc., that come to us constantly. Every day and year makes changes, but there is nothing that doesn't change and that is Eternal Life. God don't change, He is always the same. In speaking of our departed brother there are many changes. He had trials and troubles, but he lived through them all. In 1843 he confessed Christ and from 1854 he was for years a deacon in the church. The life of Christ was in him and changes did not unsettle him. One great thing was evident, his fondness for the truth of the gospel. He also loved the Kingdom of God for his heart was given to his Lord and Master. He led a life of fidelity and trust in the *church and in business, for his char*acter was rooted in the christian faith, which was constantly budding and blossoming. The last time I saw him I remarked that 'the Lord would be with him' and he replied, 'the Lord is with me and that is the best of all.' The doctor closed his remarks by speaking words of comfort as he bereaved mourned. He then offered a deeply impressive prayer, after which the quartette rendered "Beyond the Sinking and the Weeping."

After those present had taken a last look upon the form of the departed, interment was made in Evergreen cemetery. Those who served as pall bearers were officers in the First National Bank, of which the decedent was director. They were F. S. Runyon, William M. Stillman, J. Wesley Johnson and Mulford Estil.

Miss Kingston's Funeral.

There was a very large attendance of friends and relatives at the funeral services of the late Miss Mary Elizabeth Kingston, held yesterday afternoon at 2:30 from the house on East Second street. Rev. E. M. Bodman officiated and after reading several appropriate Scripture selections spoke a some length on the life of the departed, telling of her Christian character. It was impossible for all who desired to be present, as the room was limited. The floral tributes were beautiful, and consisted of a pillow of roses from the sisters, a star of choice flowers from Rebeka Degree Lodge, No. 4, I. O. O. F., who were present in a body, and several smaller pieces comprising wreaths and bunches of the choicest flowers.

The bearers were Harry Dencklau, C. Thorn, B. Webster, Theo. Kurzhals, Jr., Harvy Thorn and Harry Ackerman. Interment was in Hillside cemetery.

Illustrated Lecture on Venice.

Through the liberality of the Society for the Extension of University Teaching, under whose auspices Dr. W. Hudson Shaw lectures, illustrations will be provided for his lecture on Venice, to be given on Friday afternoon, at Seminary Hall, at 3:30 p. m. As Dr. Shaw's illustrations are very fine, this feature will add much to the attractiveness of the occasion.

He'll Make a Good One.

Charles Dodwell, conductor of the 8:27 a. m. New York train, who resides at Dunellen, is one of the candidates spoken of for the office of chief of the fire department of that place. The Press is glad to recommend so suitable and popular man as Mr. Dodwell for the position.

SOME LEGISLATIVE TALK.

PROPOSED RE-ORGANIZATION OF HIGH COURTS MAKES TALK.

The Legislature Has Done Nothing So Far, But Adjournment is Already Talked Of in Four Weeks Time.

There are to be a number of important committee hearings Monday and Tuesday in the Legislature, says the Sun. The most interesting feature will be that on Tuesday noon, before the Senate Judiciary Committee. The Supreme Court meets on Tuesday, and there will be many well-known lawyers in Trenton, from all over the state. The Senate committee will then try to get the sentiment on the proposed re-organization of the Court of Errors and Appeals and the Supreme Court, and if there is an agreement among the lawyers a constitutional amendment will be drawn and adopted by the Legislature. The objections against re-organization have been from the lay Judges of the Court of Errors and Appeals, the opposition of Supreme Court Justices who, after having been members of the highest court, do not want to be relegated to second place, and there has been objection on account of the increased cost of maintaining a new court. The petitions signed by the members of the bar indicates that a separate and independent Court of Errors and Appeals is wanted, and most of the speakers at the committee hearing last week referred to the influence which judges who heard cases in the Supreme Court exerted when those cases were heard on appeal.

To-day hearings are to be given in a number of pending railroad bills, including Bullock's Three-cent-fare bill. On Tuesday the Committee on Education will hear the friends of the bill repealing the Township School of 1851. The law creates each township into a school district, with nine trustees, and makes possible township high and graded schools. By the old law there was a school district, with a Board of Trustees and clerk, in every little settlement, and the opposition to the new law comes from these petty politicians who formerly held places and wielded some influence in their localities. The State Board of Education and State Superintendent Polland favor the new law, and will oppose the proposed change.

In the five weeks of the session the Legislature has passed just two bills. This do-nothing record is said to be unparalleled in New Jersey history, but it is in accordance with the policy of the Republican legislators, who fear the effect on the approaching Presidential election of any mistake on important measures, while Gov. Grigg's *opposition to the pilinz up of any un*necessary laws prevents action on the schemes of localities There is already gossip concerning adjournment, and it is believed that the session will not last more than four weeks longer, possibly no more than three. The Legislature has 275 bills yet to act on, nearly equally divided between the two Houses.

Tonight the Senate will confirm the nominations sent in by the Governor last week; others are expected to be sent in tomorrow. The chief interest now centres in the Chancery clerkship and keepership of the State prison. The former office will not be filled until the Voorhees bill fixing its salary at $6 000, a year is passed. For the superintendency of the prison there are so many candidates as to embarrass the Governor. Those with the strongest backing are said to be ex Congressman Brewer and ex-Sheriff Skirm, of Mercer, and ex-Senator Roe, of Gloucester. Col. Anthony R. Kuser, of the Governor's staff, has told the Governor that he does not seek reappointment as a member of the State Board of Assessors, and Mercer county has three new Democratic candidates in Mahlon R. Margerum, ex-Sheriff Bergen and ex-Mayor Joseph R. Shaw, all of Trenton. William Moore, of Gloucester, Alanson A. Vance, of Morris, and Tyler Parmly, of Essex, are seeking places in the State Board of Taxation.

Surprised The Nurses With Money.

Peter Gayety, who is at Muhlenberg hospital, being treated for a chronic disease, surprised the nurses on Saturday when he disclosed $276, which he had in his pockets. It was his hard earned savings and will be taken care of until he is able to leave the hospital.

MR. MACPHIE TO LEAVE.

THE Y. M. C. A. TO LOSE AN EARNEST AND VALUABLE WORKER.

Announcement Made Yesterday that He Will go to Massachusetts to Become the Assistant State Secretary of that State.

Those present at the men's meeting in the Y. M. C. A. building yesterday afternoon were somewhat surprised when it was announced that Physical Director D. A. McPhie would sever his connection with the Plainfield Association March 1st. The change has been under consideration by Mr. Mac Phie for some time, and as a result he will leave to take a position as an assistant state secretary in Massachusetts.

During his stay here Mr. MacPhie has won many warm-hearted friends who will regret, exceedingly, that he is going away. He goes to a larger field to labor and one that will give him broader scope for usefulness in Christian work.

Next Sunday afternoon he will conduct a farewell meeting at the Y.M.C.A. building and there will be, no doubt, a large number of people present, who will wish him God-speed in his new field of labor. It has not yet been decided who will take his position as physical director at the association building

HOW THEY STEAL JEWELRY.

Men and Women Engaged in This Business Are Clever.

They Are Likewise the Aristocrats of the Criminal World—Interesting Chat with a Chicago Diamond Importer.

Special Chicago Letter.

Tricks and schemes for stealing jewelry are as numerous as they are shrewd and well planned.

The professional jewelry thief is an aristocrat among his fellows. He is not, like the vulgar shoplifter, an outwardly abject specimen of humanity with the marks of depravity ill-concealed by dress and bearing, but he appears to be a perfect gentleman. He is invariably well dressed and educated. The nature of his profession conditions this. Jewelry and precious stones are guarded by their owners with such tender solicitude that unusual sagacity and a certain finesse de monde are required of the thief who would approach his victim without arousing suspicion. Moreover, the small size of the valuables gives the robber an opportunity to play all sorts of tricks which could not be utilized in stealing bulkier goods. It is in the devising of new plots in which the brain of the jewelry thief is constantly engaged; one scheme after another is "worked" on the poor jeweler, until—to use technical language—"the trade gets the hang of it," when a new scheme is substituted.

The writer of this article had opportunity, a few days ago, to learn something of the tricks of jewelry-stealing. He and several other visitors were sitting in the office of a diamond importer on State street, Chicago, chatting with the proprietor, when an elegantly-dressed lady entered the establishment, and asked to be shown an assortment of loose diamonds. The proprietor produced a package containing a score of high-grade stones, which the woman picked up, not with the tweezers provided for the purpose, but with her fingers. Meanwhile the proprietor watched her closely. She fumbled nervously amongst the stones, when the importer suddenly remarked in a sharp voice: "Excuse me, madam, didn't you drop one of those stones just then?"

"I guess not," was the haughty answer.

The diamond dealer smiled sarcastically and said: "Permit me to examine the sole of your shoe, madam; you may have stepped on the stone."

"Sir, what do you mean by insulting me?" cried the woman, as she stamped her right foot furiously. "I shall have you arrested at once."

"The arresting will all be done by me," the importer replied, "unless you allow me to pick that diamond out of the sole of your right shoe before you have stamped it completely into the leather."

At this the "lady" succumbed. She raised her foot slightly, the proprietor picked the missing stone out of the sole of the shoe, and the prospective customer was gone.

The diamond dealer grinned—a joyous, triumphant grin. "I fooled her that time," he said, as he counted his diamonds and locked them up in his safe. "I'm on to those people as soon as they come into my office. The world are full of expert thieves who make a specialty of jewelry, especially precious stones."

"Are they all as swell as this woman?" one of the visitors asked.

"They all dress stylishly," the proprietor answered, "and most of them come in carriages. Women are more dangerous than men. In the first place, they are more skillful, more polished and often shrewder than their male co-workers; then they have thick hair, puffy dresses, nooks and corners everywhere to hide stolen property, and lastly, even when our suspicion is aroused, we are less likely to express it to a woman than a man. Men and women thieves alike are very likely to lie. Why, the rascals are so stuck on themselves they wouldn't think of stealing anything except what is strictly in the line of their specialty."

"Have you been robbed very often?"

"They don't get ahead of us very often," the diamond dealer began, wistfully. "Our house has suffered several losses by confidence games. These are very common. A party, giving the name of a wealthy family, orders samples of jewelry sent to the residence for selection. An accomplice, who through some pretext has entrance to the house, is in waiting there, and takes the samples from the messenger at their delivery. He steps into the house, remaining there only until the messenger has disappeared. The jeweler finds great difficulty in handling such cases, for if he expresses any suspicion toward the parties with whom he is dealing, he takes the chances of making a mistake and of losing a very profitable customer."

By this time the diamond dealer had "warmed up," and told story after story about shrewd jewelry thieves who didn't succeed in fooling him.

"When I was in business in New York," he continued, "I was almost tricked one time by an elderly man who inspected my stock of loose rubies. He pretended to be very near-sighted, and put his nose so close to the stones that it seemed to rub right against them. After much rummaging, he bought a cheap stone and paid for it. Just as he was leaving I discovered the loss of several of the finest rubies. We held him to account, but the stones were not found on his person. Close examination, however, and the timely effects of a dose of medicine, disclosed the fact that the rubies were not on, but in his person. The rascal then admitted that he had had a certain kind of extremely sticky gum on his nose, with which he had picked up the stones. A skillful maneuver of the handkerchief transferred them first into his pocket, and then, when detection was imminent, into his stomach. A sticky gum is very frequently used. The lightest touch will make the stones adhere to it. The thieves press it between their fingers, or under their finger nails, or behind their ears, or on the sole of their shoes, as the woman did who came here to-day."

"Here is one of the gum tricks. The first thief—a woman—chews gum, which she pastes after the vulgar fashion, under the lid of the counter. In an unguarded moment she presses a ring, perhaps, into the gum. The loss is discovered; she is accused, is searched, but the missing jewelry is not found, neither on her nor elsewhere, as no one thinks of its being pasted under the counter. Soon after the first thief has left the accomplice arrives. He has been informed of the exact location of the gum, and it is an easy matter for him to take it away. No suspicion will ever rest on him, as the loss was discovered before he ever entered the store. The trick is obsolete now, for the jewelers have got the hang of it."

"How about stealing bulky goods?" some one asked.

"Well, that is a branch of the profession that requires less ingenuity. Umbrellas, half open, are useful receptacles. Half the stock of a jewelry store can disappear in the puffy sleeves, the bushy hair and the stockings of one woman. Toy babies of rubber are favorite playthings. They are huddled up to look quite natural, but they are fed, not on milk and taffy, but on necklaces, amulets and gold chains."

Just then another diamond dealer entered the office.

"Talk about jewelry stealing!" he exclaimed. "Have you heard of the trick tried on me last week? It was a woman—swell as usual. She wanted to see my loose pearls, and while examining them she munched an apple, the core of which she threw out of the window. A beggar woman who stood outside picked up the core as if to eat it. My suspicion was aroused. I told my clerk to stop the woman. What do you think? There were four of the finest pearls pressed into that apple core. That trick didn't fool me, but the two women called on X., Y. & Co. the same day, and X., Y. & Co. are out two pearls and a thanksgiving."

Then the two dealers chuckled at their own sagacity and the stupidity of their competitors. E. T. GUNDLACH.

Let Great Britain Pause.

The British lion may roar and roar,
The Yankee eagle will soar and soar,
Twice the world around he'll go,
And is ready to twist in a whole lot more.

These lines, which were sent to the Chicago Tribune by an agonized poet residing in that neighborhood, are printed in order to convey to the misguided people of Great Britain some idea of what awaits them if they deliberately provoke this country to war. This paragraph is not a circumstance compared to what will follow when hostilities actually begin. Let England pause.

IN HONOR OF LINCOLN.

Brilliant Assemblage of Patriots Gathered in This City.

CHAS. J. FISK ELECTED PRESIDENT.

Three of the Announced Speakers Were Unable to Be Present, But Two Plainfield Clergymen Were Called on at the Last Moment and Carried Off the Honors of the Evening—Patriotic Address By Rev. Jocelyn Johnstone Took the Guests by Storm—List of New Officers and the Plainfielders Who Were Elected to Membership—John Kean the Centre of Attraction Among Politicians.

Brilliant thoughts and patriotic sentiments, combined with delectable viands and supreme sociability, made the fourth annual dinner of the Union County Lincoln Association in the Casino of the Union County Country Club Wednesday an eminent success.

The diners were representative of Union county's best and most intelligent citizens, and it is pardonable for The Press, speaking with local pride, to say that in the line of toast-making the Plainfield speakers easily and gracefully carried off the honors, their remarks being inculcated with lofty sentiments that completely enthused the patriotic minds of those who were gathered to revere the memory of the man who saved his country—Abraham Lincoln.

At half-past seven the guests surrounded the tables and after divine invocation by Dean Rodman, of this city, were seated at the places assigned to them. The menu, prepared and served by Max Wierig, was an elaborate one and was ended at eleven o'clock with cigars. The tables, four in number, were presided over by William T. West, president of the association. The guests of honor who were to respond to the toasts were, with the exception of Hon. Edward C. Stokes, unable to be present. Hon. Joseph G. Cannon was detained in Washington on important Congressional matters, Hon. John S. Wise was unable to come from an important lawsuit in Virginia, and owing to a death and other urgent business, Hon. Roswell G. Horr was also compelled to be absent. The officers, however, resorted to Plainfield speakers as substitutes, and were more than pleased with the result.

During the time the dinner was in progress the guests, many of whom are prominent and influential in State political affairs, mingled among those at the different tables, chatting about this or that. Prominent among the politicians was John Kean and Senator Voorhees, but to the former there was constant homage paid by the lesser lights in the political arena. Mr. Kean occupied one of the seats at the speakers' table, and when he was not moving around the room—and he seemed to make it his business to greet everyone present with whom he had even a passing acquaintance—he was incessantly surrounded by a coterie of men who kept his attention with conversation more important than that which ordinarily passed over the dinner table. Mr. Kean was easily the lion of the hour, so to speak, among the guests.

Directly opposite him at the other end of the table sat Senator Voorhees. While the Senator was an attraction for many, yet it was plainly to be seen that the attention paid to his political antagonist completely overshadowed his personality. The cheery and familiar "I am very glad to see you" of the Senator, was heard, however, on all sides, and for a few minutes he and Kean were seen chatting pleasantly together.

But the great majority of the guests were not there to talk politics, and all such thoughts were banished from their minds when the popping corks and flowing product of the vine put them in a jolly mood. The diners mutually divided themselves into little parties, within easy hearing distance of each others voices, told jokes, anecdotes and experiences at other events, and had a time of mirth in general.

The toast card was as follows:

The Memory of Abraham Lincoln.

"Strange mingling of mirth and tears,
Of all that is gentle and just, humorous and honest, merciful, wise, laughable, noble and divine, and interwoven to the use of man; while through all, and over all, an infinite tenderness, a boundless devotion, and loyalty to truth; and upon all, the shadow of the tragic end." Robert G. Ingersoll

Abraham Lincoln. Jocelyn Johnstone
"President Lincoln excelled all his contemporaries, he also excelled most of the eminent rulers of every time, in the humanity of his nature; in the constant assertion of reason over passion and feeling; in the art of dealing with men; in fortitude, never disturbed by adversity; in capacity for delay when action was fraught with peril; in the power of impelling action when decision when delays were dangerous; in comprehensive judgment which towers like the tall peak of mountains of nations and of posterity, and in the union of enlarged patriotism, wide philanthropy, and the highest political justice, by which he was enabled to save a nation and emancipate a race." George B. Boutwell

The Great Executive. Ira B. Wheeler
"He grew according to the need; his mind mastered the problem of the day; and as the problem changed, so did the dimension of it. Rarely was a man so fitted to the event, * * * He was the true child of the American people in his time; the true representative of the common mother of his country, the pulse of twenty millions throbbing in his heart, the thought of their minds articulated by his tongue." Ralph Waldo Emerson

Emancipation Proclamation and its Results. Hon. Edward C. Stokes

"And so, vicariously suffering,
Over stupendous ills he rose supreme,
Set Freedom free made that a real thing
Which all the world had thought a splendid dream."

Across the red and booming tide of war
He used the evangel of eternal right.
The message brave that linked the ancient ays-ll

And rang and echoed far:
Above the battle at its stormiest height
He heard each chain of slavery as it fell."
Maurice Thompson

His Place in the Hearts of the People. Rev. A. H. Lewis

"No other name has such electric power on every true heart of the people. Since Washington is the most revered, Lincoln is the best-loved man that ever trod this continent." Theodore L. Cuyler

After the physical repast was over and the guests settled themselves for the mental feast that was to come, William West, president of the association, rose in his place. He was greeted with a round of cheers. "Plainfield, Union county's second and fairest daughter, has acquitted herself most nobly tonight," he said, and then he thanked the Plainfielders for their kindly reception of the association and the magnificent repast which had just been concluded, and said that from the way in which it had disappeared Plainfield must never again doubt the "voracity of Union county."

The administration of President Lincoln was, he said, the focal point of American history. Freedom to all was a new thing in government for individuals and had never before been recognized by countries. He remarked on the unstable condition of the country when Lincoln was called to its head, but that, somewhat different from the Administration of the present day, the Executive called to the head of the Government called the best and brightest of his party. Lincoln, however, remained the true head of his administration and directed all its movements. Mr. West next dwelt on the fact that Lincoln was entirely unknown to the people and inexperienced in executive affairs when he was elected, and how his great ability made itself felt while he won his way into the hearts of the people.

"Few people," exclaimed the speaker, "are born never to die and all agree that he was one of them." Mr. West compared Lincoln's directness of speech and his writings, so easily understood by the people, with those of the communications of the executives of the latter days which he said, had to be read and re-read before they could be understood, and not always then. He praised Lincoln's quickness of thought and his ready answers that made him such a great debater, and told of an incident that happened at Hampton Roads when Lincoln was conferring with the Confederate commissioners. Lincoln would not recognize them as commissioners of another Government and one of them tried to argue with him. The southern man cited the example of Charles I who recognized the Commonwealth. "But," said Lincoln, 'although I don't know much about history, it seems to me that Charles I lost his head."

In closing Mr. West said: "Never has man risen from such abject poverty as Lincoln. This man, unaided and alone, rose to a power recognized, not only by ourselves but by similar organizations all through the country, as one of the foremost men of his time. It is but right that we should pay tribute to a man to whom this country is under such obligations. Is it but right that we should contribute something to the man who has contributed so much to this country. Abraham Lincoln was the foremost one of his time and second only to that Greater Power that directed him. Let me ask you all to rise in memory of him."

As one man everybody rose and silently drank the toast "The Memory of Abraham Lincoln."

Congressman Cannon was unable to be present on account of pressure of duties, and President West said in excusing him: "Illinois furnished us not only with a Lincoln but a Grant, and I am sure, out of respect to her, we will forgive her for not giving us a Cannon to celebrate with."

Rev Jocelyn Johnstone, D. D., was introduced as the speaker on the toast "Abraham Lincoln." His speech was a magnificent one, since as he had had no time to prepare it, only having been asked after the dinner had commenced. The sentiment of the toast was read by Mayor Alex. Gilbert. Dr. Johnstone spoke of the sudden call to speak and said he considered it the greatest honor that had ever been conferred on him since his arrival in this county, to come before such a distinguished assemblage of freemen and speak on such a wonderful man. During his stay in this country he had learned to love the country and its traditions and people, and was proud to be a citizen of it. He told how, in the prime of manhood, when studying at a European university, he had first learned of Lincoln and his grand and noble conduct, and how he then learned to worship him. His speech was interrupted every little while by loud cheers and applause. As is usually the custom among ministers, Dr. Johnstone said he would divide his speech into three heads and, as a famous English divine suggested to those who should never come to the pulpit without a sermon prepared, he would go all around the subject in the first head, go away from in the second, and never come back to it in the third.

He spoke of Lincoln typifying the true American institutions, which included the liberty of individuals. Lincoln sprang from the people and was distinctly a true representative. He remarked, from personal experience on the feelings of one who comes to a country where there are no class distinctions and all the people enjoy equal rights. He knew that this country was greater than all others because it recognizes political ability and intellectual power in all. The applause at this point was deafening. The speaker next discussed the secret power of Lincoln, and spoke of him as self schooled, self-disciplined, and self-contained. His speeches showed that he was saturated with the spirit of the Gospel and the immortal Shakespeare. The greatest piece of Anglo-Saxton composition was, he said, the speech at Gettysburg by the great statesman, the greatest statesman and the greatest man this country ever produced. Lincoln was never disturbed by adversity. When that terrible storm of Civil War was raging over this country he was at the helm of the ship of State and steered it safely into harbor. Although he had a sympathetic heart, he did not turn aside at the sights of anguish, but worked with might and main to strike the shackles off the slaves and see all men free and equal. Dr. Johnstone spoke of the critics of Lincoln and how they claimed that he was not orthodox.

The speaker, declared, however, that Lincoln was an agent of Jesus Christ in aid of humanity.

Dr. Johnstone told most feelingly of the end of Lincoln and how he died a martyr to humanity. The hand of the assassin struck down, he said, a man with greater heart and intellect than ever before was seen in the history of the world. Judging his life from a standpoint of dollars and cents, it was a failure but, looking with humanity's eyes, it was a glorious success. And then the speaker closed with an eloquent burst of patriotism that stirred the hearts of those that heard it, and brought forth such applause as was never heard in the Casino before.

President West read a telegram from Hon. John S. Wise stating that it would be impossible to come as he was engaged in an important suitin Virginia. President West expressed his great regret at the absence of so many of the advertised speakers and said it their duty to come after they had promised to. But, he said, as others had been conscripted into the war, so Ira B Wheeler, of Elizabeth, had been conscripted into service tonight and would respond to the toast, 'The Great Executive." Senator Foster M Voorhees read the sentiment of the toast.

Mr. Wheeler referred to the grave of the substitute for Lincoln and said that he would be willing to die to have a similar inscription over him. Mr. Wheeler spoke of the hardness to understand the conflicting currents Lincoln had to meet. He was called upon to show great wisdom and forethought. Although Lincoln was born and spent his early life in obscurity, he was not degraded by it, for some of the best blood in the country ran through his veins. It is a misconception of him to say he was frivolous. He had, however, an exquisite sense of humor. And Mr. Wheeler told several incidents illustrating Mr. Lincoln's humor. Lincoln was not humor, but melancholy. The most pathetic figure in all the war was that man bearing his country's burdens and weeping for her sorrows.

The leader of the opposition to the race track bill, Hon. Edward C. Stokes, was introduced by President West as the next speaker. Senator Voorhees read the sentiment attached to the toast, "Emancipation Proclamation and its Results." In starting Mr. Stokes remarked that although he was the only advertised speaker to respond it was not the survival of the fittest. He spoke of the great proclamation and how its author had pronounced it the chief act of his administration and the principal event of the nineteenth century. He then discussed the causes of the destruction of slavery, that old institution whose power was so strong that it seemed invulnerable and said that the nation had to choose between the absolution of the slaves and dissolution of the country. He told how after mounting of the proclamation and the joining of the fight for liberty and the fight for freedom, the flag advanced until all was over.

A new civilization followed it, for before labor was dishonorable, but it then became respectable, and this country literally went to work. It inaugurated the reign of the people, the principle of which was laid down in the Declaration of Independence.

Rev. A. H. Lewis next responded to the toast of "His Place in the Hearts of the People," in place of Hon. Roswell G. Horr, who was said in part: Lincoln was of the people, and the people recognized their own. He was a warrior, he was a statesman, but above all was the man. All felt that he was their brother. All through the nation he is enshrined as not being above the nation but being one of it. He always said in his proclamations "let us." Dr. Lewis then referred to that sad April day when the news of Lincoln's death was spread over the land. It was then that we knew what he was to the nation.

It was the funeral of the pride of the nation. The shadow of that pall was in every home. He was the Lincoln of no State or of no party; he was the Lincoln of the people. Let not his spirit be forgotten; we need statesmen now when personal greed and not war, is at the front; when Senators risk the welfare of their own nation for a silver mine. Let us hope that something will come from this meeting to show our children that there is still that patriotism in us that was shown in '60 and '61. Let us rise higher to our conception of citizens and be men who think more of country than of personal interests. Dr. Lewis seemed to have found the keynote of the meeting, for his eloquent address moved even the most sluggish heart, and his words could hardly be heard above the tumultuous applause.

Dr. Lewis was the last speaker, and after he had concluded, the visitors from down the road hurried to the special train that left Plainfield soon after one o'clock.

Previous to the dinner the annual meeting of the association was held in one of the parlors of the Country Club and the following officers elected: President, Charles J. TRINITY'S GOOD TIME.

DELECTABLE VIANDS SERVED BY THE LADIES OF THE CHURCH.

The Lecture Room Decorated for the Occasion Gave It a Most Hospitable Look—Those in Charge of the Affair.

Pedestrians on Park avenue early last Friday had their attention attracted by a transparency, displayed in front of P. M. Demarest's grocery store, on which were the rather suggestive words, "Supper at the Trinity Reformed Church Tonight." Those that took the implied invitation found that they made no mistake in doing so. The night was not a particularly pleasant one but the congregation of the Trinity Reformed church is always a loyal one and the people turned out remarkably well, while a number of outsiders were also attracted by the good things. The supper was given under the auspices of the Ladies Christian Work Society of the church.

The appearance of the lecture room where the supper was held was a pleasing one to the new comer. Each table was lighted by a handsome piano lamp, while snowy linen, pretty china and silver-ware, and well-served dishes tempted all to try the excellent supper that had been provided. Besides the regular supper tables there were three others where lemonade, candy and fancy goods and aprons were sold. At one, Miss Jennie Quick and Miss Emma Gillem, served lemonade, not of the "Sunday-school picnic" style, to the crowd of thirsty buyers. At a prettily decorated table, candies of all kinds were sold by Miss Virginia VanWinkle, Miss Minnie Williams and Mrs. Will F. Williams, members of "Whatsoever Circle," King's Daughters. The fancy goods and apron table was presided over by Mrs. Harry Marshall, Mrs. William C. Startup and Mrs. J. Beckman.

The first of the tables at which supper was served was presided over by Mrs. A. L. Force, assisted by Miss Lizzie Dunn and Miss Jennie Ross as waitresses. Mrs. Oscar W. Dunham presided over the next, and her waitresses were Miss Cora Laire and Miss Adelaide Baxter. Mrs. T. E. Hazell was in charge of another, assisted by Miss Florence Smalley and Mrs. E. E. Anthony. Guests at the fourth table were looked after by Mrs. P. A. Emmons, assisted by Miss Laura Emmons, while Mrs. Henry VanName, Miss Florence White and Miss Emma Cutter were established at the other table. Frank A. Church guarded the door and received tickets.

Although the visitors did not see the kitchen, it was by far the most important part of the supper and the good things that came from that direction testified as to the ability of those in charge there. Mrs. P. M. Demarest, chairman of the committee that arranged the affair, made that room her headquarters and looked especially after the welfare of the eatables. Mrs. J. F. MacDonald was her first assistant and looked after the supper room and the treatment of the guests. The dainties were prepared by Mrs. F. A. Church, Mrs. A. M. Gillem, Mrs. J. Krymer and Mrs. Seaman Williams.

After nearly everybody had finished their supper and an informal social was in full swing, the ladies orchestra, of Dunellen and New Market, rendered a number of selections in a pleasing manner. The orchestra was led by Mrs. J. H. Buckley and consisted besides the leader of Miss E. L. Nelson, violin; Mrs. J. D. Anderson, cornet; Miss Irene Day, piano.

The musical programme was arranged by a committee composed of Mrs. T. E. Hazell, chairman; Mrs. J. C. Van Dyke, Mrs. G. W. Saums and Mrs. C. M. Thorpe.

The evening closed with an auction sale, conduted by E. E. Anthony who kept his audience in a laugh and sold all the articles remaining at good prices.

The supper was given to secure money to pay for refurnishing the lecture room and a considerable sum was netted despite the stormy weather. A great deal of credit is due to the ladies for the splendid supper they served and the 136 who partook agreed that it would take a remarkably good one to beat it.

PROMINENT MAN DEAD.

DANIEL DODGE RANDOLPH EXPIRED AT HIS HOME THIS NOON.

He Had Been a Resident of This City for Thirty Years and Was Well and Favorably Known Among All.

After a brief illness of five days, Daniel Dodge Randolph died Friday at his home at the corner of West Seventh and Liberty streets. Mr. Randolph was under the care of Dr. Boone, but owing to his advanced age the ravages of pneumonia, with which he was afflicted, he was unable to survive.

Mr. Randolph was seventy-four years of age and was born on a farm in the vicinity of New Brooklyn. He moved to this city about thirty years ago, became identified with its social and business interests and has seen the city grow to its present size and influence. For a number of years he and his son, Theodore, conducted a prosperous boot and shoe business in the store on West Front street where U. B. Crane's business is now located. Several years ago he retired from active business. He was a stockholder in the First National Bank and has been a director in that institution for several years.

He was a member of the First Baptist church and a member of the Board of Deacons. In politics he was a Republican. He leaves a wife, two daughters, who resided with him, and one son, Theodore, who is in business in New York.

IN HONOR OF LINCOLN.

John Hand Camp, Sons of Veterans, Enjoy Themselves.

John Hand Camp, No. 28, Sons of Veterans, very appropriately observed Lincoln's Birthday by giving a fine entertainment last evening in their rooms on East Front street.

The attendance of comrades from both G. A. R. posts and the Woman's Relief Corps, together with their friends, did not leave much unoccupied space in the room.

Captain Willard V. Sutton had the programme in charge. The first number was a piano solo by Miss Allis. The selection was finely executed and everyone was pleased. Miss Maude Mosher followed with a recitation, "The Whistling Regiment," with piano accompaniment by Miss Allis. The selection is full of fire and enthusiasm, as well as pathos, and Miss Mosher brought out the fine points in a highly commendable manner.

Rev. Dr. Livermore was then introduced and gave one of the best addresses listened to. It contained chiefly his personal experience of Lincoln, gained while he was a soldier in the late war, and a better person could hardly have been selected. His address was filled with many intensely interesting anecdotes of the great man, and his style of delivering made the address one of pleasure to all. At the close he gave several sketches showing that there was a decided humorous side to Lincoln, and that he could enjoy a good story as well as anyone.

The last portion of the programme was the exhibition of war pictures on canvass. It was given Past Commanders Charles Stephens and M. C. Dobbins. The series of pictures were enjoyed by those present, and the excellent rendition of "Marching Through Georgia" by H. J. Martin brought the entertainment to a close.

An Elizabethport Lot for $7,000

One of the most valuable tracts of land at Elizabethport has been secured by the Elizabethport Banking Company for $7,000. It is at First and East Jersey streets, and the site is one of the most eligible in the city for a bank. The purchasers will put up a fine building. The price was $280 a foot.

A Plainfield Evangelist.

Taking Advantage of the Schools.

The Elizabeth Board of Education has ordered the superintendent of public schools to prepare a list of all children who attend the public schools whose parents reside out of the city. This action was brought about by a communication which was received last night by the board to the effect that a number of children were receiving a free education in public schools of this city whose parents not only do not live in the city, but were residing in other States.

A New Road Proposed.

The trustees of Fairview Cemetery in Westfield have announced plans whereby they hope to make a new road from the cemetery leading to the county road between Westfield and Cranford. At present to reach the cemetery from Cranford necessitates a drive of about four miles, while the grounds are only two miles in a direct line. The owners of the property through which the proposed road would run do not object to the project.

Y. M. C. A. MEN MEET.

STATE CONVENTION CONVENED IN JERSEY CITY LAST NIGHT.

Reports Read Showing the Growth of the Association—New Officers Who Were Elected and Other Business.

The streets of Jersey City in the vicinity of the several railroad stations were crowded with well-dressed young men Thursday afternoon. They were delegates to the annual convention of the Young Men's Christian Association, held in Hedding M. E. church, in Montgomery street. The convention will continue three days. As fast as the delegates arrived they reported to the local rooms, in Wayne street. There they were received by a committee, of which ex-Assemblyman William E. Drake was chairman.

During the convention the out-of-town delegates will be cared for by the members of the Jersey City Association. Yesterday's session opened at 3:30 p. m. with a prayer service, which continued until 5:30 p. m., when the exercises opened with the election of President E. S. Cowles, of the local branch, as chairman. His opponent for the honor was Senator J. B. Vreeland, of Morris county. The evening session consisted of the reading by Chairman Mikanah Pike, of Jersey City, a commission of the reports of the work of the organization throughout the State during the year, and addresses by David M. S. Conaughy, Jr., secretary for India, and Rev. Lindsay Parker.

The membership of the Young Men's Christian Association is divided into two classes. The active members are connected with evangelical churches. The associate members are the non-church members.

As a result of the development, this organization, while hardly fifty-two years old, has over 5,000 societies spread all over the globe with a total membership of about 650,000. In the United States alone there are 1,500 branches and about 260,000 members.

The convention elected these officers for the ensuing year: President, Elijah W. Cowles, Jersey City; first vice-president, J. H. DeGraw, Madison; second vice president, G. R. Waite; third vice-president, Wilson Farrand, Newark; secretary, Cleveland W. Childs, Orange; assistant secretary, W. P. Schell, Lawrenceville.

The meeting was opened by W. D. Murray, of this city, last year's president. Plainfield was represented by the following delegates: Harry Manning, D. A. MacPhie, A. C. LaBoyteaux and W. D. Murray.

GUESSING WHO THEY ARE.

Novel Sort of Entertainment to Be Given by Presbyterian Young Ladies.

The young ladies of the Presbyterian Mission Band are arranging an interesting programme for next Thursday evening. Besides planning for music and tableaux, they have collected from many of the well known people in the town, the clergy, physicians, lawyers, city fathers, etc., a large number of photographs which were taken in youthful days. These will be wired and numbered, and the fun consists in guessing the original. There will also be candy and cream for sale. After considering the matter the committee in charge thought it wise to charge twenty five cents admission for the evening, but in the afternoon, when only the pictures will be visible, they have reduced the price to ten cents. The hours of exhibition and sale are four to ten o'clock; but the music and tableaux begin at eight o'clock.

JACK RABBIT DAVIS.

"IT IS a mistake to suppose the west to be all rough and always on the warpath," the speaker was Samuel A. Baldwin, otherwise and for short, "Red River Sam," a Frenchman and herd-owner in the Pecos country, New Mexico.

"Of course," he continued, looking shyly at Representative Hall and one or two others whose evening at Willard's he was beguiling away with his stories, "now and then some notion that a bob-tail flush beats aces, or some similar blunder, may start the ball rolling, and for the time there will be full of lead as that tree on the corner is of sparrows, but, the excitement over, the days will be as peaceful as a sheep for months.

"About as bloody a battle as I ever heard of in the line of a single-handed transaction was between a tenderfoot who signed the ranch pay rolls as Gus Davis, and a Mexican. This Gus Davis was a quiet, Quaker young man from Philadelphia. Physically, he was a superb creation. For his size and weight, he was nevertheless so perfectly and accurately fashioned that his physical strength was a marvel.

"His tastes drew him to the west, and in the early months of 1880 he abandoned the dull city of his youth and stayed not in his journeyings until he met the waters of the Pecos on their way to the Rio Grande. His ambition was cows and to be a rancher, and as a primary step he employed himself as a 'rider' to John Shure, a man of wealth and beef. He was at once set to work. His companions—some American, some Mexican—were all of the rude southwestern type.

"The western man, thorough in his paces, sure in his surroundings, is as courageous an animal as any yet constructed. He thinks so, too. He goes a trifle further and makes many mistakes; he thinks that only the man of the west, western, is brave. His impression of the tenderfoot is that he sadly lacks in 'sand' and is far from 'game.' Why the cowboy clings to this theory in the face of frequent and frightful experiences of a contrary sort can only be answered by his thick-headed ignorance.

"When Gus Davis clinched on his saddle among those tough riders of the southwest he met the usual fate of ignorance in the camp of experience. Knowledge is never polite except when it is outnumbered. When it is in the majority it is insulting, rude and sometimes fatal. Davis was given and hazed and made to suffer boorish jokes, such as the untried are ever heir to in every place, from colleges to cow camps.

"Still Davis loved peace for the sake of peace. His lessons, like the Quaker blood, inclined him to amity and forbearance. He was exactly the sort of a man for a cowboy to be mistaken in. His uncomplaining good nature, his failure to resent the insults against the impositions practiced upon him were attributed to cowardice. A man usually gains a nickname before he gets his breakfast in the west, and Davis was soon hailed as the 'Jack Rabbit' for his timidity. He stood this as he stood all the rest.

"It is hard to convince a Mexican that an American is not a dangerous man. He has been furnished so many reasons for the contrary view that he is by nature cautious, furtive sort of being himself, and in no wise anxious to get hurt, he generally concedes it without inquiry.

"But a Mexican never loves an American; and let him but dare the deed, and he will promptly practice any insult against the hated 'Gringo.' It was not long before the Mexican part of the John Shure outfit became convinced, like the Americans, that there was no danger in Davis. You couldn't make a fight out of him with a pony and a rope was their belief, too. So the Mexicans added themselves to the ranks of his tormentors.

"But Davis had been thinking. He saw that in the country of the Rio Pecos forbearance had ceased to be a virtue long before he was born. He made up his mind to turn. One morning one of the Mexicans addressed him by his title: 'The Jack Rabbit,' thereupon Davis did a very surprising thing.

"He suddenly seized the descendant of Cortez, and calling up the very secrets of his wonderful strength, hurled the saddle-colored personage about 12 feet in the air. He struck as if he had tumbled all the way from the clouds. A Mexican is a light weight, but with all that he is generally a person of surprising activity and force. Where he falls most as compared with the American is in his moral make-up. He has none of the dauntless spirit of his neighbor from the north. He isn't the same natural fighter, and lacks the bumps of battle back of his ears. But, like every other being, surprise him by some sudden attack, and he'll do savage work.

"It was so in this case, and Davis' Mexican came bang at him like a wild-cat. Davis got his hands on him and threw him again, and then the Mexican called for blood. Davis assured him promptly that he could have all of his he could get, and might set about its acquirement in any way he chose. The Americans looking on were jubilant, not so much over Davis' unlooked-for nerve as at the prospect of an earnest set-to. The human animal dearly loves to combat, so the cowboys at once assumed control of affairs. They asked Davis if he would fight the Mexican.

"'Any way and any time,' said Davis, who had become prey to a fighting fury.

"The Mexican was not asked what he wanted to do. He opens the game," said an alert and wicked-looking cow puncher, 'and you can gamble he has to make good.'

"A duel was at once arranged for, and the details were as wild and as fantastic as the minds which formulated them. Davis stood grim and ferocious, and made not the slightest objection to anything proposed. He had set his heart on killing the Mexican, and never doubted the outcome for a second. The cowboys took a pair of chain hobbles, which fastened with a key and lock like handcuffs, and are used as safeguards against horse thieves. These were fastened to the left wrist of the combatants. The Mexican was pale, but said nothing. He feared his fate and faced it desperately. When the duelists were so fastened that they could not separate if they would, nine-inch bowie knives were placed in their free hands, and, thus armed, they were lowered by the willing lariats of their companions into a dog-canyon some 40 feet deep, and told to turn themselves loose.

"THE MINUTE WE GOT DOWN HE STRUCK AT ME."

"The other cowboys didn't even stay to see the fight, but promised to return at nightfall, pull out the survivor and bury the other fellow. Davis himself told me his experience not two days before I started east this last time.

"'While we were being lowered into the canyon,' he said, 'you can gamble I was thinking right along. I made up my mind to let the Mexican pull on the dance, believing that I would stand a better show by so doing. I aimed, of course, to get his knife in me where it would hurt the most. The minute we got clear of the ropes he struck at me. I quickly twisted and took about four inches of the blade in my left shoulder. At the same time, and as my opponent attempted to recover his knife, I slashed him across the wrist of his right arm, and the tendons. To tell the truth, when I got the hint to do this from one of the cowboys, named Broncho Charlie, who gave it as they were looking us together.

"'Well, as I slashed my man, his knife fell, and as he stooped and attempted to seize it with his left—the one by which he was chained to me—I held up his arm by the chain and pushed my knife under it clear to the heart. He tried to jerk it off the chain held him, and he couldn't do it. Of course, he was dead, but I was in a bad fix myself. The wound in my shoulder bled like a spring. I got weak and faint, and at last laid down by my Mexican's body from failing down. I laid there half an hour, sure; and as I gradually bled less and less I began to get back my strength.

"'I wanted a drink, and, as I couldn't get away from the Mexican, I dragged him along to the water that was there with my right hand. After I drank I felt better. I didn't care to sit around with that Mexican all day—he was going to be mighty poor company—so I made up my mind to get out. Getting loose from him was out of the question, so I strings the Mexican to my shoulder and walks out with him. It took time and bothered me some, but I did it. I must say the American part of the outing gained from the time the trip all right. The Mexicans, however, didn't like it. They didn't say anything, but that evening the whole saddle-colored lot of 'em rode away for good.

"'I left the country and keep concluded Davis, 'but that's the only time I was ever chained to it. And that Mexican was the last man who ever called me the Jack Rabbit.'"—St. Louis Republic.

A Child's Petition.

A poor little damsel had trouble with her mother not long ago. The direct consequence was that she was sent into the bedroom for meditation, and, supposedly, repentance. A listener happened to overhear the mite's defiance, when she thought herself unobserved and alone. She threw herself on her face on the bed, and, burying her face in the pillow, began a prayer for guidance. But the petition had this very significant commencement: "O Lord, consider how I'm treated!"—N. Y. Times.

TIGER IN THE DAIRY.

The King of the Jungle Disdains Stall-Fed Beef.

Surprise of a Thirsty Bull When the Big Cat "Wooghed" in His Frightened Face—Retired in Order After a Two Days' Outing.

There was considerable excitement at Mysore, India, recently. One of the maharajah's tigers got loose and was not recaptured for over 48 hours. Allowing tigers and other wild animals to escape out of confinement seems a common events in Mysore. During the time of the late maharajah ore got out of his cage in the menagerie, and also during his father's reign a tiger loafed all over the fort a whole day, going in and out of people's houses, but, strange to say, on none of these occasions has anyone been injured.

The tiger in the present instance is one which is kept by his highness' dairy to keep away the "evil eye" from the cattle. He was netted for Lord Lansdowne to shoot when his excellency visited Mysore a few years ago, and is a splendid animal. The dairy is a very large yard, with open sheds all round, in which the cattle are tied, the tiger's cage being close to one end and a fountain near the other. The tiger got out about seven p. m. and calmly strolled around, the place being full of cattle and people at the time; but, fortunately, he had no desire whatever to taste stall-fed beef, or Hindoo either, although he passed within a few feet of the cows and themans, and after examining them all quietly, lay down by the fountain.

By nine o'clock a couple of elephants brought down the nets and a cordon was run around the place, prevention the tiger escaping or getting at the cattle, when two rather amusing incidents occurred. A cow managed to get into the yard, and after skipping about for some time rushed into a part of the net closest to the tiger, and for some time struggled most frantically to get loose. Everyone fully expected the cow would have been killed. Finally, however, a number of men went out and held the wretched animal down and removed the net. Hardly was this over when a splendid bull got over a part of the net which had fallen down, and after careening about the yard just as the cow had done, rushed right up to the fountain and dipped his nose in the water. Evidently he had no idea the tiger was there or he would never have gone up in the style he did. However, after drinking, he looked up, when the tiger, who could not have been more than a few feet away, "wooghed" in his face, and the way that bull went away after that did one's heart good to see. These were two grand opportunities for witnessing "how the tiger seizes his prey," particularly as there were several sportsmen about, but unfortunately it was not to be.

THE TIGER CALMLY STROLLED AROUND.

After worrying the poor brute for two days and two nights, during which time he got into the net once, he quietly walked into his cage and was shut up. The cool and indifferent way in which Rassapali Urs' fossilized hunters, with their fearfully and wonderfully made bundooks, walk up and down past the tiger was most amusing. What they would have done had the events of the tiger making for one of them it is hard to tell. The claws have grown into the pads of the tiger, and the wretched animal seems to be suffering great pain. Had it not been for this there would doubtless have been a try different tale to tell.

Mosquito Kills a Rattlesnake.

"I have read accounts of fights between turtles, between snakes and between turtles and snakes," said a hunter, "but the hardest fight I ever saw was in New Jersey. I heard a rattling and buzzing just ahead of me, and knew something unusual was happening. Soon I came across the scene of the trouble. A large rattlesnake and a full-grown mosquito, such as they raise on the Jersey coast, were engaged in deadly conflict. The snake kept up a constant rattle and would strike at the mammoth insect, which, realizing the danger, would with an angry buzz get out of the way and then attack the reptile's eyes. I watched the fight for over an hour, when the mosquito got a firm hold in an eye of the snake and in a few minutes the rattler stretched out straight and the mosquito made a bee line for the evening star, still buzzing and fighting enough. I shot the insect and had both it and the rattler stuffed."

They Sponged Their Whisky.

Two tramps in a neighboring town hit upon a novel plan to get some whisky. They went into a saloon with a gallon jug and had it filled with liquor and offered a dollar in payment. Of course, the bartender refused to accept the money and emptied the liquor back into the barrel and the tramps took the jug and departed. Later they were seen to break the jug, take it over a stone and squeeze out over a pint of liquor from the sponges which had been placed inside.

SUPREME COURT OPENS SOCIAL SEASON ENDED.

CRAIG A. MARSH HAS AN IMPORTANT ACTION TO CONDUCT BEFORE IT.

A Decision Favorable to His Clients Will It Is Said, Bankrupt Long Branch—The Bird-Johnson Case to Come Up Soon.

The Supreme Court opened at Trenton Tuesday with an unusually large attendance of lawyers, owing to the pending constitutional amendments before the legislature.

Among the Plainfield cases on the calender is Bird vs. Johnson which is expected to be argued during the present week.

Two important cases brought by a Plainfield lawyer are those of George Bliss, of New York, and Edward T. Dobbins, of Philadelphia, against Long Branch, to set aside assessments for asphalt paving. The Long Branch newspapers say that if the assessments are set aside it will bankrupt the city. Craig A. Marsh is counsel for Col. Bliss and Mr. Dobbins, and Long Branch is represented by three New Jersey lawyers, and one from New York city.

Judge VanSyckel has filed opinion in favor of the plaintiffs in Johnson against Smith, Gibbs and the C. N. J. Land Improvement Company. Craig A. Marsh was the successful counsel in this case also.

The fight against the Land Improvement Company was to have a mechanics lien for $1,200 put ahead of a $10,000 mortgage held by the company.

Winfield S. Angleman was admitted to the examination for counselor's license and Charles J. McNabb to the attorney's examination.

Ex-Chancellor Runyon's funeral is to take place next Monday and it is expected that Court will adjourn in honor of his memory.

A WITNESS FAINTS IN COURT.

Beginning of the Trial of Henderson for Killing a Man at a Picnic.

Theophilus Henderson was placed on trial for killing John Miller before Judge McCormick, in the Quarter Sessions Court, at Elizabeth Monday. The men were at a picnic given by the Minnehaha Club last August. In a fight Miller was struck on the head with a brick, and died soon afterward. His widow, sons and daughters were in court today, as well as the mother and father of the prisoner.

At the afternoon session Miss Collie Nolan, one of the most important witnesses for the State, was called. In going from the witness-room she fell into a hysterical fit, and did not regain consciousness for some time. She was not allowed to go on the stand, and on motion of the Prosecutor the trial was adjourned until today.

Denied by Mayor and Sheriff.

The story which appeared in a New York paper Thursday stating that the bill introduced in the Legislature to change the system of selecting juries was inspired in Elizabeth by friends of Mayor Rankin, in order to "do" Sheriff George Kyte, of Union county, is denied by the parties interested. It is stated that Senator Voorhees is supposed to have drafted the bill, at the solicitation of Mayor Rankin, so that no more such grand juries as the last one could be drawn. This grand jury is said to have been antagonistic to the Mayor and to have turned in so many indictments against disorderly houses and saloon-keepers because these reflected discredit on the Mayor's regime. Sheriff Kyte says that he did not know that such matters were contemplated, and so could not have intentionally drawn a jury which would be antagonistic to the Mayor.—Newark Advertiser.

Mrs. Fackler, of Trenton, a member of the Women's Relief Corps, of that place, recently forwarded a very handsomely framed picture to Commander I. L. McVoy, of Post 73, G. A. R., to be presented to the Post. The picture is a faithful reproduction of the memorable G. A. R. parade held in Washington in 1894, showing Post 73 in the lead in charge of Post Commander W. C. Smith and Commander I. L. McVoy. It will be presented to the Post at the next meeting by Mr. McVoy.

The usual treatment of catarrh is very unsatisfactory, as thousands can testify. Proper local treatment is positively necessary to success, but many if not most of the remedies in general use afford but temporary relief. A cure certainly cannot be expected from snuffs, powders, douches and washes. Ely's Cream Balm, which is so highly commended, is a remedy that combines the important requisites of quick action, specific curative power, with perfect safety and pleasantness to the patient.

THE LAST ASSEMBLY QUIETS SOCIETY UNTIL AFTER LENT.

The Event Was Well Attended, Notwithstanding the Cold Weather—The Patronesses and the Names of Guests.

Tomorrow Lent begins and society will remain quietly at home until after Easter. As a fit closing for the social season the last Assembly was held in the Casino last night and was well attended. The decorations were about the same as at the other Assemblies except perhaps more elaborate. The front of the stage was filled with palms and made a charming background to the kaleidoscopic picture of the beautiful gowns, pretty faces and the conventional black of the escorts' suits.

The patronesses that received were Mrs. J. W. Reinhart, Mrs. O. T. Warning, Mrs. J. T. Scott, Mrs. L. G. Timpson, Mrs. W. L. Saunders, Mrs. M. S. Ackerman and Mrs. W. J. Roome.

Among those present during the evening were: Mr. and Mrs. Joseph W. Reinhart, Mr. and Mrs. Marion S. Ackerman, Mr. and Mrs. James T. Scott, Mr. and Mrs. William P. Roome, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis G. Timpson, Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. Van-Buren, Mr. and Mrs. Clifton Wharton, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Lemuel W. Serrell, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Craig A. Marsh, Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Raymond, Mrs. O. T. Waring, Mrs. A. C. Vail, Mrs. W. L. Saunders, the Misses Wilson, Sprague, Holly, Abbett, Waring, Vail, Murphy and Marsh, the Misses Richardson and Sneditker, of Brooklyn, Miss Walsin, of New York, and Messrs. Bull, Murray, Erickson, McGee, Hutchins, Patton, Waring, Huntington, and Drs. Hedges and Hallock and Messrs. Bigelow, of Elizabeth, and Morgan, of New York.

STATE CONVENTION OF RED MEN.

The Council Fire Will Be Kindled in Trenton, February 27th.

The Great Council, Improved Order of Red Men, of New Jersey, will meet in annual session at Trenton, Thursday, February 27th, when the council fire will be kindled in the Y. M. C. A. hall. The session gives promise of being one of the most important and interesting ever held. Besides the election of great chiefs, action will be taken in regard to the establishment of a funeral benefit fund under the auspices of the Great Council, permission for which was granted at the session held at Providence, R. I., last September. Efforts will also be made to make the body a representative one. The representatives from this city include Past Sachems D. C. Allen, of Miantonomah Tribe 118; W. A. Westphal, of Iona Council; Charles J. Young, of Paugh Caugh Naugh Sinque Tribe, 193. The following members of No. 118, will also attend: Past Sachems Newcorn, Holstein, Magee, Stiglitz and Newman, and from No. 193, Past Sachems Carney, Conover and Odam.

THEATRICAL.

The Stillman Music Hall will have for its Washington birthday attraction that stirring comedy-drama, "The Westerner," which will be produced by the original New York cast headed by that romantic young actor, Mr. A. H. De Lisser. "The Westerner" is said to be a strong, well-connected play, full of the most laughable comedy, yet touching the most tender chords of the human heart. The story is so well written and the piece will be so effectually presented that not a thread of the plot will be forgotten or lost sight of. The play is said to be built on the order of the "Henrietta" and is not as one would suppose from its title "a wild and woolly drama." The staging will be magnificently done and not the minutest detail will be neglected to give the theatre goers an enjoyable evening.

In Justice Sperry's Court.

United States flags against Press and News, in tort. After four flags had testified that they were unfurled to the breeze on Grandview avenue, Lincoln's Birthday, statements of defendants to the contrary notwithstanding, judgment was rendered for the plaintiffs.

Sentence of Mrs. Lane Postponed.

The Somerset County Court is in session today, and transacted little business. Sentence in the case of Mrs. Lane, colored, who attempted to shoot ex-Senator Calvin N. Corle some time ago, was postponed till next Wednesday.

Cars Jump the Track.

Two or three cars on a Jersey Central freight jumped the track near Finderne between 8 and 9 o'clock and delayed trains for some time. No serious damage was done.

—The Young Men's Association of Monroe avenue will hold an important business meeting on Friday evening.

—The friends of S. W. Reese, of Westfield, announce that he is a candidate for the Republican nomination for Freeholder. The Westfield Republicans are anxious to send a man to the county board in place of A. S. Clark, who is a Democrat, and will undoubtedly be renominated by his party.

THE WEATHER BUREAU.

Good Work Done by the Service During Last Year.

Value of Property Saved Amounts to Many Millions of Dollars—Attention Paid to Sanitary as Well as Meteorological Conditions.

Prof. Willis L. Moore, chief of the weather bureau, has prepared a report of the work done by his department during the year 1895. In it he estimates the value of property saved by warnings of cold waves alone, as indicated by reports of observers, at $25,000, but this amount, large as it is, does not, he says, represent ten per cent. of property actually saved throughout the whole country. He thinks $10,000,000 would be a conservative estimate of the value of these warnings. By notice given of approaching hurricanes on two occasions no fewer than 10,305 vessels were kept in port, the value of which, without their cargoes, was $36,283,000. Many of these vessels, had they gone out and encountered the storm which followed the warnings, would doubtless have been lost.

"When Prof. Moore assumed charge of the department July 1 last he entered upon a careful review of its work and a close consideration of its scope and purpose. He undertook the duty of reorganizing, consolidating and perfecting the administrative work of the bureau in all its branches. In dispensing with superfluous officials and filling all vacancies, even those outside the classified service, the policy of promoting meritorious employes from the lower grades has been rigidly followed —a procedure that has had a most salutary influence in every branch of the bureau. The judicious lopping off of superfluous officials and incompetents has made it possible to give a material advance in salary to 78 meritorious workers, and at the same time to diminish the expenditures for salaries at the rate of $1,668.20 per annum. The total savings in expenses effected amounted to $10,000 annually.

With the view of presenting the sanitary as well as the meteorological conditions existing throughout the various states of the union, the publication of Climate and Health was begun in the latter part of September. It is presented to the medical and other professions and to the public at large as the most complete and comprehensive publication of contemporaneous meteorological and sanitary data extant either by government or private means. The object is to facilitate an intelligent investigation into the relations existing between meteorological conditions and disease. This publication will be monthly hereafter, and the completion of the data will be in weekly parts. Extensive improvements are contemplated in connection with weather-crop reports, and the determination of the head of the department is to bring it up to the highest state of efficiency in all its branches.

One-Armed Tennis Champion.

The champion lady tennis player of New Zealand is Miss Edith Hastings. Her performances are remarkable in view of the fact that she was born with only one arm. With the left hand she holds the racquet with three fingers and the ball with the remaining finger and thumb. A slight toss of the ball, followed by a smart, twisty tap with the racquet, results in a fast, low service which her opponents have found anything but easy to take. Miss Hitchings is described as five feet eleven inches in height, of fine figure, commanding reach and active movement, which physical qualities, added to accurate placing, won for her the gold championship cup of 1895.

Coffee Culture in California.

An experiment in coffee growing is to be made in the San Joaquin valley, Cal., which, if successful, may mean that coffee planting will become an important industry in the state. Col. Charles F. Crocker, a wealthy rancher of that region, has just secured from various parts of Central America 1,000 yearling coffee plants, and will soon have them set out on his estates in the valley. It will be at least six years before the result of the experiment can be known. Experts are somewhat doubtful of its success. They say the soil and sunlight are all right in the San Joaquin valley, but the moisture necessary to the successful raising of coffee is lacking.

Kites That Can Carry Men.

Five huge kites were used at Christ Church park, Ipswich, by Lieut. Powell a short time ago to demonstrate the possibility of raising a man from the ground for reconnoitering purposes in time of war. A wicker car was attached to the kites and held the aeronauts. During the trial it was presented from taking too high a flight by an anchored rope from below and paid out from a windlass. An ascent of about 50 feet was successfully made by three persons separately. It only required the letting out of more rope to have extended this distance.

TWO

NEW YORK NEWSPAPERS

PAY A

CLEAR PROFIT

OF OVER

A MILLION DOLLARS

A YEAR EACH.

For the purpose of increasing the circulation of the New York Daily and Sunday Mercury, established 58 years ago, the Mercury Printing Co. offers the best inducement in the world to small investors.

Short investors now have an opportunity to secure some of the stock of this great enterprise. They can buy New York Mercury stock at the very low price of $10 per share. The Mercury Printing Company is a corporation under the laws of the State of New York. The capital is $200,000, divided into 20,000 shares of $10 each, full paid and non-assessable. Stockholders have no individual liability whatever. This stock is a safe, solid and highly profitable security that is certain to pay large dividends and rapidly increase in value. It gives the small investor an equal chance with the capitalist as one person with a small sum to invest can buy from one share upward as cheaply as the capitalist buys thousands of shares. When one considers the very high prices that stock in the New York Stock Exchange commands, it is apparent that this present opportunity to buy New York Mercury stock at $10 is one of those chances that occur only once in a lifetime, for at the present rate of increase shown in the past six months in the circulation and the advertising, the stock is absolutely sure to pay enormous dividends and rapidly rise in value.

The advertising receipts of the Mercury have doubled since Aug. 1, 1895, and its circulation has increased at the rate of 10,000 per week since April 1, 1895, for the Daily, Weekly and Sunday editions and is continuing to increase at the same rate.

We will send one copy of the Daily and Sunday Mercury free to every shareholder. Every shareholder is entitled by him or his assigns, for example, if a subscriber purchases ten shares of stock he will be entitled to ten copies of the Daily and Sunday Mercury free to him own or any other address as long as he continues to be a stockholder of the corporation. These copies of the paper may be disposed of by subscribers to the capital stock in any way desired by them.

There will be only a limited amount of this stock disposed of in this way. Those who act quickly enough to obtain these shares will find that in a very short time they will be worth 300 per cent. premium.

For further particulars address the SUPERINTENDENT OF CIRCULATION, NEW YORK MERCURY, 1 Park Row, New York.

THREE DAYS' PLEASURE.

RETURN FROM A DELIGHTFUL TRIP TO OLD POINT COMFORT.

The Tourists of A. V. D. Honeyman's Party Enjoy Themselves in the Balmy Air of Virginia—Arrangements Complete.

The private tour of our fellow-townsman, A. V. D. Honeyman, to Old Point Comfort, Va., left Plainfield Friday morning last at 9:46 and returned Tuesday afternoon at 1:12. The party numbered nineteen, four of whom were Plainfielders.

On arrival at the Reading terminal in Philadelphia, the electric road was taken to the B. & O station, Twenty-fourth and Chestnut streets, where a first class lunch was served. At 1:50 the party boarded one of the Royal Blue Line trains for Baltimore. Although the tourist tickets only called for the regular coaches of the train, Manager Honeyman showed his generosity by providing seats for the entire party on the Abigail, one of the Royal Blue Line parlor cars, and the trip was one of solid comfort, such as only a Pullman car can furnish. On arrival at Baltimore the party left their baggage at the office of the Bay Line Steamboat Company and started out to do Baltimore in an hour and a half. Conveyances were provided and the party driven to the dock of the Bay Line Steamboat Company and comfortably quartered in the steam-heated berths on the steamer Georgia. Soon after leaving Baltimore, at 6:30 p. m., the entire party were taken to the large dining room of the boat and a most delectable course dinner was served.

The moonlight trip down the Chesapeake bay to Old Point Comfort was a delightful one and the steamer ran so smoothly that not a person on board was affected with sea sickness. At 5:30 Saturday morning the party was awakened and preparations made for leaving the boat at Old Point Comfort. An hour later the party arrived at the world renowned Hygeia hotel, with its magnificient water frontage of 600 feet. All were given rooms large and airy, containing a cheerful grate fire and with conviences to make life pleasant. After the morning meal, sight-seeing was the order of the day. The weather was just perfect and all thoroughly enjoyed being out-of-doors. The principal places of interest, and there are many of them here, were visited and the day passed pleasantly. Five of "Uncle Sam's" white squadron war ships are at anchor in the bay opposite the hotel, and the party was rowed out and boarded one or another of these magnificent vessels during the day and were guided about by some of the Jack Tars.

Saturday evening the large ball room of the Hygeia was brilliantly illuminated and opened to the guests of the hotel and dancing indulged in by all who desired. Handsome young ladies, charmingly attired, attended by gallant young men, combined to make a pretty sight for the several hundred guests, who assembled in the spacious parlors adjoining to view the beautiful scene and listen to the sweet strains of music from the orchestra.

Sunday proved to be another balmy day, and nearly every member of the party attended the morning divine service in the little Episcopal chapel—the Church of the Centurion—inside Fortress Monroe, and were spiritually refreshed by the excellent sermon delivered by the rector, Rev. Charles W. Freeland. Sunday afternoon was spent at the Hampton Institute, (colored), a most excellent and well conducted institution, and all enjoyed the sermon delivered by the preacher and the singing by the choir of the church that followed the services of worship. Newport News was also visited on Sunday afternoon by a number of the party, an electric road conveying them to that growing city. Here the magnificent American liner St. Paul was seen in the great dry docks, the largest of their kind in America, waiting for a high tide to float her out. A fine view of the historic Hampton Roads, the battle ground of the Merrimac and Monitor, was one of the sights to look upon, as well as the noble James river. The return to the hotel was made about 5 o'clock, and another of the Hygeia's elaborate dinners was served.

Monday was another ideal southern day, and a number of the party took the steamer Luray for Norfolk, Va., and spent the day visiting that old southern city, some going as far south as Virginia Beach, all returning to the Hygeia about 5 o'clock. Those who did not go to Norfolk enjoyed the balmy air and sunshine of Old Point or visited one or more of the many places of interest nearby.

Monday evening at 7:30 the tourists reluctantly said good-bye to Old Point and sailed for Baltimore on another of the Bay Line steamers, the Alabama. An unexpected but very grand spectacle was presented the party just before sailing by the five war ships giving an exhibition or drill of the powerful electric search lights. It was an impressive sight. The early part of the evening was enjoyed on deck by many, the perfect moonlight night on the Chesapeake being a great treat. Baltimore was reached, however, at 7 o'clock Tuesday morning, and the 8:50 Royal Blue line, the finest in the land, left the B. and O. station on time for New York, the Plainfielders arriving home at 1:12 p. m.

A most congenial or satisfied party was never gathered together, and Mr. Honeyman should feel gratified at the many compliments he received as a manager, every member of his party being thoroughly pleased with every detail of this enjoyable trip, arranged and carried out without a break under his personal supervision.

CHORAL MUSICALITIES.

A Pleasing and Artistic Programme Rendered in the M. E. Church.

A delightful musical programme was presented at Vincent chapel last Monday to an appreciative audience which was not as large, however, as the entertainment deserved. The first part consisted of short selections by different talent, and the second of the cantata, "The Lady of Shalott," by the ladies' chorus of the society, the solo parts of which were sung by Miss Bessie Blair, Mrs. Asa Collier and Mrs. Colling. The chorus has sung the cantata before, but it did not lose anything by repetition. The other numbers were all excellently rendered, while P. Ludwig Conde was especially fine and showed his wonderful control over the violin. Miss May Whitney is a talented pianist, as was shown by her selections. The vocal selections were also particularly pleasing. The programme was as follows:

Duett, piano, Miss Utter and Mr. Fitzhugh; trio, vocal, Mrs. Collins, Mrs. Collier and Miss Carroll; solo, piano, Lt. S. Bond; solo, piano, Miss May Whitney; duett, vocal, Elmer Runyan and J. Barnes; solo, violin, P. Ludwig Conde; solo, piano, Miss May Whitney; trio, vocal, Mrs. Collins, Mrs. Collier and Elmer Runyon; cantata by Ladies Chorus "The Lady of Shalott."

The entertainment was given under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the First M. E. church, who, at the conclusion of the programme, furnished light refreshments, which were passed among the audience by the young people. Mrs. Noah Pike was in general charge of the good things. There was no regular committee in charge of the affair, but Mrs. Asa Collier looked after the arranging of the programme.

FOR THE YOUNG PEOPLE

THE EPWORTH LEAGUE HOUSE FORMALLY OPENED LAST TUESDAY.

The Principle Address Was Delivered by Presiding Elder Ryman—Remarks by Rev. Mr. O'Donnell and Mr. McGee.

The opening of the Epworth House, the new building adjacent to the Monroe Avenue chapel, took place on Tuesday in a most auspicious manner.

The exercises were held in the chapel, after which all present adjourned to the house for inspection. James McGee was in charge, and announced that the first number on the programme as a piano solo by E. Arthur Janke. The rendition was perfect and brought forth hearty applause. This was followed with a pleasing vocal solo by W. N. Runyon. Mr. McGee then made a few remarks in regard to the Epworth House which he said was suggested by the rectory in England bearing that name. That which is attractive and comely about it, he said, was due to Architect Charles H. Smith. It will give an opportunity for social and religious growth in all branches, and that they commended the work to the Master Builder for His blessing. Dr. Barnes then offered a brief prayer, after which Mr. Runyon sang another solo.

Dr. Ryman, of Elizabeth, was then introduced and made an address. In part he said:

"I feel highly honored on this occasion. The Epworth House will afford a grand opportunity for mental and social improvement.

"This is the age of young people and we should not dispise youth. If we should remove the young merchants, editors and lawyers it would be a great mistake. The church that makes the highest bid for the young people and sets them to work is the one that grows and becomes a power. It used to be that young people should be seen and not heard, but the order is now reversed. The twentieth century is rapping at our doors for entrance and will soon be here. In connection with this new building with its facilities, systematic training is needed. The social feature must be looked after. Men gather in saloons for social companionship. A man living in Boston attended church and heard a remarkable sermon from the subject 'The Recognition of Friends in Heaven.' After the sermon he spoke to the pastor and asked him if he would preach a sermon on 'The Recognition of Friends on Earth.' He had been a member of the church for a year and he had not been recognized by anyone. I wish you God speed in your work."

Another plaudit solo by Mr. Janke, preceded a short address by Rev. W. C. O'Donnell. He said: "'Blessed is the man who having nothing to say wastes no time in saying it.' There is nothing left for me to say, but I think that systematic development should predominate.

"The religious, social and intellectual sides of a person should be looked after and then through the aid of God's Spirit we will have men as God intended. This should be the idea, the growth of men and women, and we should see that this house is not built in vain." Mr. McGee followed in a few well-chosen words in which he said that the value of this chapel and house will be just what we put on it. They are not intended for the young alone, but for the aged as well and what is here of chapel and house is the outcome of work done years ago by faithful men and women, and we should take courage by experience. All were then invited to inspect the new building.

The structure is a handsome and attractive one. It is one story and a half high and contains two large rooms, beside several smaller ones. It is finished in the most approved and latest style and will be of great value to those for whom it was intended. A place for a library has also been provided. A bright open fire gave the interior a very cheery appearance.

Those present then went back to the chapel, where chocolate, coffee and wafers were served by the following: Chocolate table—Miss King, assisted by the Misses Edith Burt, Grace King, Bertha LaRue.

Coffee table—Miss Florence Burt, assisted by Misses Hattie King and Grace Palmer.

Refreshment table—Miss Emily Haff and Miss Lottie Aldrich.

GEO. WATSON A SUICIDE.

THE CLOTHIER CUT HIS THROAT IN A NEW YORK HOTEL.

His Wife Heard His Death Moans But Was Unable to Open the Door—Worry of Business Said to Have Been the Cause.

George Watson, the well-known and prosperous clothing merchant of Newark, cut his throat at the Gilsey House Wednesday and died while his wife was calling for help. He had locked the door of his room to prevent his being disturbed. No other cause for his suicide is assigned or discoverable than that needless worry had driven him to sudden insanity.

Mr. Watson was fifty-seven years old. He began life in New Jersey and built up a large and successful business by his unaided efforts. For several years he was a resident of this city, residing on Park avenue and Seventh street and on Second place. He left there two years ago. Last fall, his sons George and Clarence having grown to man's estate, he capitalized the business and handed it over to a corporation of which Clarence, the elder, was made the head.

The father then went to New York to live. He did not give up interest in the business, though he left the management of it to his sons. Perhaps if he had, he would now be alive. And yet it is hard to tell.

The worry that led to his suicide would have been as needless in one case as in the other. It was fate apparently—the fate of a busy man whose life has been given to the rearing of a great interest which, when everything in that life has grouped itself about it, or about its centre and kernel, is suddenly abandoned. The worry that consumes such a life dis appointed in its hope of rest, is the hopeless grouping after its lost anchor, hopeless because the true nature of the ailment is not recognized.

Whether or not this was Mr. Watson's special case, his friends noticed soon after he had come to live at the Gilsey House last October that he was often in low spirits. He was a man of a peculiar nervous organization, always subject to periods of depression, which in his idleness became aggravated.

DROWNED WHILE SKATING.

Ward Went Through the Ice and His Companion Could Not Rescue Him.

Charles A. Ward and Elmer Wyckoff were playing Tuesday on the ice on the Millstone river, eight miles from Somerville. Young Ward was learning to skate, and as he struck out over the ice he encountered an air hole, which he was unable to steer clear of. He went through the ice into deep water and then began to struggle for his life. His companion, who is a very small boy, attempted to rescue him with a board, but had not the strength to pull him from the water. After repeated attempts to crawl out, Ward became exhausted and was drawn under the ice by the swift current. His dead body was found a short distance from the place.

OLD GLORY'S FIRST DANCE.

A Pleasant Time Spent by the New Organization Last Night.

The first sociable and dance given by the recently organized Old Glory Council, Daughters of Liberty, was held last Monday in Red Men's hall. No entertainment was held last night, but dancing was the chief feature of the evening.

The music, under the direction of Prof. Frazee, was excellent. The ladies of the Council had prepared an excellent repast for the dancers, and all enjoyed it about midnight. The committee who had charge of the affair consisted of Mrs. Walter Walker, chairman; Mrs. Snyder, Miss Dunlap, Mr. Pangborn and Mr. Scribner. Frank Wyckoff and Mr. Scribner were floor managers.

ASBESTOS CLUB OBSERVATIONS.

A Washington's Birthday Visit Brings Out Some Pithy Sentences.

An invitation to visit the Asbestos Club might properly be classed with angel visits, because they are few and far between, and when a man is fortunate enough to receive one, I would advise its immediate acceptance. You will meet people there that one rarely meets on the public streets. It was my privilege to visit the club on Washington's birthday. After ascending a broad flight of well-lighted stairs it was daytime and the door at the foot of the stairs was open! I was ushered into what might be known as the cake-room, for the first thing that attracted my attention was the remains of what had evidently, in the past, been a pound cake (weight 22-oz. fbr.). This cake, or its remains, was lying fully to view on an elaborate sideboard which must have cost no less than thirty cents. To protect the highly-polished finish of the sideboard, the cake was laid out in state on a defunct copy of The People's Journal. Passing about four feet by two feet beyond the cake, keeping the sideboard on the port side, one is immediately in the presence of the great assembly room of the club. There may have been some doors or screened archways to pass under, but I do not now recall having seen any. Once in the immediate presence of the club, I glanced around to size up the members collectively and individually. Conversation was not interrupted by my entrance, so I was enabled to fully realize and ponder on the chunks of wisdom that fell in irregular cadences from the various groups as they were sitting in sundry places in the room.

Mr. Stansbury did not know whether a pair of bones he has owned (and now drives) for twenty years were sorrel horses with bay tails or bay horses with sorrel tails, and when I came away he had not found out to a certainty. Mr. Stansbury will have this opinion in writing some day; then he will have it framed and think more of it.

THE LAND OF ROMANCE.

DR. RIGGS TALKED INTERESTINGLY OF EGYPT LAST NIGHT.

It Was Once Known as the Land of Mystery. But Now Many of Its Geographical Problems Have Been Solved.

A large and deeply interested audience enjoyed the lecture on Egypt which was delivered Tuesday by Dr. James F. Riggs, as part of the supplementary University Extension course, in the lecture room of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church.

Egypt, said Dr. Riggs, is the land of strange romance. For a long time it was the land of mysteries which it was apparently impossible to solve. There was that strange river, the Nile; it was incomprehensible that it should at one time of the year have a volume thirty times as great as at another season. There was the mystery of the hieroglyphic language; no one knew whether it was a Hamitic or a Semitic language. There was the mystery of Egypt's being an almost literally rainless country. But now science has solved these problems. We all know that the annual rise of the Nile is caused by the melting of snow on the mountains of Abyssinia, which causes a vast amount of water to flow through the Blue Nile into the White Nile.

Egypt consists of two parts, the river valley and the delta. The river valley is like a trench dug through the centre of the Sahara desert with the river at the bottom. The life of the country is dependent upon the river. The water begins to rise about the time of the summer solstice, and is at its height at the time of the autumnal equinox. Before it subsides the people go out and sow their seed; they literally cast their bread upon the waters. After the fall of the river, the fields are watered by a very laborious hand process.

Mohammed Ali, though he was an upstart and usurper, getting possession of the throne of the country by a coup d'etat, was a great thinker. He did himself of the Mamelukes, irregular troops which he could not manage, by such a proceeding as the extermination of the Janizaries under the Ottoman sultans. He also cleared out many old canals, making them available for the part in the gigantic system of irrigation.

During the reign of Ismail Pasha came two great enterprises, the Suez railway and the Suez Canal. The mail from England to India had to be carried around the cape, which occupied a great deal of time. It is only 88 geographical miles across the isthmus, and there was tried the experiment of having the mail carried by camels across from port to port. The success of this scheme was demonstrated immediately; less than half the time was occupied by this method. The Suez railway was then built, establishing unbroken steam communication between England and India. But Ferdinand de Lesseps, of France, determined on having a maritime canal across the isthmus, through which vessels could sail without any detention. It was a gigantic undertaking, and more expensive than any other canal building enterprise that has proved successful. But it was a success, and the trade which passes through the canal is second only to the trade between New York and Liverpool.

This remedy is intended especially for acute throat and lung diseases such as colds, croup and whooping cough, and is famous for its cures. There is no danger in giving it to children for it contains nothing injurious. For sale by T. S. Armstrong, Manager Reynolds' pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues.

SOME CAPITAL STORIES.

Congressman Cummings' Experience in Missouri.

How Dan Wiley Secured Admission to the Floor of the House—Four Kansas Governors in the Senate.

[Special Washington Letter.]

Congressman Amos J. Cummings, of New York, fertile journalist, a voluminous and always interesting writer, is a keeper of scrap-books. They contain all the wit and wisdom of a generation; for Amos Cummings has been long in the land. He was a gallant union soldier, and after the civil war he was a tramp printer in the Mississippi valley. He "stuck type" in nearly every city between St. Louis and St. Paul, and walked over many of the public roads from town to town. Railroad passes were hard to obtain, and only the great men who edited papers were allowed such luxuries.

But to return to those scrap-books. They are all indexed, and contain his own stories as well as the pencilings of leading contemporary writers. One of the best stories in one of the oldest of the books is illustrative of the manner in which the people of the southwest return evasive answers to direct questions. One evening about dusk a man rode up to a fence surrounding a lot near the roadside and thus addressed a woman who was attempting to persuade a few drops of milk from a mulcy cow:

"Madam, I am lost."

"Wual, that's what the preacher says is the matter with the most of us, an' I reckon the best thing to do is to git 'ligion an' then do the best we kin under the sarcumstances," she replied, giving the cow an artful jerk.

"I mean that I have missed the road to Dabney's Ferry."

"Wall, I shouldn't wonder; fur it is a mighty matter fur some folks to foller these roads here, they ain't so crooked. You air trav'lin', I reckon?"

"Yes, I want to go to Dabney's Ferry."

"Got kinfolks livin' down thar, I reckon?"

"No; I have no relatives living in this part of the country. Will this road lead me to the ferry?"

"Wall, you'll hatter ax pap about that. He tromps roun' all over the neighborhood while I'm doin' the work, an' he oughter know whar the roads go to."

"Where is he?"

"Who, pap?"

"Yes."

"Wall, Lawd only knows. But I reckon the yaller dog kin take you whar he is."

"Where is the yellow dog?"

"I don't know that nuther. You'll hatter ax one of the chilun."

"Where are the children?"

"The Lawd in Heaven only knows, stranger, fur I don't. Jest wait awhile an' mebby one of 'em will holler, for it's about time for one of 'em to get snakebit."

"I haven't time to wait."

"Wall, then, I reckon you'll have to jog along the best way you kin."

"I wish you would give me some information."

"Yas, I reckon so, fur I hearn tell what information is a mighty fine thing when a passon is pushed right hard fur it."

"Where does that road over there lead to?"

"Right to Dadney's ferry."

"Why, that's the road I want. Why didn't you tell me?"

"Wall, you didn't ax me about that road. You kep' on talkin' about sithin' else. Wall, good-day. Ef you travel 'round here much you'll larn to ax fur what you want without beatin' about the bush."

How John Wiley Won a Bet.

It is practically impossible for anyone to gain admission to the floor of the house of representatives when that body is in session. Under the rules no one is entitled to admission but representatives, ex-representatives and members-elect; that is, those who have been elected as members of the next congress. John Wiley, of New York, managed to gain admission one day, however, by a clever trick. Congressman Dan Lockwood, of Buffalo, and his friend Wiley were strolling about the capitol, and when they approached the main door of the house, Mr. Lockwood said: "Well, John, I must leave you here. I go in as an ex-member, but you are barred."

"I bet you a fine lunch that I am in on the floor three minutes after you enter," said Mr. Wiley.

"Done," said the great orator. Then he walked up to Doorkeeper Ginkley and said: "Lockwood, of Buffalo, ex-member." That was enough. He passed right in.

Within a minute Wiley approached Ginkley, who had never seen Wiley up to that time. "Did my predecessor enter this door just now?" inquired Mr Wiley.

"What's his name, sir?" said Ginkley, in reply.

"Daniel N. Lockwood, of Buffalo," was the answer.

"Yes, sir; he's right there in the main aisle, walk right in," and the doorkeeper turned away to attend to another visitor.

Wiley walked in. Ten minutes later he had marched Lockwood to the restaurant and compelled him to pay for a costly little banquet, in which nearly a score of friends participated.

A Story of Four Governors.

"There are four governors of Kansas on the floor of the senate," said Frank Flenniken, private secretary to Senator Plumb, one day when Ingalls was making a great speech. It happened that there were several distinguished citizens of Kansas in the city, and all of them wanted to hear their brilliant senator speak, but the galleries were crowded, and they could not go upon the floor of the senate, for the rules of that body are exceedingly strict. But either Flenniken or Plumb had taken those gentlemen, one at a time, to the four different doors of the senate, and passed each of them into the senate, as "the governor of Kansas," although not one of them had ever held that office.

Politicians and public men in Washington are not always sticklers for truth, when they want to accomplish any desirable end.

A Noted Man's Humble Lunch.

There is an elderly gentleman—he would resent being called an old man, for he is not more than 72 or 73 years of age—who enters the senate restaurant every day exactly at one o'clock and takes a seat in an obscure corner. Paul, the oldest waiter in the room, immediately brings him a nubbin of a loaf of bread and a big bowl of milk. The elderly gentleman sops his crust in the milk, eats it by degrees, and, at the end of about 20 minutes' deliberate mastication of his food, lifts the bowl and drinks the remainder of the milk. He pays the waiter, slowly arises, departs from the restaurant without having said a word to the waiter or to anybody else. He proceeds to a little room in the basement and sits down before a desk which is covered with lots of little drawings which look like plans for a building of some kind. His name is Edward Clark, and he is the supervising architect of the capitol, a position which he has held for a quarter of a century or more. He is one of the most popular and competent public officials in the national capital.

A Reporter's Ready Wit.

Every day at noon a large square-shouldered man, weighing about 200 pounds, walks out of the treasury department, crosses Pennsylvania avenue, and enters a dairy lunch room where he liberally supplies the demands of an enviable appetite. He is unpretentious, quiet, but everybody knows him and calls him "Biv." He was a confederate soldier, and a good one, when only 16 years of age. After the war he completed his education and then engaged in newspaper work. He quit reporting several years ago and accepted a government position. He was at Elberon when President Garfield died. He saw Mrs. Garfield, interviewed Gen. Swaim, rushed to the telegraph office, seized the key, and sent the news to the papers which he represented. Just as he was concluding his dispatch Attorney General Wayne MacVeagh entered and said: "I take possession of this telegraph line, in the name of the United States government." The reporter, who was a splendid telegraph operator, as well as a stenographer and all-'round newspaper man, said: "All right, sir," and closed the key.

"WHAT HAVE YOU BEEN SENDING OVER THAT WIRE?"

"What have you been sending over that wire?" inquired the attorney general.

"I have been announcing the death of the president," replied the correspondent.

The attorney general had intended to suppress the news until after Vice President Arthur had taken the oath of office; but the newspaper man was too quick for him. James Gordon Bennett paid him for his services, and made him a present of $500 besides. His name is Tom Bivins. He is usually called "Biv," for that was his natural nom de plume when he was a reporter.

SMITH D. FRY.

Skunk Farming in Maine.

Skunk farming has proved unprofitable on the ranch at Dixfield, Me., about which much has been written. The skunks took an off turn recently and died so rapidly that there was no profit in caring for those remaining; so the proprietor killed the survivors.

Heavy Postal Robbery.

A post cart was attacked in the most central part of Belgrade one morning recently, and 200,000 francs that were in it were carried off. Part of the booty was a 20-pound box containing 40,000 francs in gold napoleons. No trace of the thieves.

MENTAL, PHYSICAL DIFFERENCE

Woman's strength is about two-thirds that of man, while her height is as 16 to 17 and her weight as nine to ten.

Woman's lung capacity is in proportion to her size much less than man's. The pulse beat is from eight to ten faster than in man.

Woman are more alike than men and more normal. Most geniuses are of the male sex. Woman is naturally conservative, while man explores new fields.

In perception woman is decidedly quicker than man. She grasps a written paragraph in much less time than does he. Her perception of details however, is less accurate than is man's.

Among all civilized races woman is both shorter and lighter than man. Her form is more rounded and graceful, less bony and angular, having relatively less fat and more muscle.

In stature she is inclined less upright than man's. The greater length of the first finger as compared to the third is a feminine peculiarity. The vocal cords in woman are shorter and the voice higher and shriller.

In respect to memory woman are superior. In slow, logical reasoning they are deficient. The arts, science and philosophy owe their advancement more to men than to women. What woman loses in profundity she gains in quickness. In languages she is more apt than man.

Differences in habits of thought between the two sexes is shown by the fact that if 50 men and 50 women were required to write 100 words as rapidly as possible without time for thought, in the woman's list will be found more words relating to the concrete than the abstract, the whole rather than the part, the particular rather than the general.

MRS. ROCHE SAW THE SIGHTS.

A Plainfield Woman's Sunday Experiences in Brooklyn.

Mrs. Mary Roche, of Plainfield, N. J., visited her brother in Jackson avenue, Long Island City, on Saturday. While there on Sunday afternoon Robert Wallace, a friend of the brother, called. Wallace expressed a wish to take Mrs. Roche out and show her the sights in Brooklyn. They called at several saloons. When they got to North Third street and Bedford avenue Mrs. Roche became drowsy. Wallace took her into the house of Mrs. Carrie Hunt at 163 North Third street and asked Mrs. Hunt to let her stay a while. Mrs. Roche gave her $25 gold watch and chain and $19 to Wallace. Then she fell asleep. When she wakened, Wallace had left. Mrs. Roche caused his arrest, and in the station house she became so demonstrative that she was held for being drunk. Wallace gave the woman's property to the police. When the two were arraigned in the Lee Avenue Police Court Monday, Mrs. Roche withdrew the charge against Wallace, who was discharged, and the woman, on her promise to go back to Plainfield, was also discharged.—New York Sun.

OF DEMOCRATIC INSTINCTS.

Dr. W. Hudson Shaw Interests All Sorts and Conditions of Men.

One of the great recommendations of Dr. Hudson Shaw's lectures is that they are not only of interest to cultured people, but seem to take hold of all persons alike. Thus, in England he has lectured at a Workingmen's Centre at Oldham for eight or nine successive years, with an average attendance of over one thousand. One of these students has within the last six months won a scholarship at Balliol College, thus showing the advantage of the new and popular system of University Extension teaching' a truly Democratic system.

As the slides with which Dr. Shaw illustrates his lecture on Venice are especially fine, his lecture here on Friday afternoon at Seminary Hall, will be of exceptional interest. He will lecture in Orange, New Jersey, on the same evening.

ANOTHER BICYCLE STORE.

A. D. Thompson's Building to Be Remodeled for Geo. H. Cobb's Use.

A. D. Thompson is making preparations to make extensive improvements in his building on North Avenue now occupied by the Metropolitan livery stables. The small store on the lower side of the building and the driveway to the stable will be torn out and the whole space half way back to West Second street will be remodeled into a big store, which will be occupied by George H. Cobb as a bicycle emporium. The rear end of the building will still remain a livery stable, and if A. C. Blair does not continue to manage it, Mr. Thompson will endeavor to secure some other responsible man to continue the business.

A Growing Council.

Next Wednesday night Lucetta Council, No. 28, Daughters of Liberty, will meet in their new quarters, the Fireman's Hall on Park avenue, at which time six new candidates will be initiated and several applications for membership will be received. The initiatory work will be done by the new team recently organized which was highly complimented for it excellent work by the State Councilor at Bound Brook several weeks ago. It is expected that several of the National and State officers and several Councils in this vicinity will be present.

An Elaborate Dinner.

R. M. Dawson, superintendent of the Prudential Insurance Company in this city, was in attendance at the annual banquet of the company to its employes at the Hotel Savoy in New York last night. There were 226 present. It was one of the most elaborate dinners ever served in New York. The menu cards was in a most unique and costly form. Each course was painted on a celluloid card and the whole enclosed in a case of like material, bound with white kid and trimmed with white satin on the interior. The menu cards cost about $12 each.

G. A. R. Men to Meet at Asbury Park.

The state G. A. R. encampment has always been held at Trenton during February. Last year the encampment was held at the time of the great snow blockade. After numerous unpleasant experiences with the snow, the war veterans decided it was best to change the date. The matter was left in the hands of the Council of Administration, and the post in this city have just received notification that the encampment will be held this year at Asbury Park during the second week in June. The change promises to be a beneficial one.

After Effects at Bound Brook.

Bound Brook has long ago recovered its usual appearance after the flood of several weeks ago. The storekeepers have not, however, quite recovered from the effects, and special bargains of goods, slightly damaged by water, are still the thing.

NEW SORT OF AN APPEAL

NOW THE FRENCH HUGUENOTS WANT HELP FROM AMERICANS.

Rev. Robert Favre, of Paris, Tells of Their Work and the Conditions That Surround Them—Other Observations.

The history of the Huguenots in France has been a sad one and it was briefly reviewed by Rev. Robert Favre, of Paris, before a small but greatly interested audience in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue church last evening.

After a few words about the close connection of France and America, he told of the terrible effects of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes and how nearly one-fourth of the population of France was driven out and spread all over the world. Twenty thousand of them came to this country and Mr. Favre said that he was constantly meeting their descendants. "The other day in New York," he said, "I met Mr. Roosevelt, president of the police commissioners, and he said, 'I have Huguenot blood in my veins and I am proud of it. It is that which made me police commissioner.'"

He next discussed the great growth during the last century in the line of Protestant publications, educational institutions and societies. The country was, he said, still full of superstition and materialism, and he told of those ignorant people who, at the present day, still hide copies of the Fourth Gospel in their stalls to keep their horses from distemper, who apply printed prayers to the cheek to cure toothache and the like.

He said that the Huguenots are exercising a power in France all out of proportion to their numbers, and gave examples, telling of the large number of Protestants in positions of power.

He next introduced the subject of the Huguenot societies and their great work. Their first line of work is, he said, not only to convert individuals, but to establish self-supporting churches. His accounts of the efforts of the poor villagers to build chapels for themselves were listened to with great interest. He told of one instance in a country place, where a man earning only $240 a year, headed a subscription for a chapel with $100 of it and how another man, earning only thirty cents a day, gave $20 toward the same object, while others gave just as liberally. Another line of work is to visit the scattered Protestants who are almost lost among other sects.

Another part of the work is the bringing of the gospel to those that do not know anything about it. He told of the work of the evangelists and how one, who was conducting meetings in five towns, had to ride two hours on the train and two hours on his bicycle to get to different places. He gave an outline of the financial condition of the societies and how the annual income was about $200,000. "A small amount in America, but a large one for us." He said that he was told that America would do nothing for France, but he did not believe that a country which gave so many millions to Africa and other places in their excellent work, would refuse to help France. He closed by reading an appeal written by Huguenot miners. After a prayer, a collection was taken up for the benefit of the work.

A Modern Chronicle.

And it came to pass that in the reign of Gilbert, the Good, the hyperborean ice-preserves humped themselves and swooped down on the place called Plainfield, so that the dwellers therein were sorely smitten with the shakes and the chattering of their teeth could be heard far into the land of the ungodly that dwelt in the marsh-pits of Somerville. But there was one among them who stood out in the glacial air as he were swathed in the robes of impenetrable comfort; so much so that those who were sore shaken with the ague did gather about him and beseech him to tell them whence came his exemption from the pangs of the polar pestilence. And as they besought him he transpired as with the glow of a mid-June noon, and with a tone of voice about seventy in the shade he replied—"Lo! I am never penotruted by these arctic zephers, for I am securely shielded against their attacks by the warmth inherent in the coal which I buy from George O. Stevens."

Monument to Washington.

The Scandinavian residents of Perth Amboy have erected a monument to Washington. February 22d, Washington's Birthday, the unique monument will be unveiled in the Public Square at Perth Amboy. It is intended as a tribute to American freedom and independence and as a pledge of loyalty to American institutions by Scandinavians who work in the terra cotta works.

Amateur Actors Preparing.

AGAINST THE CIGARETE.

Plainfield Women Corner Assemblyman And Argue With Them.

The New York Herald this morning contained the following from Trenton concerning two Plainfield women:

The Committee on Education gave a hearing Thursday afternoon on Mr. Fleming's bill, which prohibits the manufacture of cigarettes in this State. Two women were exceedingly anxious to be heard upon the subject, and after some skirmishing they succeeded in getting Messrs. Stanger, Smith and Codington of the committee in the little cubby hole, off the municipal corporation's committee room, which is allotted to the Postmaster of the House.

Assemblyman Smith, of Essex, thought that nothing would be accomplished by the measure. There was already a law on the statute books prohibiting the sale of cigarettes to all persons less than sixteen years of age, which was practically a dead letter.

Mrs. Krom, of Plainfield, who was here in the interest of the bill, at this point spoke up and said that the reason that law was not enforced was that it required the parents or guardians to bring suit against the offenders. There were two classes of parents, she said—one that did not care whether their children smoked cigarettes or not and would therefore not take the trouble to bring suit; the other, composed of those who took an interest in their children, but did not wish to bring suit against the violators of the law because of the publicity and advertising it would give the cigarettes.

Mr. Smith did not consider Mrs. Krom's argument a particularly strong one and said that the bill, if adopted, would do a great injury to those who were engaged in manufacturing cigarettes in this State.

Mr. Fleming said that there were very few persons engaged in making cigarettes in New Jersey, and the bill could not work the harm Mr. Smith feared. Mrs. Coard, of Plainfield, thought that the cigarettes ought to be tabooed in the State on account of the pictures which are given away with them, which do as much harm to the morals of the boys as the cigarettes themselves do to their health. Mr. Coard got in a slap at Elizabeth, Plainfield's rival, by declaring that the pictures were made in the former city.

After considerable discussion by the members of the committee it was resolved to report the measure favorably, after amending it so as to forbid the manufacture and sale of all kinds of cigarettes in which tobacco is used, under a penalty of $1,000 fine or one year's imprisonment, or both. The original bill only referred to paper cigarettes.

The Newest Women.

A very novel club has recently been organized in New Market, composed entirely of women. They have adopted the name "The Newest Women," and the objects of the club are for the advancement of everything that the name implies. At present the membership is limited to a few, but there is no doubt others will join. They meet at the home of the members, and a meeting was held yesterday afternoon at New Market. Among the members are Miss Addie Weaver and Miss Etta Raybert, of this city. The young club gives promise of being a flourishing one, both socially and financially.

BAPTIZED AT A FUNERAL

Impressive Services at the Funeral of Mrs. T. E. H. Curtis.

One of the saddest and most impressive funerals held in Plainfield for a long time, took place last evening at the residence of T. E. H. Curtis, of 508 West Eighth street, when the last sad rites were held over the remains of his beloved wife. Rev. E. M. Rodman conducted the solemn Episcopal service while the choir boys of the Grace P. E. Church sang the hymns. The mantel back of the casket was banked with flowers, while other floral designs were arranged all about the casket. At the close, the three little daughters of the deceased woman were all baptized by Rev. Mr. Rodman. A large number of sorrowing relatives and friends were present.

A handsome floral offering representing a displaced bicycle from the Plainfield Lady Cyclists, of which deceased was a member, made from pinks, roses and carnations, a masterpiece by Frank W. Miles, the Somerset street florist, was the central piece of the floral display.

GAME COCKS AND A FIGHT.

Prominent New Brunswick and Plainfield Men Row at a Main.

Game cocks and angry men were mixed up in a fight at a well-known resort near Fanwood Wednesday night. A cocking main between New Brunswick, Plainfield and Bayonne birds had been arranged and at 11 o'clock there was a crowd of excited sports around the pit. Two stages had conveyed the New Brunswickers to the place. Among them were several prominent business men.

Much ill feeling was shown between the New Brunswick men and the other visitors over some of the decisions, and at the end of the fourth battle several men who were under the influence of liquor began to fight. This started a general row, in which revolvers and knives were drawn.

For a few minutes it looked as if there might be a tragedy, but the Plainfield men made a hasty retreat, leuving the New Brunswick men in possession.

Our boy left home to-day!
How full of sorrow is my lonely, quivering heart;
For many days we shall not see his smiling face;
How shall we pass the hours from him apart?

He left his childhood's home to-day!
Things never can be quite as they have been before.
His room is dark and desolate to-night,
His hat and coat hang not behind the kitchen door.

We miss his boyish face so much;
Backward for months and years our sad thoughts turn:
Did we appreciate our boy when he was with us?
We ask, as now our hearts for him so fondly yearn.

I try to think he will be back,
And for a visit he will only plan;
But then the thought that hurts comes back to me,
Our boy left home for a "business man."

He'll labor and gain wealth,
And then a wife and home he'll have; I must not mind,
But then the ties of childhood's home will break,
And we—oh, 'tis so lonely for those left behind!

This is the way of all the world.
One cannot have all pleasure sweet without alloy;
Sad partings come; and I can only pray to-night,
Thank God I have so good, so true a boy.

FOR HER SAKE.

It wanted less than an hour to high noon when Miss Marty Lear heard her brother's boat take ground on the narrow beach below the garden, and set the knives and glasses straight while she listened for the click of the garden latch.

A line of stunted hazels ran along the foot of the garden and hid the landing-place from Miss Lear as she stood at the kitchen window gazing down steep alleys, of scarlet runners. But above the hazels she looked across to the fruit-growing village of St. Kitts, and catch a glimpse at high tide of the intervening river, or towards low water of the mud banks shining in the sun.

It was Miss Lear's custom to look most often from this window; and, in fact, been her habit for close upon 40 years. And this evening, when the latch clicked at length, and her brother in his market-suit came ploughing up the path between the parallels of garden-stuff, her eyes rested all the while upon the line of gray water above and beyond his respectable hat.

Or, when he entered the kitchen, hitched this hat upon a peg in the wall —where its brim accurately fitted a sort of dull halo in the whitewash—did he appear to want any welcome from her. He was a long-jawed man of 65, she a long-faced woman of 61; and they understood each other's ways, having kept this small and desolate farm together for 30 years—that is, since their father's death.

A cold veal pasty stood on the table, with the cider jug that Job Lear regularly emptied at supper. These suggested no small-talk, and the pair sat down to eat in silence.

It was only while holding out his plate for a second helping of the pasty that Job spoke with a full mouth.

"Who d'ee reckon I ran across to-day, down in Troy?" Miss Marty cut the slice with a troubling to say that she had not a notion.

"Why, that fellow Amos Trudgeon," he went on.

"Yes?"

"Pears to me you must be failin' if you disremembers 'em; son of old Sal Trudgeon, that used to keep the jumble-shop 'cross the water; hina that stoile our eggs back-along, when father was livin'."

"I remember."

"I thought you must. Why, you gave evidence, to be sure. Be dashed! now I come to mind, if you wasn' the first to wake the house an' say you heard a man hollerin' out down 'pon the mud."

"Iss, I did."

"An' saved his life, though you did get 'en two months in Bodmin Gaol by it. Up to the armpits he was, an' not five minutes to live, when we hauled 'en out, and wonderful 'twas he could be doin' there, found he'd been stealing our eggs. He inquired after you to-day."

"Did he?"

"Iss. 'How's Marty?' says he, 'gen' rapidly,' says I. The nerve that some folks have! Comes up to me as cool as my lord and holds out a hand. He've agrown into a sort of commercial; stomach like a bow-window, with a watchguard looped across. I'd a mind to say 'Eggs to 'en, it so enmoyed me."

"I hope you didn't."

"I mean, did he ask any more about me?"

"Iss; wanted to know if you was married. I reckon he meant that for a bit o' pleasantness."

"Not that! Ah, not that!"

Job laid his knife and fork with their points resting on the rim of his plate, and, with a lump of pasty in one cheek, looked at his sister. She had pushed back her chair a bit, and her fingers were plucking the edge of the tablecloth.

"Not that!" she repeated once more, and hardly above a whisper. She did not lift her eyes. Before Job could speak—

"He was my lover," she said, and shivered.

"Mar—ty—"

She looked up now, hardened her ugly, twitching face, forced her eyes to meet her brother's, and went on, breathlessly—

"I swear to you, Job—here, across the table—he was my lover, and I ruined 'en. He was the only man, 'cept you and father, that ever kissed me, and I betrayed 'en. As the Lord liveth, I stood up in the box and swore away his name to save mine. An' he made me."

"Mar—ty Lear!"

"Don't hinder me, Job. It's God's truth I'm tellin' 'ee. His folks were low lot, an' father'd have broken every bone o' me. But we used to meet in the orchard most every night. Don't look so, brother. I'm past 60, an' notiild known; an' how evil an' good's the same to me."

"Go on."

"Well, the last night he came over 'twas spring tides, an' past the flood. I was waiting in the orchard, down in the corner by the Adams' pearmain. We could see the white front o' the house from there, and us in the dark shadow, and there was the gap handy that Amos could slip through at a pinch—you fenced it up yourself the very summer that father died in the fall. That night Amos was late an' the dew heavy, and no doubt I lost my temper waitin' out there in the long grass. He had words, I know, an' I reckon the tide ran far out while we quarreled. Anyway, he left me in wrath, an' I stood there under the apple tree, lougin' for 'en to come back an' make friends, while the tide went on, an' I didn't hear his foot steps—no, nor his oars pullin' away—though hearkenin' with all my ears.

"An' then I heard a terrible sound," Miss Marty paused and drew the back of her hand across her dry lips before proceeding. "A terrible sound—a sort of low breathin', but fierce; an' some thing worse, a suck-suckin' of the mud below, an' I ran down. I suppose, in his anger, he took to the low he walked round the point (for he al'ays moored his boat round the point out o' sight), an' went wide an' was taken. There he was, above his knees in it, and far out. He seemed to me in the light of the young moon. For all his fightin', he heard me, and whispered out o' the dark:

"Little girl, it's got me. Hush! don't shout, or they'll catch you.' &c.

"'Can't you get out?' I whispered back.

"'No,' says he, 'I'm afraid I can't unless you run up to the linhay an' fetch a rope.'

"It was no more I stayed to hear, but ran up hot-foot to the linhay and back inside the minute, with the wagon rope.

"'Hold the end,' he panted, 'and throw with all your strength.' And I threw, but failed to make him catch. Twice again I threw, but missed each time by a yard or more. He wouldn't let me near the mud.

"'Then I fell to runnin' to and fro on the edge of the firm ground, an' soliloquized between my teeth because I could devise nothin'. And all the while he was fightin' hard.

"'I'll run an' call father an' Job,' says I.

"'Hust 'ee now! Be you pleased? Do you want to let 'em know all?'

"'But it'll kill you, dear, won't it?'

"'Likely it will,' said he. Then, after a while of battling, he whispers again: 'Little girl, I don't want to die. Death is a cold end. But I reckon you shall save me an' your name as well. Take the rope, coil it as you run and hang it back on the peg, quick. Then run you to the henhouse an' bring me all the eggs you can find. Be quick and no questions, for it's little longer I can hold up. It's above my waist,' he says.

"I didn't know my left hand. I ran for my life to the linhay and back, an' then to the henhouse. I could tell pretty well where to find a dozen eggs or more in the dark, an' three minutes I'd groped about and returned 'em in the lap of my dress. Then back I ran. I could just spy 'en a dark spot out there in the mud.

"'How many?' he axed, his voice like a rook's.

"'A dozen, or near.'

"'Toss 'em here. Don't come too nigh an' shy careful, so's I can catch.'

"I stepped down pretty nigh to the brim o' the mud an' tossed 'em out to him. He fell short in my hurry, but the rest he got hold of somehow.

"'That's right,' he calls, hoarse and low; 'they'll think egg-stealin' natural to a low family like ours. Now back to your room—undress, lie cry out, say, an' there's a row about in' for the down 'pon the mud; and, dear, be quick! When you wave your candle twice at the window I'll shout like a Trojan.'

"An' I did it, Job; for the cruelty in a fresh woman passion, being as you so rescued 'en, an' he went to gaol. For he said 'twas the only way. An' his mother took it as quite reasonable that her husband's son should take to that sort of thing, an' so did Amos Trudgeons. Father to son, they was of no account. Egg-stealin' was just the little hole-an'-corner wickedness that'd come natural to 'em.'

"I guess now," said Job Lear, very slowly, "that the wain-rope was wet in' my hands when I unhitched 'en that night from the hook, an' I wondered. It bein' the end of a week's dryth. But in the dark an' the confusion o' savin' the sweetheart's life it slipped my thoughts. else—"

"Else you'd ha' wetted it wi' the blood o' my back, Job. But the rope's been frayed to powder this many year. An you never told me like that. I'm past 60, an' I've done my shares of repentin'. He didn't say if he was married, did he?"—From "The Delectable Duchy."

Didn't Worry Him.

An old man and his wife were last summer sailing on a steamship between Blackpool and the Isle of Man. As the sea was rather rough, and the old woman unaccustomed to sailing, she said to her husband:

"Oh, John, this ship is going down!"

"Well, never mind," said her husband. "It isn't ours."—Tit-Bits.

—An Unsafe Insurance Risk.—"Any insanity in your family?" asked the examining physician. "Well," said the man who was applying for life insurance, "my wife says she must have been crazy to have married me."—Indianapolis Journal.

WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.

Taking a Picture of the Interior of a Living Body.

An Improvement in Photography That Will Stop at Nothing, if the Story Is Correctly Told—The Views of Wizard Edison.

What Wizard Edison has qualified as the greatest discovery of the century has just been made public in Vienna. It is a process by which the interior of a living body is photographed; and its author is Prof. Roentgen, of the University of Wuerzburg, in Bavaria. This remarkable feat is achieved by means of a light that penetrates all organic bodies, such as wood, leather and substances of that class. Radium heat produces this light, the penetrative power of which is wonderful. The object to be photographed is exposed to a Crooke's tube, which is air-tight, and through which an induction current is led. The rays thrown out by this radiant heat, intense in character, are thrown from the tube upon the object to be photographed.

Several remarkable negatives are shown by Prof. Roentgen. One shows a man's ankle, in which a bullet is imbedded. To the surgeon, therefore, who could only determine the location of bullets with the aid of the probe, this discovery is of extraordinary significance. A leather purse, containing a number of coins, was photographed, and a negative obtained that gives with wonderful accuracy not only the picture of the purse itself, but every coin in its relative position to the others.

A skeleton hand, showing the bone structure of that member,was produced by focusing the heat rays on the hand of a man. The flesh seems to have entirely disappeared. A picture in ordinary dress sitting before a young lady was photographed, and the heat rays penetrated clothes and all, and gave a perfect skeleton picture. A spinal vertebrae was photographed through the skin of the body, and came out perfect. Into a wooden box were placed objects of iron. In the negative the iron articles appear in exact likeness, but the outer box, like a phantom, has vanished altogether, thus demonstrating that the new process can be subjected to any test.

THE SKELETON HAND.
[From a photograph taken by the new process.]

The wire over which the electric current passes into the tube is attached to a small storage battery in the camera. At the rear of the tube, the latter being arranged like the lens in an ordinary camera. A heavy cloth is thrown over the end of the tube, from which the heat rays are focused in such a way that the outline of the tube's end is preserved, so that the operator may focus the rays without difficulty. The photographing is thus done through this heavy cloth, as well as other organic substances described above.

While radiant heat light is not new, the application which Prof. Roentgen has made of it is an entirely new scientific feat, which overturns the theory regarding opaque objects, such as have heretofore been included in the category of those that light would not penetrate. The professor is of the opinion that his discovery will demonstrate that there does not exist an opaque body, and that the penetrating power of light may be regulated by its intensity and manner of use.

Thomas A. Edison claims for the new discovery that it will prove almost limitless, and regards it as yet unacquainted with the materials used by Prof. Roentgen, says that it is doubtless accomplished with plates sensitized with chemicals exposed to radiant heat, or, as termed by the invisible light. The work is done with what we call waves of low refrangibility.

From the standpoint of mecical and surgical science, the discovery is invaluable. All diseases and growths of the interior body can thus be photographed and absolutely located. Mr. Edison is also of the opinion that this discovery can be so perfected that there will be no further vivisection of bodies, and that the location of the brain can be laid bare without any trouble.

For metallurgy and mineralogy the new discovery is as limitless as it is for medical science. By this new process all the dips, spurs and angles of the veins and strata of the richest mineral tents can be discovered without making borings and sinking shafts.

While the cardinal factor of the new process is radiant heat, Mr. Edison is confident that special rays thereof and specially prepared chemicals are necessary to jointly operate with it. Radiant heat is the only energy which fills all space and pervades all bodies when transformed to luminiferous ether. The ether waves are found to vibrate by the hot body, and the vibratory motion travels in all directions like waves at a speed of about 180,000 miles a second.

Prof. Henry Morton, of Stevens' Institute of Technology at Hoboken, is not as enthusiastic in his belief in the new discovery as Prof. Edison. Morton doubts the practicability with regard to some of the experiments, but does not deny the possibility of the process.

SCHOOL AND CHURCH.

—Prof. Dubois Reymond, the physiologist, who is now 77 years old, is about to resign his place of perpetual secretary of the Berlin academy of sciences.

—Cardinal Melchers' death, following closely on those of Cardinal Persico and Bonaparte, will keep alive the superstition that cardinals always die in threes.

—Foreigners who are not backward in art or science are to be excluded from the Paris medical schools, as the laboratories are overcrowded, and even enough subjects for dissection cannot be obtained.

—A number of prominent citizens of Philadelphia will give a banquet to Prof. Edmund J. James, of the University of Pennsylvania, before he leaves to assume his new duties at the University of Chicago.

—A "Christian Labor union" was recently organized in Milwaukee, the object of which is "to furnish a bond of reciprocal sympathy and information between the church and working men in their organized movements."

—The Congregational church of Sedalia, Mo., has undertaken a grand effort to bring the old sinners into the fold this year. Young women are to act as ushers in place of the young men hitherto acting in that capacity.

—Presbyterian vigor in invective has not degenerated in Ireland. A Glasgow minister, who opposed total abstinence, was described lately in the pulpit as "A white-chokered blasphemer engaged in raising a signpost to hell."

—Some people have been making a count and find that not one of the state governors in the United States is a Roman Catholic. There are no Roman Catholics in the cabinet and very few in the senate, none in the supreme court, and never never has been one in the white house.

—Miss Ella Wilcox is the highly efficient janitor and sexton of the church of the United Brethren in Marcellus, Mich. She has full care of the church, trims the lamps, rings the bell on Sundays, and attends to all the other duties of a sexton "in every way better than any male janitor ever has," the church-goers say. She is good-looking, as well as accomplished; does not blame another point of superiority over the male janitors.

—A class in ethics is one of the novel educational features of the Massachusetts state reformatory. It is conducted on a plan devised by Professor Hyde, of Bowdoin college. About 150 of the more intelligent prisoners are members of the class. The usual procedure of the class consists of a lecture by the instructor or a paper by some member, followed by a general discussion of the topic. The debates are said to be spirited and earnest, and the effect on the prisoners excellent.

LAND OF MIGHTY WONDERS.

Bewildering Beauty of the Sublime Scenery in Iceland.

To the botanist and geologist Iceland presents a peculiarly rich field. The flora is plentiful and varied. The mountains have many curious shapes and forms; but the sublimity of volcanic energy having occurred in closest contact with the realm of ice bears evidence of frost and fire having grappled in sternest conflict, writes Ruth Shaffner. In some cases the ice-queen has the mastle none remains, and looks like monuments or cairns, and it is difficult to believe they are natural. Zeolites, embedded in reddish clay, bits of agate and fragments of chalcedony, are a few of the treasures found strewn in the paths leading to the fjords.

Nothing can be more delightful than a horseback trip of 800 or 1,000 miles through Iceland. The traveler sees thousands of mountains covered with eternal snow, and of lava beds of fantastic figures, covered with moss that glistens in the sun like hoar frost, and as a crowning glory the atmosphere is so brilliant that objects 80 miles distant appear close at hand.

The effect of light and shadow are the purest I have ever seen, and the contrast of color is truly astonishing; one square foot of a mountain juts out in a blaze of gold against the flank of another dyed of the darkest purple, while up against the sky beyond rise peaks of glistening snow and ice.

If within the domain of nature such another region is to be found it must be in the heart of those solitudes which the moon, revolving in its amid the untrodded fastnesses of the lunar mountains.—N. Y. Mercury.

How Treasure Is Transported in China.

We have heard much, especially of late,of the diverting of public treasure to private gain by Chinese officials of all ranks, and the pitiable evidence of it in the failure of the Chinese army and navy to be even ready for the inevitable struggle with Japan is too recent and convincing to be disputed; but on the other hand, we can only wonder at the power of this law of responsibility which, when it does operate, is the remotest province to transport its dues to Peking in solid silver, by the simplest means, without loss by the way and without the protection of a single soldier. Nothing impresses one more with the absoluteness of this power as applied to transportation than to meet a line of pack-mules, horses, or camels, loaded with silver bullion. The silver is usually confined in rough logs of wood which are hollowed out, and then bound together, and each load is marked with a little flag of imperial yellow, stating the amount and destination. That is all the protection there is except the ordinary drivers, who carry no weapons, and are attended by no guard. In what other land on the face of the globe could the same be done?—Prof. C. M. Cady, in Century.

THE GERMAN ARMY.

A Perfect and Thoroughgoing Military Organization.

Every German Is Liable to Service After He Reaches the Age of Seventeen —Method of Recruiting and Maintaining the Army.

The German emperor may declare war, though such declaration is subject to the consent of the federal council. If, however, the country is invaded, then what the emperor says prevails, without federal satisfaction.

An American may think that the young kaiser talks a good deal about his function as war lord, and takes a good deal of room in discharging it, but, by the imperial constitution of 1871, after the Franco-Prussian war had ended in German unity, the emperor is rightfully the first soldier in the empire, the entire forces of which, in war and peace, are under his command. It is to be noted also that the army is kept in fighting trim, and this is to secure this end by imperial legislation. The Bavarian army is, however, a distinctive contingent, by itself, though practically coordinated and subordinated to the imperial army system. Saxony and Wurtemburg, also, preserve a certain military identity, in that each puts up an army corps for itself.

It is provided that the entire land forces of the empire shall consist of 21 army corps.

Every German is liable to service. No substitute is allowed. No one escapes unless a member of a sovereign house, and he would deem it proper to serve in the army generally. So the army of Germany is the people's army.

When a German boy has finished his 17th year he finds a drill master waiting for him. When he puts away the tools of war for good he is 46 years old. But practically his service will begin in his 20th and close in his 39th year. During this period he will serve actively three years in the ranks, four in the reserve, five in the first levy of the Landwehr, until he is 39, in the second levy of the Landwehr, and finally until he is 45 in the Landsturm. A young fellow, however, of means and education, who bears all expenses and passes an examination gets off with one year's service in the ranks. The duty of the Landsturm is to take part in the defense of the country. Neither the Landsturm nor the second levy of the Landwehr is called out in peace, but the men in the first levy (reifle) reserve share in annual exercises covering 20 weeks.

The institution of the one-year volunteers is an advantageous exception to what an American might call a military despotism.

Under this exception, young men of professional inclinations not only receive the military training that prepares them for duty in the reserve, but also continue their studies with less detriment to their education than if duly devoted three valuable years to a soldier's life exclusively. But a fellow must pay for this one-year privilege, his legitimate military expenses amounting to from $350 to $500.

The military forces of the several German states are administered through their own war ministries, which are all subject to the Prussian war ministry. To secure the most military system there are, besides the war ministries, the emperor's military cabinet, the commission for the defense of the country, the general staff, the head of which is directly responsible to the emperor, and the quartermaster general staff, which in the most scientific sense is intrusted with the defense of the empire.

Generally speaking, an army corps is recruited in the district where it is garrisoned, but the Prussian guard corps is recruited throughout the country. In the case of Alsace-Lorriane, the province taken from the French, Germany discreetly takes no chances of disaffection among her troops there garrisoned. The men she raises in this province of French antecedents are soldiers of unquestioned loyalty.

The cavalry of the German army is the only branch which has been increased since the French war. Its strength is 93 regiments, or 465 squadrons. France has 45 squadrons less, but of field batteries she has 45 more. Germany's field batteries is smaller than those of the standing army.

As regards uniform, the infantry, artillery, dragoons and pioneers wear the helmet, the officers the "kaeppi," the Uhlans the "czapka," the hussars the fur cap, the cuirassiers the steel helmet. The cuirass nowadays is only worn on parade. The infantry coat is dark blue. In color, style and equipment there is much dissimilarity in the German army, but there is complete uniformity in matters of rank distinction.

A German officer finds a private income a useful adjunct. A second lieutenant's monthly income is about $30. When a man has nothing he may perhaps get a stipend from special funds or first class drawn from the emperor. If first class draws annually about $1,250; a major or lieuteant colonel, $1,650; a colonel, $2,250. There is also an allowance for outside lodgings. A young officer cannot possibly live up to his social station if he has a family to support. If a young officer wants to marry he must get the emperor's permission, and satisfactorily prove that his income is at least in Prussia $450 a year. The future wife of an officer must be worthy the army—she must be of unblemished reputation, and be of a family of unquestioned respectability.

There are pensions for the old and infirm, though no age limitation exists as with us.

When a German recruit takes the oath the act is made as solemn as possible. No criminal is allowed to wear the uniform of the German army.

A German soldier's pay is between seven and eight cents a day, and he is allowed one and two-thirds pounds of bread.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Terms—$2.00 per year.

A. L. Force, Editor and Proprietor

Lawyer Reed assures The Press that there is but little doubt that John Johnson will be continued in the office of City Collector.

Matt Quay's friends say that he is in the field to stay—referring to the canvass for the Republican Presidential nomination. He will probably stay right there.

Philadelphia is bound to stick to old methods. The Quakerites even went as far as to roll up its usual 60 000 plurality for the Republican municipal ticket.

Senator Voorhees is now said to be looking with longing eyes on the Clerk in Chancery. His term as Senator expires with this session of the Legislature.

With half a dozen dances occurring in this city last night, who will say that New Brunswick is quiet?—New Brunswick Times.

And with fights, murders, suicides, etc., etc., who will say New Brunswick is not wicked.

A bill drawn for the reorganization of the higher courts of the State, one of whose confessed objects is to allay judicial jealousy, is a sad commentary on the officials whom it affects.

The speaker has appointed Assemblymen Skinner and Reed, the House members of the joint committee to revise and codify the District Court laws. It is to be a service of love, says the Newark Advertiser.

City Attorney E. S. Atwater, of Elizabeth, who has been appointed Judge of the District Court by Gov. Griggs, will resign his position as city attorney next month. Judge Gilhooly will be his successor.

No Assemblyman at Trenton is mentioned in the newspaper proceedings more than Mr. Reed of Somerset. This is a pleasing fact to Plainfielders, and indicates that he wields unusual influence for a first-termer, and has a bright future before him in a political and official way.

Judge Harker, President of the Illinois Bar Association, points out that while the progress in every department of science and of art has been amazing, it now takes a lawsuit longer to travel from the judgment in the trial court to the execution of the judgment than it did fifty years ago.

Mr. Croker's criticism of The World, published in his interview on New York politics yesterday morning, seems to be a case of you abuse-me-and I'll-abuse-you. There was nothing dignified in Mr. Croker's words. The effect sought for is lost by the inflamed sentiments resorted to.

An amusing discovery was made last week in the Assembly, says The Sun. Heretofore it has been customary to employ anywhere from one to two score of boys as pages in the House. This year the Republican caucus limited the number to ten. A curious reporter, who noticed the same four boys sitting in front of the Clerk's desk day after day, made an investigation, and found that there are really but four boys. The other six places are held by voters whose identity is known only to the Sergeant-at-Arms and the State Treasurer, and as they do nothing for the $200 salary, it is not apparent to the ordinary observer. It might be added that the four boys do all the work required and have lots of time to spare.

The women who came to Trenton from Plainfield to present their views on Mr. Fleming's anti-cigarette bill to the Committee on Education, showed by the arguments they advanced that one of the strongest feminine objections to the cigarette is to be found in the pictures that accompany it. The manufacture of these pictures have been laid at the door of Elizabeth. The bill as amended and reported favorably to the House, is specious to the verge of intolerance. It forbids the manufacture and sale of all kinds of cigarettes in which tobacco is used, rolled either in paper or leaf, under a penalty of fine or imprisonment. It is hard to see how such a bill, even if passed, would accomplish anything, when a law already on the statute books prohibiting the sale of cigarettes to all persons under sixteen years of age, has been allowed to become a dead letter without protest. It is hard to see, also, why the women do not begin with a crusade against the noxious pictures, which might meet with success, rather than by a sweeping raid against the entire industry whose intemperance can only defeat itself.—New York Press.

All contracts for whiskey advertisements in The Ledger have expired, and from this date no whiskey advertisement shall appear in these columns at any price. If the saloon people desire to expatiate on the merits (?) of any peculiar brand of their damnation, they can look elsewhere for a medium through which to extoll its virtues. The Ledger makes no claim to sanctification, but when a saloonkeeper tells us that a $6 ad in The Ledger has sold for him $1,200 worth of whiskey, it makes us feel that we have been in a small measure responsible for the damage done, and we promise to "sin no more."—Murray (Ky.,) Ledger.

To the thousands of people in this country, who, though not directly connected with the Salvation Army, yet realize its great power for good, the trouble between the Booths over the matter of the younger one leaving his post in this country, is sincerely regretted. Such conflicts between leaders cannot but help to impair the efficiency of their work, reflecting as it does on the professed principles of self-sacrifice with the leaders.

All who have been interested in the departure to Turkey of Clara Barton, the President of the American Red Cross Society, will read with interest that a cable despatch from Constantinople, received at Washington from A. W. Terrill, American Minister to Turkey, contained the intelligence that the efforts of Miss Barton to secure the permission of the Turkish Government to distribute relief to the suffering Armenians have been successful. Miss Barton has been presented to the Minister and has received full assurance of protection and aid for her agents to distribute relief. The despatch ends with these words: "The door is thus opened wide for charity." Several literary societies in the vicinity are showing their appreciation of Miss Barton's courageous kindness by contributing to the Red Cross Society, whose funds Miss Barton will distribute as a private individual.

Albany is not to have the monopoly of freak legislation. The bill which is to be introduced at Trenton by request of Farmer Hutchinson, of New Brunswick, is altogether exceptional. His aim and object is to improve the schools of the State. These institutions are suffering from a lack of pupils. The agriculturist proposes to remedy the evil in a roundabout way; but at any rate his reasoning process is sound upon the face of it. "The State fosters other industries by bounties and premiums. Why may we not try a bounty on children? And then the small districts which lack their quota of pupils might have them, and our dilapidated schoolhouses would be repaired from the proceeds of taxable parents. Let us boom New Jersey, and try and make her new school law a success." Of course it is rather a novelty, and reversal of the ordinary process, to provide the children for the sake of the schools, but then as the whole scheme is for the honor and glory of New Jersey, the farmer's plan may be received with favor.—Evening Sun.

RECEIVING THE REPORTS

BOROUGH OFFICERS SHOW WHAT THE PAST YEAR'S WORK IS.

The Streets Have Been Greatly Improved, and Now That the Work Has Been Started It Will Be Continued.

An adjourned meeting of the Borough Council was held Friday evening, at which time Councilmen Schutt, Smith and Peck were present. Mayor Hegeman called the meeting to order, after which Clerk Arnold read a petition from E. S. Emerson and other residents of Rome street, asking that the name of the street be changed to Lennox place. It was referred to the street committee. Clerk Arnold then read the reports of the various departments for the past year. Below will be found a summary of them:

The overseer of the poor reported the expenditure from Feb. 1st to be $91.16, and the township's share is $10.14, leaving $81.02. Collector Spencer reported collections for 1895, $34 3.9.00.

The street committee then presented the following report:

Acting in harmony with the suggestions made by His Honor, the Mayor, in his annual message, we have carried out, relative to the introduction of sewers, four committee did be & either upon the permanent improvement of more than two streets during the year, and these were therefore as marks of positive necessity, namely: the macadamizing of Prospect place, a short street, connecting Washington avenue and Grove street, both of which were paved with stone, and thus forming a paved thoroughfare from the Park district to the city and depot. The net expense of this improvement was $1,543.21.

The other was the macadamizing of Harrison street, a thoroughfare running through a well populated part of the borough, impassable during the spring and fall months, and the residents were put to much inconvenience and trouble in getting to and from their homes. The street is now in good condition, and with the addition of a small amount of work, which your committee were unable to do on account of the lateness of the season, will be fully out of debt. The net cost of this improvement was $990.16.

In both of the improvements mentioned, the residents, with their usual public spirit, donated a generous contribution to the fund incurred.

The other work done during the year has consisted of the scraping, cleaning and resurfacing of Somerset street, the re-grading and macadamizing of Grove street, avenue to the borough side, and the general repair of all of the borough streets and avenues which required it. This consisted of filling ruts and depressions with stone in our paved streets, namely: Grove and Emily streets, Washington, Watchung and Myrtle avenues, Park place and Greenbrook road; cleaning of gutters and culverts, trimming trees and turnpiking of roads.

We submit herewith a detailed statement of the expenditures for the year, together with the cost of such work; this does not include the general clean up of streets:

Agreeable to the request of the Mayor to secure better sidewalks in the borough than has heretofore existed, your committee has caused either by request or legal notice, 12,250 feet of stone sidewalk to be laid during the year 1895, and 1,000 feet to be done in this direction but your committee have not called for such an amount, of work as it could handle at any one time. We have, however, contracted the citizens of the borough for the prompt and cheerful way with which they have responded to our efforts to secure better sidewalks.

Mr. Peck, of the fire, water and lamps committee, stated that three bids had been received for building the fire tower and after due consideration the committee recommended that W. T. Kirk's bid of $621 be accepted. He stated that they desired more time to decide about the bell, and that the tower and bell would not exceed in cost over $1,120, the payment of which could be arranged through the issuance of fire department bonds, the same to mature separately each year till paid. The report further stated that only six fire alarms had been given during the year, three of which were false.

Mr. Peck then offered a resolution that W. T. Kirk's bid be accepted and that the committee be authorized to enter into a contract. The resolution was adopted.

An ordinance was offered by Mr. Peck which provides for the residents of Warren street vacating the property as requested by them at the last meeting. The ordinance was passed on first and second readings and laid over till next meeting for final action. This action is taken to allow for the opening of Watchung avenue.

MANY THINGS.

We Are Prone to Concentrate on One Idea.

Products of Nature That Are Manifold Blessings to Man.

Whenever you see a glass of bright, clear, sparkling water, you at once think what delightful drinking water that is. You never think of it as being especially useful for boiling potatoes or for bathing the face. You only think of it's power to quench the thirst. And yet this is only one of its many desirable properties.

When you see a bright, hot fire in winter, you think at once how easily you could keep warm by remaining near it. The thought does not occur to you that a fire has a hundred other uses.

Whenever cod-liver oil is mentioned, many people think at once of consumption, as if this was the only disease to which this valuable remedy was adapted. Perhaps this is not strange when we consider the fact that cod-liver oil stands out as the most prominent remedy in this terrible affection. In fact, as water quenches the thirst, and as fire gives warmth, so does cod-liver oil bring health and prosperity to those just beginning to fade from serious lung trouble.

Of late years, Lowever, it has been known that consumption is caused by a germ. It is also known that cod-liver oil does not kill this germ. And there is also the fact that this same oil will cure consumption in its early stages. If it does not kill the germ of the disease, how does it affect a cure?

This is easily explained. Cod-liver oil has a wonderful power to build up and invigorate the whole body. When the body is in this prosperous condition, it can take care of the germs of consumption; that is, it destroys the germs, and thus cures the disease. The reason cod-liver oil is called a powerful tonic and reconstructive; while it is also known to be a most valuable food.

From this we can see the value of such a remedy in a number of ailments. There are many persons who begin the work of each day in a thoroughly exhausted condition. They have tried quantities of tonics and iron preparations of all kinds, but without relief. There is no appetite; bowels are constipated; circulation is poor; the lips are pale; the eyes are colorless; and the whole body is in a debilitated and most uncomfortable state. Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites changes all this. Soon the blood becomes richer; the heart beats stronger; the color returns to the face; digestion is improved; and good health is once more at hand.

Scott's Emulsion contains more pure Norwegian Cod-liver Oil than any other emulsion in the world, that will stand the test of color reaction, being a perfect inseparable emulsion. Ask your doctor.

GREEN AND WHITE TEA.

Followed by a Salamagundi Party at the Home of Mrs. H. K. Carroll.

One of the most delightful social events of the season was enjoyed Saturday afternoon from four to seven o'clock at the home of Dr. and Mrs. H. K. Carroll, of Westervelt avenue, when Mrs. Carroll gave a green and white tea. She was assisted in receiving by Mrs. John H. Valiant.

In the reception room Miss Carroll, Miss Grace Carroll and Mrs. H. P. Randolph presided while Miss Barnes, of Brooklyn, and Mrs. Most poured tea in the dining room.

Those assisting as waitresses were: Miss Jessie Carroll, Miss Lottie Carroll, of Maryland, Mrs. Harry Stillman, of Newark, Miss Clara Steiner, Miss Mamie Steiner, Miss Alice Loomis, Miss Marguerite Schuck and Mrs. Elmer Winckler.

The rooms were beautified with a choice arrangement of smilax, pink roses and broad bands of green and white ribbon. The table was prettily decorated in the same colors.

The house was thronged with guests who thoroughly enjoyed the bountiful hospitality of the hostess.

In the evening a salamagundi party was given to those who assisted at the tea. The first and second ladies' prizes were awarded to Miss Marguerite Schuck and Mrs. Most, while John McLoughlin and Mr. Carroll, of Maryland, secured the first and second prizes for the men.

A Reception of Young People.

A delightful reception was given Saturday evening by Mrs. O. B. Leonard, of Madison avenue, to her nieces, Miss Edna Leonard, daughter, of Rev. W. J. Leonard, of Bolton, Mass., and Miss Edith Marsh, daughter of ex-Councilman Francis E. Marsh. Mrs. Leonard was assisted in receiving by her sisters, the Misses Anna O., Florence I. and Minnie S. Marsh, and Mrs. Samuel St.J. McCutchen, and her nieces, the Misses Edna Leonard and Edith Marsh. More than fifty guests were present. Music was furnished for dancing and the supper was served by Stevenson, of this city.

In Odd Costumes.

A delightful masquerade party was given at the home of Victor Lorton, of 436 West Fifth street, Friday night. Victor Lorton was one of the best of the comical characters. Mrs. Fred Haberle, as an old lady, wore a very fine costume, a century and a half old, valued at over $300.

WEDDING MADE UP FOR.

AN EVENING RECEPTION TENDERED TO MR. AND MRS. H. T. BAGLIN.

The Event Held at the Home of the Bride's Parents, Councilman and Mrs. W. C. Smith, Attended by Many Friends.

The dim gray light that precedes the dawn saw the last of the guests depart from the wedding reception tendered to the recently married couple, Mr. and Mrs. Harry T. Baglin, by Mrs. Baglin's father, Councilman William C. Smith, of Grandview avenue, on Friday evening. The young people were quietly married at New York on January 26th, as was told in the Daily Press at the time. Their engagement had been announced before and preparations were being made for a grand wedding. Councilman Smith decided to make up for the loss of the wedding by giving the young couple a reception on the eighteenth birthday of the bride, which was Friday.

The reception was held at the residence of Councilman Smith, which was charmingly decorated for the occasion. Smilax was draped from the chandelier in the centre of each of the lower rooms to the four corners and festooned about the walls, while pinks and roses were artisticly intermingled with the green. Large bouquets were arranged about the rooms. A large American flag, gracefully draped, was among the other decorations.

As soon as the guests arrived and had removed their wraps, they were ushered into the brilliantly lighted parlors and their introduced to Mr. and Mrs. Baglin by Edward Smith, brother of the bride. The bride wore a beautiful evening gown of white, trimmed with smilax and white roses. Councilman and Mrs. Smith assisted in receiving the guests. At 11:30 o'clock a long procession headed by Mr. and Mrs. Baglin, started for another house close by owned by Councilman Smith, where a collation was served. A large wedding cake was placed at each end of the prettily decorated table. The newly married couple sat at the head.

The gilded people began to depart as the hour of midnight passed, but the younger generation remained until the wee sma' hours of the morning to dance.

There were those that did not forget that the premature wedding brought the young people no presents, and one of the upper rooms was devoted to the gifts of friends and relatives. One of the most beautiful of which was an onyx banquet lamp with an onyx table to support it. These were presented by the employes of Baglin & Company, hat manufacturers, of which company Mr. Baglin is a salesman and also has an interest in the firm. Another handsome onyx table was the gift of Charles Rively. The younger brothers and sisters of the bride gave a silver coffee set, while her brother, William C. Smith, Jr., presented them with an onyx clock. Alphonso Baglin, brother of the groom, brought two large paintings. The gifts of the parents to the couple too large to be placed with the rest of the presents, Councilman and Mrs. W. C. Smith gave a bed room suite, while Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Baglin gave all the necessary furnishings for the dining room. There were numerous other gifts consisting of silverware, glassware, china, table linen, brick-a-brac, etc.

Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Baglin leave for Washington, D. C. tomorrow where they will spend a week and then return here while their new home in Newark is being arranged.

Among those present during the evening were:

Mr. and Mrs. William A. Baglin, Mr and Mrs. Louis Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Rively, George Rice, H. Marker, Joseph Phelps, Mrs. Totten and Alphonso Baglin, Newark; Joseph Clarkson and Fred Slater, Rahway; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sutton, Brooklyn; Eugene Stout, Miss Emma Wooley and Miss Mary Waite, Key West; Rev. T. J. Logan Murphy, ex-Mayor and Mrs. L. V. F. Randolph, Captain and Mrs. William Hand, Mr. and Mrs W. W. Coriell, Mr. and Mrs. J. K. Arnold. Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Boss, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Westphal, Mrs. Vodemere, the Misses Vodemere, Mrs. Kroff, Mr. and Mrs. I. L. McVoy, Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Brokaw, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Doud Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Bird, H. N. EARNING DOLLARS.

Grace M. E. Church Women Told How They Did It.

The Ladies' Aid Society, of Grace M. E. church, together with their friends, had a delightful time Friday night in the church when an excellent programme was rendered and a social time enjoyed.

The following programme was finely given:

America, by the choir; Piano solo, Miss Rue Conner; recitation, Miss Jennie Stevens; Negro duet by Miss Sise and Miss Pangborn; Recitation, Miss Agnes Moore; Singing, Miss Bertha Hoffman; Recitation by Miss Vosburg; Music by Miss Jones; Reading by Miss Lizzie Hoagland; Whistling duet; Ladies' Quartet; Dialogue, Nellie Valient, Kate Hoagland, Mable Stevens and C. Somerville; Singing, Miss Grace Carrol; Recitation, Miss Lizzie Reading, Mrs. Taft.

A feature of the event was that each woman brought a dollar and she had to tell how it was earned.

This was accomplished by one of the women of the church putting into poetry, in attractive style, how each dollar was secured, and Miss Grace Carrol read the verses in an interesting manner, and it afforded much amusement.

Some of the dollars were earned by walking to save carriage hire, baking cakes, washing dishes, making fancy articles, keeping boarders, etc.

This was followed with an amusing game. Those present formed sides and photographs taken in early years were passed along. Each person was given a chance to guess who they were, and if they could not, they went to the rear end of the line.

This part of the entertainment brought the event to a close which was thoroughly successful in every respect.

Entertained at Progressive Euchre.

The Misses Barrett entertained a few friends at their home in North Plainfield Friday evening in a very enjoyable manner. Progressive euchre occupied part of the evening. The first prizes were won by Miss Emma Marlow and Robert Carpenter. Miss Jessie Haynes and Oscar Runyon were the winners of the consolation prizes. The tallies were quite novel, consisting of card board hatchets and flags. The rest of the evening passed very pleasantly with singing, dancing and refreshments, while a celebrated palmist told the fortunes of all the party.

AT AN APPROPRIATE TIME.

A Martha Washington Tea Given on the Eve of Her Husband's Birthday.

The chapel of the First Presbyterian Church presented a very pretty sight Friday afternoon and evening, when the Sunday School of the church held a Martha Washington tea party. The chapel was profusely decorated for the occasion with bunting of the National colors, long streamers of which hung from the ceiling to the sides of the room, while more covered the walls, and pictures of George Washington hung in prominent places about the walls. Although red, white and blue were very much in evidence, red was the predominating color of the evening.

The tea was given for the benefit of the Sunday School of the church, and was held between the hours of five and ten o'clock.

The committee in charge who deserve to be commended for their efforts in making the affair the success that it was, consisted of Miss Ella Blish, chairman; Mrs. Howard Pope, Miss Lettie Remsen, Miss Estelle Bittenbender and Miss Chrisie Maag. Mrs. J. M. Bettman poured coffee, and Mrs. J. A. Haynes, assisted by Miss Hayes poured tea. The waitresses were: Miss Mabel Pruden, Miss Lottie Messerschmidt, Miss Lizzie Bittenbender, Miss Katherine Glen, Miss Etta Blish, Miss Luela Mills, Miss Pansy Herring, Miss Evelyn Searing, Miss Kate Overton, Miss Edith Laing, Miss Arnold, Miss Schenck, Miss Overton, Miss Edith Pruden, Miss Jennie Abbott, Miss Eva Drayton and Miss Margaret Cave. Each of the waitresses and those who had charge appeared in the garb of our forefather's day.

MOST POPULAR PAST PRESIDENT.

Mrs. M. C. Dobbins of the Relief Corps so Declared by a Voting Contest.

The Women's Relief Corps, No. 10, Auxiliary to Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., gave a supper Saturday afternoon and evening in G. A. R. hall, which was one of the best ever served there. The women had planned for a successful event and they were well repaid, both from a social and financial standpoint. The menu was first class and included everything to suit the taste. Over one hundred persons called and took supper, which was served by the women in the best of style.

An attractive feature of the event was the voting contest for the most popular past president in the corps. A large handsome well-made quilt had been made by the women for the occasion, and Mrs. Lealand and Miss Ada Nash received votes at five cents each on the quilt. The one receiving the highest number of votes was awarded the quilt.

The contest was very exciting and everyone present became interested. It finally centered between Mrs. W. C. Smith and Mrs. M. C. Dobbins. After a very lively contest, it was learned that the former had received 127 votes and the latter 210. Mrs. Dobbins was accordingly awarded the quilt. The contest netted almost $20 and nearly $50 was cleared in all from the supper.

The Hospital Thanked.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—Permit me through the columns of your valuable paper to publicly express my deep feeling of appreciation and gratitude towards the staff of the Muhlenberg Hospital. The operation, performed by Dr. Hedges and his assistants, and his subsequent treatment, have been such as would stamp him a capable and efficient surgeon, while the care and attention as administered by the matron and the excellent corps of nurses, have been even more than one could wish.

Arrested for Assault.

Sullivan Yelard and John Wilson, of the borough, were arrested Saturday night for being drunk and assaulting an eighteen-year-old boy named Mears on Grove street. Marshals Lines, Dowd and Hansen arrested them. Today the men were given a hearing by Justice Crosley and fined $7 each. They claimed the boy called them names and insulted them.

WERE GALLED TOGETHER

DOUBLE FUNERAL OF MR. AND MRS. DANIEL TERRY YESTERDAY.

Attended by Over a Thousand Friends—Consoling Words Spoken by Rev. Mr. Braker—Buried at Scotch Plains.

A cloud of sadness settled in the little village of Scotch Plains Sunday, and every resident from the smallest child to the aged persons felt its effects. The occasion was the funeral services of the late Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Terry which were held from the Baptist church at 2 o'clock, and a greater assemblage at such an event has not been seen since the death of John Hand, which occurred at the breaking out of the war.

Fully one thousand persons were present Sunday at the extremely sad obsequies. The church was not large enough to accommodate all who desired an entrance.

It was indeed a most touching sight when with measured tread the departed loved ones were borne to the altar followed by the grief-stricken relatives and friends. Their bodies were placed adjoining each other, while large handsome floral pillows with the names "Papa" and "Mamma" were placed on each casket, besides several wreathes and bunches of choice flowers.

A quartette, consisting of Mrs. Baker, Mrs. McGuire, H. E. Cramer and Thomas Cuming, rendered impressive music appropriate to the solemn occasion.

Rev. Mr. Braker, the pastor of the church, officiated and spoke in part as follows:

Today we stand face to face with a most unusual experience. Never in my life have I been called upon to officiate in an event of this character. We would say that we have thirty-nine and thirty-five years of age, during the past week, twelve hours apart, are claimed by the angel of death. I did not know these two personally. Mr. Terry was highly respected generally and particularly regarded. Mrs. Terry was a help meet as Daniel Terry. Let us rejoice that we would say, believe me, I am your friend." He was a helpful neighbor. He was also a good son and father, and loved his children. As a husband there was the endearing respect and mutual sympathy in the home. His life is an example that many can follow with profit. Of the wife I can say she was a devoted woman. Her influence was such as her husband's power reached her's for good. Many have been the hours when I did and words would be fruitless at this time.

A selection was then rendered by the quartette, after which the large number of persons present were given an opportunity of looking for the last time on the forms of the departed.

Interment was in the cemetery back of the church.

The pall-bearers were: Charles Smith, T. H. Kellar, August Trust, Charles Dodd, James Payne, Edward Wilson, Joseph Byland, John Nickels, Samuel Lee, Benjamin Woodruff, S. Lambert and Phillip Cottrell.

WHISTERS DINE.

Evona Club Car Members Eat and Joke With One Another.

A party of whist players who meet every day on the club car "Evona" for their favorite game held their annual dinner at the Union County Country Clubhouse Friday night. In formal speaking followed the sumptuous repast and several songs were given by Messrs. Kirchoff, Knight and Schoonmaker. The unique menus were very prettily gotten up and contained a number of hits and jokes only understood by those present. The table decorations were also appropriately arranged in an artistic manner. F. C. Kirchoff presided. The others present were: John T. Baker, E. T. Barrows, W. C. Baker, George B. Schoonmaker, H. Bartling, Emil Woltmann, F. E. Knight and W. A. Pinto.

Entertaining and Instructive.

The Assembly hall at "The Chestnuts" was filled Friday afternoon last with a large and cultured audience when Rev. W. Hudson Shaw, M. A., delivered his intensely interesting illustrated lecture on "Venice".

No one had any doubt as to the interest, but such a rare treat was not dreamed of. Mr. Shaw is a scholar of the highest degree and his admirable way of treating his subject, together with his mastery of the English language made the event one of great delight to all. Frequently his charming picture and his perfect diction brought the heartiest applause from his audience.

He gave in a most concise manner, the history, geographically and politically of Venice, and especially interesting was his remarks on "Florence" as a number present have been making a study of the subject.

Should Mr. Shaw return to Plainfield a much larger auditorium would be necessary to hold all who would desire to hear him.

The last lecture of the course will take place Friday afternoon, March 6th, when Mrs. Hall will read a paper entitled "General Marion and the Huguenots of South Carolina."

MR. MARX CONFIRMED.

MAJORITY OF THE COUNCIL THINK THAT HE IS BEST QUALIFIED.

All the Applications for Liquor Licenses Granted—Mr. Frost Talked and Voted Against Them, but It Was to No Avail.

The prospects of the thirteen applications for liquor licenses being granted last Monday, previous to the city Council meeting, was very shaky, as the license members of the Council were not certain as to how one of the members was going to vote, and the fact that Councilmen Disk, Sisk and Moore were away, left the matter temporarily in the balance, but when it came to a vote the requisite number, seven, was found and all passed off harmoniously, each applicant receiving his license.

President See, and Councilmen Barrows, Dumont, Stebbins, Frost, Tolles, Serrell and Westphal answered to the roll call.

Mrs. Anna E. Serrell asked Council to continue the use of the present city court room on West Front street, owned by her, at $12 per month and on resolution of Mr. Dumont, the council voted to lease it for another year.

A communication from the Fanwood borough council asked the City Council to co-operate with them in the adoption of the wide tire ordinance. It was referred to the street committee.

The Minister's Association in a petition remonstrated against the granting of liquor licenses and urged that if any were granted the number be reduced, especially in the heart of town where five are located near each other, also that the one opposite the Mt. Olive Baptist church be not granted. It was signed by Rev. D. J. Yerkes and Rev. G. Kennedy Newell for the Association. The petition was filed, as was also another signed by Ethan Lamphear and others.

E. C. Mulford, Joseph Sanford and J. Fred MacDonald, the Madison avenue commissioners, communicated with Council in regard to their work, stating that it had been done correctly and no money should be held back.

Mr. Dumont said later that their report did not include Engineer Dunham's, and accordingly it was sent back for correction. The matter was laid on, the table till the report was complete.

J. P. Emmons and other property owners on New street and Orchard place asked for a crosswalk at the junction of these two streets. It was referred with power on motion of Mr. Tolles.

Dennis Carney and other residents of Cottage place, between Washington and Richmond streets, asked for an electric light. It was referred to the light and trees committee.

On recommendation of the Board of Engineers, Patrick Marron, of No. 2 Company, was placed on the exempt list Stelle Randolph was dismissed from the same company as was also Aaron Marsh for being a non resident.

Delinquent Tax Collector E. H. Bird's bond was presented and later ordered received and filed with the County Clerk.

Mr. Dumont stated that the license applications to sell liquor had been carefully examined and conformed to the requirements of the law. He said it had been the object of the Council to get the saloons in the city close together, as it would facilitate matters in regard to the limited police force, and that so far as the people were concerned it was not a fact that the majority opposed licenses. He saw no reason why they should not be granted, and then considerable revenue was received from this source.

President See next then called for the applications in their order, J. J. Sullivan's being first.

Before the vote was taken Mr. Frost made a strong speech against granting them, and said he would vote against everyone, not because he was opposed to the men, but because he did not believe in joining hands in the traffic. There were other ways of getting money and the city would not miss a dollar.

The following applications were then presented: J. J. Sullivan, Jacob Blimm, John Goff, Alexander D. Findlay, Charles Smith, John Wellborn, John Beerbower, John Rafferty, W. V. Miller, Henry Haurand, James Day, Frank Linke and Fred Caspar. Those voting to grant them were: Councilmen Barrows, Dumont, Stebbis, Serrell, See, Tolles and Westphal. Councilman Frost voted in the negative on each one.

The following back and cart licenses were granted: Cartmen—T. J. Carey, Page Finney, Cyrus Binn, William Phillips, Arthur Venable and S. Bolden. Peddlers, horse and wagon—C. H. Lippincott and W. Willis. Truckmen—L. B. Coddington, A. B. Hoagland, C. H. Farlee, Elwood Staats, A. B. Dunavan and Thomas Finney. Hackmen—P. Keely & Son, C. Guinee, M. Carey, H. Hansen, T. Burns, C. Barry, W. Callahan, Max Neumann, two, P. Lynch, Morris Higgins, J. Kenneky, T. Newman. Auctioneers—T. J. Carey, W. N. Pangborn.

Mr. Dumont then moved that Ernest Marx be confirmed as Overseer of the Poor. Mr. Westphal objected on the grounds that there were other citizens more entitled to the position. Mr. Dumont stated that Mr. Marx had been connected with such work in England, and was well fitted for the place. Messrs. Barrows and Frost concurred in what Mr. Dumont said, and Mr. Marx was then confirmed, all voting aye except Mr. Westphal.

Chairman Barrows, of the police committee, reported the following appointments: Chief of police, G. W. Grant; sergeant, P. Kiely; roundsmen, C. Fredrickson and W. J. Mattox. The Council confirmed the same.

The Council then adjourned.

If you have not engraved your work I should be pleased to do it for you.

I buy only first-class Marble and Granite and do not sell unless at prices that will enable me to put up the work with credit to myself and justice to the parties purchasing.

I employ no agents and therefore am enabled to make a reduction in the price of my work to the customer, of the commission generally paid to agents.

I am under a very small expense in running my shop, myself and my son doing the larger portion of the work, and we personally attend to the setting of all work, and look upon business in this light, that Good Work and Good Material, at Fair Prices, is a standing advertise for my business, which will tend to build up trade, and I feel safe to warrant that no dealer can sell you the same work and same stock any cheaper than I can.

Hoping to be favored with your patronage, I am yours respectfully,

TWO NEW YORK NEWSPAPERS PAY A CLEAR PROFIT OF OVER A MILLION DOLLARS A YEAR EACH.

For the purpose of increasing the circulation of the New York Daily and Sunday Mercury, established 58 years ago, the Mercury Printing Co. offers the public an opportunity in the world to small investors.

Alert investors now have an opportunity to secure some of the stock of this great enterprise. They can buy New York Mercury stock at the very low price of $10 per share. The Mercury Printing Company is incorporated under the laws of the State of New York. The capital is $500,000, divided into 50,000 shares of full paid and non-assessable Stockholders have no individual liability whatever. This stock is a gilt edged, highly profitable security that is certain to pay large dividends and rapidly increase in value. It gives the small investor an equal chance with the capitalist, as a person with a small sum to invest can buy from one share upwards at the same price a capitalist buys thousands of shares. When one considers the very high prices that stock in other New York newspaper companies commands, it is apparent that this present opportunity to buy New York Mercury stock at $10 is one of those chances that occur only once in a lifetime, for at the present rate of increase shown in the past six months of the circulation and in the advertising, the stock is absolutely sure to pay enormous dividends and rapidly rise in value.

The advertising receipts of the Mercury have doubled since April 1, 1895, and the circulation has increased at the rate of 10,000 per week, since April 1, 1895, so the Daily, Weekly and Sunday editions and is continuing to increase at the present rate. To send one copy of the Daily and Sunday Mercury free to every shareholder and issuing as the stock is sold by us to his assigns. For example, if a subscriber purchases ten shares of stock he will be entitled to ten copies of the Daily and Sunday Mercury free to his name or any other address as long as he continues to be a stockholder of the corporation. These copies of the paper may be disposed of by subscribers to the capital stock in any way desired by them.

There will be only a limited amount of this stock disposed of in this way. Those who are lucky enough to obtain these shares will find that in a very few years they will be worth 300 per cent. premium.

For further particulars address the SUPERINTENDENT OF SUBSCRIPTION, NEW YORK MERCURY, Park Row, New York.

As an advertising medium the New York Mercury is unexcelled.

ANITA.

She's a pretty puss in boots,
With a saucy name that suits
Every glance,
In it whispered, is it sung,
Still it ripples on the tongue
In a dance.

Oh, she walks so pit-a-pat,
And she talks of this and that
Such a way,
Just to watch her witching blush
Even Socrates would hush
Half a day.

She is not an angel: no!
They are out o' place below,
Let us grieve.
Yet perchance there is a wing
Hid beneath the puffy thing
Styled a sleeve.

Her singing makes me think
Of a trickley bobolink
All delight,
With his silver throats allow
Where the apple blossoms blow
Pink and white.

Like a wild rose, newly born,
Bursting into bloom at morn,
Dew asleam,
So entrancing is her smile,
Lo, it haunts me all the while
In a dream.

RACE FOR A BRIDE.

It was in those days when Sharp's island, which divides the mouth of the Choptank and the Chesapeake bay, was the site of three large farms of more than four hundred acres. But the ceaseless roll of the tides of the bay and river on the two sides and the numerous ice gorges of the northern rivers of the bay have caused the island to be worn away to a mere shadow of its former self.

The lighthouse, which is now more than a half-mile away from the northern end of the island, was then on solid ground, one hundred or two hundred yards from the water. But the Choptank has not been changed.

It is still one of the most picturesque rivers in the state. In fact, it puts one more in mind of the interior of a West Indian island than that of a middle Atlantic state. The growth of vegetation is so luxuriant and dense that in some cases it is with great difficulty that passage is made in going through the woods to reach its bank. The water is of a beautiful dark blue and has that freshness and saltness of air about it which is only possessed by the ocean itself.

On this particular day the sky was radiant with flooded sunshine, and a gentle breeze was blowing redolent with summer's fragrances. There was a delightful calmness on the river and bay, which persuaded one to spend his time in idly dreaming. A number of fishermen were indulging in this occupation under the shady trees after several hours of sport. Suddenly from one end of the island came a swiftly-rowed boat, in which were a number of young people, steered by a benevolent and elderly-looking man. Closely following, and seemingly in pursuit of it, came a second boat, steered by a middle-aged man, and propelled by two sturdy young men.

"Well! if there ain't Nellie Barnes and Dick Wilson running away to get married!" exclaimed one of the fishermen.

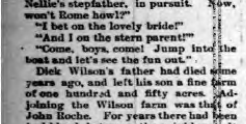
"And there goes old man Roche, Nellie's stepfather, in pursuit. Now, won't Rome howl?"

"I bet on the lovely bride!"

"And on the stern parent!"

"Come, boys, come! Jump into the boat and let's see the fun out."

Dick Wilson's father had died some years ago, and left his son a fine farm of one hundred and fifty acres. Adjoining the Wilson farm was that of John Roche. For years there had been bad blood between the neighbors. It was all on account of a point of land projecting into the Choptank. Both Wilson and Roche claimed it, and when it was taken to law, it was decided in favor of Wilson. About two years ago Roche married a pretty widow named Barnes. She had a daughter whose name was Nellie. It was love on the first sight when Dick and Nellie accidentally met in the church on the mainland. From that time on the affection grew stronger. Roche fondly thought that no one knew it but themselves, but they were mistaken, for



THE GOOD PARSON SAT IN THE STERN.

Mr. Roche had seen it at the very start, and tried by every means to keep them separated.

But love will always find a way.

Dick and Nellie put their heads together one Sunday at church and agreed to run away and get married on the sly. And what was more fortunate for them was the fact that the good parson of the church resided on the island and was in full sympathy with the young couple.

The intended bride was seated beside her betrothed, near the middle of the foremost boat. She was a sprightly, beautiful, black-eyed young woman, whose cheeks rivaled the peaches in their color. There was a world of mischief lurking near her pretty mouth. But to-day her cheeks were pale with apprehension and her smiles were sad.

The expectant groom was a stalwart and resolute young man. His mouth was concealed from view by a very heavy mustache. And as he sat in the bo at he looked straight ahead.

He seemed perfectly cool, and ever and anon, by means of a large bandie which held the all-important veil and wreath, tried to assure and comfort Nellie with numerous squeezes of the hand and endearing words, which he fondly thought were not seen. But such was not the case. For the giggling, sharp-eyed bridesmaids, who were seated in the bow of the boat, discovered them. They revealed their knowledge by numerous outbursts of laughter in the intervals left from charming the young rowers by their conversation.

The good parson was the elderly man, and he it was who would tie the knot. He sat in the stern, steering with studied precision.

And as the second boat approached, Mr. Roche looked from his seat, and cried with a string of oaths:

"What do you mean, Dick Wilson, by stealing my girl?"

"I'm not stealing her," Dick replied. "She comes of her own free will, and with her mother's consent. You've nothing against me in reason, and, besides, she's of age."

This was followed by outbursts of laughter and hurrahs from the boys in the boat. The only thing Mr. Roche did was to glare and swear. After recovering himself, he finally said:

"I have this against you, that you're your father's son, and you'll not have Nell. I'm the head of the house. Come out of that boat, Nell, or I'll shoot."

At these words he leveled a shotgun at Dick. Nellie screamed with terror.

"Oh! Dick, let me go to him or he will kill you!"

"He'd like to, no doubt," said Dick, "but he's afraid of shooting the rest, and, besides, he's too much of a coward. Do you think I'll give you up, darling, with the happiness that will be ours so near!" The last sentence was uttered to her alone, but the party heard the rest, and cheered him as before. But though they laughed, they did not cease rowing. Yet, they did not increase their lead, for the Roche boys pulled as lustily as ever.

"Once more I say stop and give her up or I'll fire in another minute," roared Roche again.

What the issue might have been it is impossible to say, but in their excitement neither party had paid any attention—at least the Roches had not—to the fishermen's boat. For, just as his sons had by extraordinary efforts almost touched the bridal boat, his boat dashed plump against their prow and overturned their craft in a second.

"Now's our chance," cried Dick, and away they sped.

Meanwhile Roche and his sons, who all swam like fish, showered angry imprecations upon the awkward fishermen. The latter apologized profusely, and helped to right the boat. They had no idea but what they could pass between the boats; just did it for a lark, etc. Roche threatened dire vengeance on all of them, but his gun was now tranquilly reposing on the white sands, twenty feet below. There was no time to be lost, since the fugitives were now nearly across, and Roche and his party soon left the fishermen far behind.

The bridal party were then sounding, and their triumph bade fair to be short-lived. However, the parson took the dilemma by the horns.

"Children," said he, "it's an irregular thing to do, though perfectly legal, but I propose to make it right and tight and now. That old fellow will not be ten minutes behind us when we reach the shore, and, besides, those boys have pistols."

"Oh, parson, you surely would not spoil a wedding like that," said the younger bridesmaid.

"My dear, I can bind their hearts and hands just as firmly under this blue sky as in the most holy church ever built."

So Nellie was assisted to arise and was helped in her efforts by the steadying arm of Dick. As she stood in the middle of the boat, under the clear sky, she made a demure-looking bride. The roses came back to her cheeks, and she was herself once more.

As the good parson commenced the ceremony, one of the bridesmaids managed to put the wreath and veil upon Nellie. Although it was somewhat ruffled, it made quite a pretty appearance. The parson afterwards remarked that it was the shortest marriage ceremony in his experience. When they reached the shore a carriage was waiting there before the church in which the ceremony was to have taken place. It took a very few moments to get into the carriage and drive to the steamer, which was about to leave.

Just as the steamer pulled out, Mr Roche and his sons, looking a little the worse for wear from their bath, struggled up from the beach. They were just in time to see Nellie waving her handkerchief from the lower deck.

And the race for the bride had been won.—St. Louis Republic.

WENT HOME TO DIA.

The Old Man's Face Was Wreathed in Smiles When They Found Him.

They told me in the dining car of a train on the Louisville & Nashville road that in the smoking car was an old colored man who was going south to see his old plantation home again before death claimed him. By and by I went in to have a talk with him. He was wrinkled and white haired, and evidently very old, and when I expressed wonder that his friends in Kentucky should have let him set out on such a long journey he replied:

"Dey just couldn't help deirselves, sah. I tole de white folks I was bound to cum, an' dey jes had to let me."

"And how long since you left the old plantation?"

"Way back in wall times, sah. I dun went right off will some Yankee sogers, an' dat's de last I ebber did see of Mars. Thomases folks. Ize gwine down to 'sprise 'em."

"Where is it?"

"Jest a leetle ways out o' Selma. Dey tell me da' am great changes 'bout Selma, but I reckon I kin walk right down de road an' find de plantashun in de night. Bress de Lawd, sah, but I doan' reckon I could her closed my eyes in death if dey hadn't let me cum. Da's bin sich a longin' to see de ole place agin dat I couldn't stand it."

Three or four of us chipped in to get his meals and make him comfortable, but we saw that the journey was telling on his strength. On the morning of the day we were to reach Selma it could see that he was weak and nervous, and when I sat down beside him he said:

"Ize feelin' sort o' skeart 'bout myself dis mawnin'. I had a dream last night dat I was walkin' down de road an' met a funeral, an' when I axed who was gwine to be buried a white man spoke up and said:

"'Pon my soul, it dat hain't Mars Thomases old nigger Job, who runned off dooin' de war. Walk back, boy, let me tole you somethin'. Yo' has cum too late to see yo'r ole mars; dat's him in de coffin, an' he was a axin' 'bout yo' jes de day befo' he died.'"

I told him that dreams did not signify, and after a bit had him quite chirped up. I got him some tobacco for his pipe, saw that he had breakfast, and as I left him he smiled all over with happiness, as he said:

"Only two hours mo' to Selma! Ize mos dun got dar, sah."

Thirty minutes later the conductor beckoned to three or four of us to come into the smoker. The old man sat in his chair, leaning against the side of the car, and seemed to be sleeping.

"He's been dead ten minutes," quietly observed the conductor, "and he died as peacefully as a child falling asleep!"

So he had. There was a smile on his old black face—a smile of anticipation, and the pipe had not fallen from his fingers. Death had come like a soft and fleeck mantle, and its touch had been painless.—Detroit Free Press.

PRETTY JAPANESE INTERIOR.

How the Effect Can Be Obtained at Little Cost.

A Japanese interior will always be in favor with persons of moderate means, because so good an effect may be obtained at so slight a cost. Line the wall from baseboard to ceiling with cartridge paper of dull old red, simulating a frieze by setting the bamboo picture rail 18 inches below the ceiling. Form a dado and panels with bamboo, and stencil both the panels and frieze with Japanese designs in bronze and copper. Put a greenish white cream matting on the floor, and spread it with jute rugs in imitation of Daghestan and Kazac, and some of these imitations are really wonderful.

There must not be a single picture on the walls. The divan must be low—a spring mattress laid directly on the floor. Cover this with a Japanese print, and have pillows covered with Chiami cloth, embroidered with Japanese prints.

Over the head of the divan suspend a big Japanese umbrella, and also over the head, but more to the right, hang a Japanese lamp, or, better still, two small ones, with shades of cotta, with dragon decorations. Dark reddish brown denim will answer admirably for hangings in this room.

Have very few chairs, and let these be of bamboo, but let the big pillows, covered with Japanese chintzes, take their place. If this is a parlor, let the tea table be of bamboo and covered with a bit of Japanese drapery; use a Japanese tea service, and a gong of Japanese bronze. If it is a library let the desk be of bamboo, as well as such book-cases as are not built into the walls.

For a square hall a few touches in the way of a Moorish iron hanging lantern, a bit of oriental drapery—if only of chintz, hung over a space—a rug thrown over the balustrade above, a jute rug on the floor, or a seat built under the stairs and covered with Japanese chintz or a Bagdad rug, will give the effect of a newly-furnished hall.—N. ART OF TELLING FACES.

NOVEL FORM OF ENTERTAINMENT IN TWO CHURCHES LAST NIGHT.

Photographs of Plainfielders Taken When They Were Young, Show Changes That Time Has Worked in Features.

With an art gallery on the first floor of the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church and another art gallery of "living pictures" on the second floor, the members of the Mission Band, of the Presbyterian churches entertained their friends Thursday. The entertainment was a very successful one throughout and was largely attended. It began at four o'clock in the afternoon and continued until late in the evening. At eight o'clock a programme was given in the main Sunday-school room. A large frame occupied the front of the platform and in it were shown various pretty tableaux.

The programme was as follows: Piano solo, Miss Helen A. Hasbrouck; picture, "Soap Bubbles," Miss Ethel Holmes; song and picture, "I Don't Want to Play in Your Yard," two little girls; picture, "The Daughters of the Rages," Miss Florence Abbott; picture, 'Once Upon a Time," George O. Stevens, Donald Bechtel, Miss Lydia Cave, Miss Wilcox and Miss Helen Moody; vocal solo, William N. Runyon; picture, "Old Ladies Over Their Work," the Misses Etta Blish, Madge Sutphen and Sarah Schuyler; picture "Peg Woffington," Miss Sallye Swayze; picture, "Lullaby," Miss Helen Moody, with song by Miss Julia J. Ketcham and violin obligato by J. Z. Petrie; picture, "A Song Without Words," Miss Agnes Blair; picture, "Corn Sheller," a little colored girl; picture, "Cherubs," William N. Runyon and Edward Petrie. They were all very good and called forth loud applause, especially the last.

The church parlors on the first floor were the centre of attraction when the entertainment upstairs was not in progress, and very pretty it looked with its drapings of orange bunting on the while walls. As the visitor made his entrance through the main door, he was greeted by the sight of a table to his right groaning under a bountiful display of delicious candies, many of them home-made.

A short distance beyond it was a square booth artistically trimmed with straw and yellow bunting. Here lemonade was sold to a crowd of thirsty visitors.

The committee, that looked after the affair in general and the programme in particular, consisted of the Misses Mary Brunson, chairman, Hattie Gardner, Etta Blish, Josephine Petrie and May Sebring. The committee in charge of the candy table consisted of the Misses Emily Tracy, chairman, Hallie VanDeventer and Bessie Brower. The refreshments, which were served in one of the side rooms at daintly arranged tables, were under the charge of a committee composed of Mrs. William Murray, chairman, and the Misses Bessie Blair, Margaret Yerkes, Estelle Smalley, Hattie Goddard, Sarah Richards and Cornelia Miller. The pretty lemonade booth was looked after by the Misses May Sebring, Lulu Patton and Mattie Covert. The decorating committee consisted of the Misses Mabel VanDeventer, Agnes Blair and Ethel Holmes.

The loan exhibition of youthful pictures of prominent Plainfield people was the most important sight, however, and it showed that a great amount of work had been done. The committee in charge, which consisted of the Misses Josephine Petrie, chairman, Mary Martine, Mary Miller and Harriet Halloway. The pictures, which consisted of photographs, daguerreotypes and ambrotypes, were exhibited on a long table, and on large cards, fastened to the wall. They were all numbered, and catalogues, giving the names of the originals, were rented by the committee. The first face to catch the eye at the end of the table was that of the borough's mayor, B. A. Hegeman, Jr. The photograph was younger looking than he is at present, but it was a very good likeness. Most of the other pictures on the table were daguerreotypes. A youthful looking soldier boy was catalogued as W. D. W. Miller. The "Farmer Orator" and his sister, Miss Kate Martine, were represented there as two little children, standing hand in hand, the lad wearing a grave expression as he wondered whether the photographer was a Democrat.

A prim little girl with clasped hands had the familiar features of Mrs. Isaac Tyler. There were two of Rev. Dr. Yerkes, both showing him a young man dressed in the old-fashioned style. Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Andrews were side by side, a very young looking couple and scarcely recognizable. A quiet little boy with turn down collar and scarf tied in a bow was a youthful view of C. W. McCutchen. Mayor Alex. Gilbert was there, looking much younger, with hair worn in the old style. A little curly headed child in a pink dress, with his mouth open, was E. E. Anthony, while a lively looking young man was marked Mason Tyler. Among the other pictures were George Goddard, a little boy in a low necked suit with a very youthful and frightened look about him; Harry Munger, a small lad dressed in white with a wheelbarrow and hoe beside him; Charles Dewey and Miss Dewey, two little children in short dresses and with open mouths; Councilman Harold Serrell, a youngster in a plaid dress; Rev. A. H. Lewis, D. D., an excellent likeness, only much younger; John Bushnell, a little boy wearing a soldier's cap and coat; Mr. Groendyke, a very intellectual looking young man with large neck scarf; Mrs. W. R. Richards, a quaint little girl with head tipped to one side and hands clasped; Miss Yates, a chubby baby, with a woe begone expression on her face.

On the cards hung around the room there were distinguished charae unumerable. An angry looking little lad wearing an old straw hat and long coat was Fred Yates. H. B. Newhall's picture was of a young man greatly resembling his son. There were two of S. F. Kimball, two of Mason Tyler, one of which showed him in uniform. The ministers were most of them there, Rev. Cornelius Schenck, Rev. C. R. Barnes, D. D., Rev. G. Kennedy Newell, and Rev. C. E. Herring. The last was the best though, for he was shown as a small boy in a suit resembling a zouave uniform.

An excellent likeness of E. E. Runyon was drawn on paper and bore the initials of the artist W. D. W. D. Murray, as a small child, was almost extinguished in a large cape overcoat. A small baby, with a head like Will Runyon, was Will himself, when only several years old. Another face with that well known smile was to be found on another card. George O. Stevens began practicing for the minstrels early in life as was seen by his picture, a small boy in a high silk hat, a coat several miles too large for him and a cane almost as tall as he.

Miss J. J. Ketcham's picture was that of a pretty girl and fluffy hair. Clad in a somewhat abbreviated costume, Max Munger's youthful form was seen. A dashing young medical student was Dr. E. W. Endicott, while the watchful eye of that handsome young man, now Councilman E. T. Barrows, watched his companions as befitted a member of the police board. There were many more but it would take a large volume to describe them all. There were, altogether, nearly 140.

The room in which the pictures were arranged was very pretty. A tastefully arranged tea table at one end of the room was presided over by Mrs. Walter Peterson and Miss F. P. Clark, while Miss M. G. Morse and Miss A. B. Parsons passed the light refreshments.

In one of the other rooms there was another art gallery under the direction of Miss Ellis, assisted by Miss Annie Ellis, Miss Nella Whiton and Miss May Kirkner. Here the visitors had their profile outlined and received a large silhouette on white paper. Some of the likenesses were very good.

Willing hands, guided by artistic taste, transformed the parlors of the Congregational church last night into an artist's studio for the Ladies Aid Society's sociable, the principal attraction of which was the collection of early photographs of members of the congregation. All of the pictures, of which there were 218, were numbered, and the visitors were supposed to see who could guess correctly the greatest number. Dainty blank catalogues were sold, in which to record the guesses.

The sociable was under the direction of a committee, composed of Mrs. C. L. Goodrich, Miss Mary A. Ellis, Miss Nella Whiton, Miss Jessie Stewart, Miss May Kirkner, Miss Annie Ellis and Rev. C. L. Goodrich.

The arrangement of the room was done under the direction of Miss Ellis. An informal programme was rendered during the evening and consisted of violin solos by Miss Nella Whiton, and P. Ludwig Conde and vocal solos by Miss M. E. Meredith.

The loan exhibition, of course, attracted the attention of all and caused lots of fun. It scarcely seemed possible that a little child in a low necked dress could be W. B. Wadsworth. Captain William Hand was easily recognizable in his uniform, but a smooth faced young man did not resemble C. E. Boss, principal of the North Plainfield public school, in the slightest. A young dandy in long coat was catalogued G. W. Rockfellow.

There were several pictures of Rev. C. L. Goodrich, ranging from a mischievious looking boy to an earnest student. Prof. Conde was to be seen but not to be recognized as a German lad with short hair parted in the middle. A picture of a lad dressed in the old fashioned manner was six-year-old Chas. Steiner. One of the most striking of all the pictures was a large crayon of a little boy dressed in Colonial style. It was John W. Kirkner. One of the daguerrotypes that attracted considerable attention was of J. S. Powlison at twenty-eight years and a dulcimer, made by himself. Among the others whose likenesses were on exhibition were J. A. Robinson, Chas. Powlison, J. M. Whiton, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Morse, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Laboyteau, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Brower, Mrs. E. K. Miller, John V. Beekman, Jr., Lyman R. Allen, Mr. and Mrs. Morgan and Mrs. W. L. Patton.

Miss Lulu Fuller was the most successful in guessing, getting eighty-three correct. Mrs. B. T. Barnes had eighty-one correct, while Miss Hattie Messersmith had seventy-four, and Miss Nellie Bockfellow seventy.

THE CATHODE RAY.

There's another new invention
Which these scientific crimps
Discovered, just to help along
Old Satan and his imps:
It is worse than all the others
They have brought out in our day.
And the name of this new demon
Is
cathode
ray.

With this new-fangled lightning
They can look a man right through,
And see what he is thinking.
Tell you what he wants to do.
Count the money in his pocket,
Then with laughter they will bray
When they only find a nickel
With their

Just suppose you have a dollar
And you start out for a feed;
But you meet that bill collector
Who is wont with you to plead;
You have stood him off so often
That you think 'twill be but play.
But the fellow finds that dollar
With

THREE HOME WEDDINGS.

TWO WERE IN THIS CITY AND ONE IN ROSELLE.

But the Grooms Were All From Plainfield—All Were Quiet Events—The Names of The Bridal Parties and Guests.

From The Press of February 21.

A very pretty home wedding took place last evening when Miss Maggie Page, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Page, of Elmwood place, and George E. Firstbrook, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Firstbrook, of Essex street, were united in marriage by Rev. G. Kennedy Newell, pastor of Hope chapel.

The bride wore a traveling gown of blue serge cloth, trimmed with velvet and hat to match. Alex. Muir acted as best man. There was no bridesmaid. After the ceremony refreshments were served and Mr. and Mrs. Firstbrook left later for a trip through Connecticut and Massachusetts. They will return in about two weeks and reside at the home of the bride's parents.

Many useful and handsome presents were received, including a dinner and tea set, silver ware, lamp, berry set, porcelaine clock and cut glassware. A beautiful gift was a pair of vases with the pictures of the bride and groom adorning the front.

Those present included the families of the bride and groom, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Page, Harry Page, Mr. and Mrs. George Firstbrook and family, Miss Lizzie Firstbrook, and Rev. Mr. and Mrs. G. Kennedy Newell.

The groom has an excellent position as traveling salesman for William H. Spowers & Co., of New York, dealers in iron and steel.

Mr. and Mrs. Firstbrook have the best wishes of a large number of friends and acquaintances for a happy and prosperous journey through life.

The marriage of Miss Sarah C. Johnson, daughter of Peter C. Johnson, and Bertram E. Mundy, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Mundy, of Ninth street and Arlington avenue, took place last evening at 8 o'clock at the home of the bride, on Plainfield avenue. Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes performed the ceremony in the presence of only the immediate families. Miss Mary E. Johnson, sister of the bride, who celebrated the anniversary of her birthday yesterday, was bridemaid, and George H. Rockfellow was best man. The bride wore a traveling gown and a hat to match. Supper was served after the ceremony and the bride and groom left on the 10:17 train for a short bridal tour. On their return they will reside with Mr. Mundy's parents for awhile previous to going to housekeeping. They received a large number of choice presents from their many friends.

Miss May Cummings, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Cummings, of Roselle, was united in marriage to Charles Taynor, of Chatham street, yesterday afternoon at four o'clock at the home of the bride's parents.

Rev. Mr. McCres, pastor of the Roselle M. E. church, performed the ceremony.

Miss Alice Wenz, of Elizabeth, and Miss Helen Banister, of Cranford, were the bridemaids, while Fred and William Cummings, brothers of the groom, acted as best men.

The bride wore a gown of white cashmere trimmed with lace and ribbon. The bridemaids were gowned in the same material. An excellent supper was served after the ceremony.

And Yet No One is Ever Pleased to be a Sojourner There.

At an enormous outlay The Daily Press is today able to present to its readers a brief sketch of life as it is lived in the Union and Somerset County jails. The article is true because it is written by a man who has been "on the spot" several times at the invitations of Judges Crosley, Coddington or De Meza, and he knows whereof he talks. The writer's observations are as follows:

The Union county jail, under the management of its present warden, John G. Blore, and his estimable assistant, Matron Hook, is a picture of neatness and cleanliness. The prisoners are well fed and strict discipline is observed. The average number of prisoners in the Union county jail at present is sixty.

The Somerset county jail at Somerville, under the management of the new Sheriff, William H. H. Wyckoff, is in better sanitary condition at present than it has been in a number of years past. Sheriff Wyckoff has had new mattresses and blankets placed in each cell, and the inside is at present getting a new coat of whitewash. The cell doors and iron work has had a new coat of black paint, and the ceiling, window frames and sash are to have a coat of light paint.

The prisoners in the Somerset County jail get plenty to eat, although they only get two meals a day. Breakfast at eight o'clock and dinner at twelve, noon. The following is the bill of fare for the week:

Breakfast, bread and coffee every morning in the week. Monday—Dinner, beef stew, composed of beef, potatoes and turnips, with one loaf bread; Tuesday—Dinner, soup, composed of meat and vegetables, with loaf bread; Wednesday—Dinner, bread, beans, soups and pork; Thursday—Dinner, cabbage, potatoes and onions, in stew form, with bread; Friday—Dinner, bread and bean soup; Saturday—Dinner, bread, mashed potatoes and boiled meat; Sunday—Dinner, bread and pork and beans in soup form. Any prisoner who happens to get ill can get all the medicine he wants on application to the sheriff.

There are twenty-eight prisoners confined there at the present time. Sheriff Wyckoff had measurements taken last Monday for erecting the gallows which is to hang Johnson, the negro murderer, on March 11th, 1896. The measurements are as follows: Heighth of ceiling from floor, 14½ feet; length of corridor, 44½ feet; width, 10½ feet.

Union County jail furnishes three meals a day to their prisoners. Their breakfast and supper is always the same. Breakfast, coffee and bread and supper, meat and bread.

The bill of fare for dinner is as follows: Sunday—bread, cold meat, rice and molasses, with cold water; Monday—bread, vegetable soup, meat, oat meal; Tuesday—bread and clam chowder; Wednesday—bean soup, bread and pork and oat meal; Thursday—vegetable soup, bread, meat and oat meal; Friday—fresh fish, boiled, bread, rice and molasses; Saturday, beef and vegetable soup, bread, meat and oat meal.

The prisoners are all locked in their cells during the day at Elizabeth, with the exception of about four hours, when they are allowed out in the corridors for excercise and to eat their meals. The prisoners do all the work about the institution, such as cooking the meals and scrubbing. The prisoners at Somerville are only locked up at night. During the day they enjoy themselves at playing games, singing and dancing.

Across The State by Trolley.

New Jersey has little to fear from the plan to cris-cross the State with a trolley line from Philadelphia to Jersey City—nothing to fear unless it be the increased steam railroad accommodations which such a local competition would of necessity bring. The proposed line of the New York and Philadelphia Traction Company would pass through Trenton, Princeton, New Brunswick, Plainfield, Elizabeth and Newark and would tap the shore and the neighborhood about Paterson with branch lines from Monmouth Junction. The Trenton Company has gained the rights through Princeton and the New Brunswick Company proposes to extend its lines to Perth Amboy and to Bound Brook. At Dunellen the Plainfield Company will meet it and go along the Union County road to Elizabeth. Elizabeth, Newark and Jersey City are already connected. When these plans are completed, the entire State will be girdled by a working system.—New York Press.

A Wagon Axle Broke.

As one of Banaumen's lumber wagons was passing the Climax Stopper Works on East Fourth street, Tuesday afternoon, the axle broke. Herbert Alberts, a small boy of East Fourth street, who was riding on the wagon when the accident happened, had a very narrow escape from being thrown under it. Had this occurred, he might have been seriously injured, as the wagon was heavily loaded with lumber.

TRAGEDY AND SAWDUST.

EVANS' circus was at one time the most popular of any. And the most popular member of it was Rosie Marton. Even now the people hold her up as a standard by which to judge merit. Bill Berrill was the clown, and a good clown he was. Everyone said that up in London or any of the big towns Bill—"Little Bandy," as he was christened on the bills—could have made three times the money. But Bill preferred to remain with Levanta—and near Rosie.

Leo Corello was the lion tamer. The man who had held the post ever since Levanta first took the road was dead. Leo came over from the continent after the vacancy. He gave a rehearsal and was offered the post on the spot. But the salary was too low. Leo prepared to return. Then he saw Rosie—and stayed. With all his troupe Rosie was a favorite. When her mother had died, leaving her a mere helpless infant, the company had held a solemn meeting to decide as to her fate. The manager was for putting her out.

"We're none of us rich enough to adopt her entirely," said he. "We'll limit the liability, and collectively act as her parents. Rosie shall be the daughter of the troupe."

It was his own idea that had secured Rosie to the troupe, old Ted Passmore, the manager, had been informally constituted her guardian. And one rule that he made was: "No getting engaged or anything of that sort till she's 20 and knows her own mind."

It was on the very day that she attained her score of years that Bill Berrill made his formal application for her hand. Thankful he was that the time had arrived. Leo Corello had grown to be a veritable nightmare to him. Not that he doubted Rosie—the truest little girl man could love. But the lion-tamer's growing admiration was so very ardent that Bill felt all the easier when she was promised to him. For, of course, the application was granted.

That evening Leo Corello was in grand form. They were performing in one of the most important towns on their list, and the circus was packed. Leo outdid himself. Unarmed, without even whip or stick, he played with his lions as if they had been kittens, and sent cold shivers through his audience with his intrepidity.

"Isn't he splendid!" It was Rosie herself who said so.

The clown, standing beside her, frowned.

Bill has given him a better part than mere fooling to make people laugh," said he, with a touch of bitterness in his tones. "Do you admire him so very much?"

Rosie turned. Her cheeks reddened with her indignation. She held out the hand on which glistened the ring he had just given her.

"You haven't much faith in me, she said, her pretty face looking pained. We shan't be very happy together after all if you're so jealous because I give a brave man his due."

"Forgive me, Rosie!" exclaimed the clown fervently, as he kissed her hand, and, hearing the bell, bounded into the ring.

Then came Leo's chance. "Little Bandy's" turn was a long one. As the thunders of applause subsided the lion-tamer moved to where the clown had stood beside her. His flashing eyes glowed with excitement as he asked:

"Mlle. Rosie, how was that?"

"Splendid!" said Rosie, again.

"Do you know why?" asked he, as, delighted to hear her words, he came close to her. "I was thinking of you, and love made me laugh at lions."

"Sig. Corello, you must not talk to me like that."

And, playfully, she held out her hand once more to show her ring, and pointed archly to the man in the sawdust circle.

Leo's face darkened.

"Have you given yourself to that?" he sneered, looking contemptuously in the direction of the grotesque figure posturing in the ring, and added: "I love you. I will leave here to make more money. Soon I can have a circus of my own. You shall be its mistress, with no need to work, a carriage to ride in, and everything else you can want. Throw over this clown. Think of all that I am offering to you. Mlle. Rosie—be my wife!"

Rosie Marton, her eyes shining, stepped back from him, shaking her head.

"Thank you very much, Sig. Corello, for your magnificent offer. I decline it."

"You want your tackle left up after the performance is over, so that you may practice in the morning? Only mind what you're doing, Bill Berrill. This lofty tumbling that you've taken to is a bit more dangerous than clowning, and now it's fixed we don't want your wedding day postponed."

So said Teddy Passmore. The clown promised to be cautious, and in the morning repaired to the circus to have a turn at the trapeze.

Rosie was waiting for him. Profitable as it was, she had a dread of this new item that her lover had added to his repertoire, and so went with him, "so that he might be safe," as she said.

"Sig. Corello passed me coming along," remarked she, as the clown let himself into the great wooden building with his key. But when they got inside and no one appeared both felt easier. Merely discarding his coat, up he went on the ropes and in midair went through his perilous tricks. Rosie sat on a sack of sawdust below, trying to read a newspaper and wishing that the rehearsal was finished.

Suddenly from above came a shout. She started to her feet.

"Run, Rosie, run! To the window! The lions are loose!"

Run! She was rooted to the spot. In the doorway by which they had entered crouched a great, tawny, yellow mass, that, flat upon the boards, came wriggling without a sound toward them.

Down the rope Bill Berrill slipped, as Rosie, recovering her strength, started to the back of the hall. The lion rose up. It took five quick strides, then stopped as, with a thud, Bill Berrill dropped on to his feet.

"It is locked, and I cannot reach it," cried the terrified girl, as she stretched in vain for the fastening of the great window.

The clown turned. As he took his eyes from its face the lion came on. If he fled it would be upon him in a moment.

Then, close at hand, he saw the sponge set on a stick, the matches and pastrufine, used by the gunman with which to light up at night time.

"I dare not move!" he cried. "Bring me the tin of oil and the matches."

The escaped lion saw the movement. It crouched—for a spring, its great tail sweeping the floor from time to time.

Tottering in her fear, Rosie dragged to him the precious tin. The clown, never taking his eyes from the great yellow orbs that glared at him, pulled out the cork. The liquid oil ran freely. Bill Berrill struck a match and threw it down. A stream of flame shot across the boards. A low growl issued from the throat of the startled lion as it backed before the wall of fire.

"Now! The window!"

In a second he had hoisted Rosie up. The catch was undone. She scrambled out. Bill Berrill followed and closed the casement after him, just as the lion, dodging round the fire, leaping to the place where a second before they had been standing.

"Be careful, Will. Somehow I do dread to-night's performance. There is something the matter with Corello. The house is crowded, but he is not himself to-night. Do be careful, Will, dear."

Bill Berrill promised as he squeezed

BILL BERRILL SWUNG FAR OUT INTO SPACE.

the little, cold hand of the girl who, tomorrow, would be his wife. After the lion-tamer's performance there was one more turn, and then he went on.

"That's funny," observed Ted Passmore as the clown passed him. "Close by where your trapeze ropes are fixed two panes of glass are gone from the roof."

Directly his portion of the programme had come to an end Leo Corello hurried from the building. Round to the back he went, where, in a narrow street full of gaunt, tall houses, he rented a top-story bedroom.

From the mattress under the bed he drew forth a long, dagger-like knife contained in a leather sheath. Testing its keenness, he cut easily through a stick of wood he drew from the ready-laid fire.

Armed with the knife, he threw up the window and passed out on the leads. Then, with a spring to a bowl, was the glass roof of the hippodrome.

Through the open window the first notes of a merry tune came from the band.

A cheer of welcome greeted "Little Bandy" as, for the second time, he bounded into the ring. In a trice he was hoisted to the trapeze far above.

One or two graceful evolutions, and then, hanging by his hands from the bar, he appeared to swing to and fro for a long flight in midair.

Suddenly there was a cry from above, a shriek from a woman and a chorus of alarm from the crowd. One rope had snapped. Bill grasping the wooden bar, Bill Berrill swung far out into space, where, if he fell, no friendly net would catch him.

"Hold for your life," shouted Ted Passmore, as, with a dozen others, he ran to the ring to form a net into the end of the fallen rope as it swished furiously here and there.

Then, as all eyes were turned upon the figure of the man swinging and revolving with dangerous violence in the air, another cry went up.

Through the second small opening in the roof a human arm was protruded—an arm whose hand grasped a gleaming blade.

The rope stretched at tension, lengthened. The knife had cut one strand.

Crash! Down came a pane of glass. An iron support gave way, and then, with a clatter and a smash, a hole opened in the roof and the body of a man fell headlong down—down on the sawdust of the ring. The body rolled over, revealing the dead face of Leo Corello.

A minute later, as hand in hand Bill Berrill and Rosie stood together in the ring, a thunder of applause went up, and their fingers pressed unseen as they bowed their acknowledgments, and in their hearts returned thanks to Providence for the strange passing of the fellow from their lives. — Illustrated Bits.

BLANDINA.

Blandina's nice; Blandina's fat,
Joyous, and sane and sound and sweet,
And handsome, too, and all else that
In persons of her years is meet.

Behold Blandina!
She's alive, and testifies
With all the emphasis that lies
In busy hands and dancing eyes
That life's a prize.

That all the mischief that provokes
Doubt in the matter lies in folks,
And that, provided folks are fit,
Life's not a failure; not a bit.

Blandina loves a picture-book,
Blandina dearly loves a boy;
She loves her dinner, loves the cook,
Her nurse, her doll, her brother's toy;
And best of all she loves a joke,
And laughing at it testifies
With all the emphasis that lies
In joyous tones and beaming eyes,
That life's a prize.

That all the mischief that provokes
Doubt in the matter lies in folks,
And that, provided folks are fit,
Life's not a failure; not a bit.

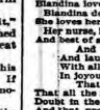
AN ODD PAIR.



"FRIENDS is harder to git than money er fame," said the Village Philosopher, as he finished settling a quarrel between two of the boys and made them shake hands.

"Yes, sir; a troo, genooine friend is a mighty skeerce article, and that's a fact. Sometimes a friend will help a man through a tight place when all the money in the world wudn't be no use."

"That's so; that's so," said Uncle Jerry, as he rocked slowly back and forth on the vine-covered porch. "If you want to know what reel friendship is, you want to watch the dumb creeturs. It seems ez though the very fact that they can't speak out their feelin's makes 'em show 'em in their actions plainer than folks ever can."

We all quieted down and curled our bare legs under us, for the old man spoke in that measured, reminiscent tone we had learned to recognize as the precursor of a story. It should be known that Uncle Jerry and the Village Philosopher were the chief beguilers of the waking hours of all the boys in our quiet, western New York village. The latter's stories were more interesting than those of the most absorbing book, and the latter's moralizing was of the eminently practical kind which appeals even to the boyish intellect.

When the eager listeners were all in the circle about the two old men and had relaxed into complete silence, Uncle Jerry resumed.

"Love and friendship are sut'nly curi'us things. I reckon though that more unlike two folks, or two creeturs, is, the more they think of each other. You all know how affectionit a horse or a dog can be, even to the ugliest master or the meanest masters. Well, it's jest the same way with the wild animals. I've seen a old bear lose her life tryin' to save her cubs. I've seen deer and even wildcats thet thought ez much of each other ez any humans ever did. They're human, of course, but sometimes you'll find two creeturs thet you'd think ought to be born enemies ez affectionit an' devoted ez the sickest pair uv lovers you ever see. The strangest case uv thet kind, an' the one I shall never fergit, was the case uv a big Newfoundland dog an' an old gray wolf thet stuck to each other through all kinds uv hard luck till death separated 'em; a good deel better'n a dozen folks I know ever married an' pledged before the altar.

"Now some folks say that dogs an' wolves is related, but everybody knows thet they ain't gener'ly much love lost atween 'em. Howsumever, this was a true love affair. Mebbe you've heerd tell uv it, cuz I know at the time it was the talk uv the hull country round. Ez the newspapers in them times had big ilke they are now they wudn't a given them two eny rest till they wuz photographed an' put in print, for they surely looked like the most ill-mated couple you ever see.

"The old man hitched to a more comfortable position, and we knew that he was coming to the story at last.

"It was jest a few years after the war uv '12 when the Britishers burned most uv Washington and set fire to Buffalo, but wuz licked out uv their boots by young Commodore Perry and his American sailor boys. Lots uv folks wuz comin' to western New York, an' the wolves an' bears wuz gettin' cleared out some, but they wuz enough left to make trouble fer the farmers' pippens an' sheep folds. The county officers wanted to git rid uv all the varmints, cuz they thought et ud bring more settlers ef they did, so they offered $25 fer every wolf's pelt brought to the courthouse.

"Twenty-five dollars wuz a lot more money then than it is now, an' all the young fellers got out their rifles an' polished 'em up. Many a chilly winter's night I've laid under a haystack an' watched a sheep jen waitin' fer the wolves to show up. In the first winter I shot three wolves, so that when spring come I had $75 to jingle in my pocket. I reely hadn't much to complain uv, but I wuzn't satisfied. They wuz one old gray wolf I had tried my best to git, but et seemed ez though a bullet cud go right through her without any effeck more'n et wud have on Old Nick himself. She wuz big an' gaunt an gray an' always hungry. Everybody knew her, an' her bed seem her, an' she had robbed half the barnyards in the country, but never got caught. She wuz shaper'n chain lightnin', an' her mate wuz jest ez cunning. He wuz the big Newfoundland dog I spoke uv. He had belonged to Jabez Ball, an' had eloped with the old wolf. The dog never did any killin'. His part uv the work wuz to go along, an' look over the ground to see ef et wuz safe fer the old gurl to step in an' nab a lamb.

"The dog led a wild life, but he was tame enuff, and wud come up to a door-step when he seen alone, an' beg fur suthin' to eat. He cud a bin shot easy enuff, but Jabez thought he'd be a better plan. 'ud be to tie a bell on his neck so's he cud be heard. He thought in that way we cud keep track on the old wolf, an' get a shot at her. But what do you s'pose thet old wolf did? She wuz too smart to get caught in thet way. After the dog wuz belled she went around with him same as ever, except that they never passed a house together.

"On lots uv winter nights when the snow wuz crustin' with the cold, the bell wud be heard comin' along the road. The men wud jump up and run to the door, rifle in hand, but the dog wud go trottin' by alone. Next morning', ef they looked in their back lot, they wud see where the wolf made a wide circle round the house, comin' back in the road on the other side.

"Every kind uv scheme wuz tried to ketch that pair uv robbers, but it didn't work. They went right on stealin' an' killin', stealin' an' killin', ez ef they wuz never goin' to stop. After the bell wuz put on the dog he got scary 'em, an' they never come round the house when any men folks wuz there. It seemed ez though he cud tell, for he never made a mistake. Ef the men folks wuz all away the old dog wud come around ez nice ez you please, an' beg fer suthin' to eat. He acted so perlite the wimmen didn't have heart to shoo him, even if they had nerve enuff to hold a gun. But the dog fin'ly cum to his end becuz he miscalculated in dealin' with one woman.

"One Sunday he come to Sam Cranston's house when all the fam'ly, 'ceptin' Sam, were to church, an' Clarice Celindy wuz away at church. Celindy knowed the dog all right, an' though she wuz afraid uv him some, she made up her mind to trap him ef she cud.

"Right in front uv the house stood the big well sweep. It wuz pulled down an' held with a ketch, an' the rope from the long end wuz hangin' down to the ground. Celindy kep' the dog around by throwin' him a bone to pick. Then she made a slippin' noose in the end uv the rope an' laid the coil on the ground. Then she set a plate uv the nicest kind uv vittuls inside thet coil. She sed afterwards thet she wuz so excited an' nervous she cudn't possibly stand, but she dog didn't suspect nuthin' wrong. When he put his head down to eat, Celindy unfastened the ketch an' ez quick ez a wink threw wuz Mr. Dog a-hangin' in the air. Ez soon ez she wuz hangin' there when the folks come home from church, an' I tell you they wuz some surprised.

"After the dog wuz gone the folks made up their minds to git rid uv his wife, an they sent a rider round to give notice uv a huntin' bee. More'n a hundred men an' boys turned out, an' they hed a regular beatin' in fer thet old wolf. They wuz ez many dogs ez men, a-barkin' an' runnin' in the snow, a-howlin' track the old boy, but, when he wuz out uv the way they took the wolf's trail all right. Well, the old wolf wuz hemmed in on all sides, an' fin'ly she wuz driven to the edge uv a big swamp. She wuz full uv fight to the last, an' after she hed laid out a couple uv the dogs the others backed away. But thet settled her fate, cuz ez soon ez she was clear the dogs an' a dozen bullets wuz in her hide an' she dropped in her tracks, leavin' behind her the record uv hevin' killed the most sheep uv any wolf ever seen in western New York.

"Ez for the mate uv the unmerciful pair little whelps you ever see, too. Some uv the men wanted to keep 'em, but both'neither wolf ner dog, they wuz uglier than either, an' hed to be killed ez soon ez they began to grow up.

"They wuz some discussion ez to who should git the $25 bounty fer the old wolf, cuz et wuz hard to say who hed killed her, but it wuz fin'ly settled thet et should go to Celindy Cranston fer gittin' the old dog out uv the way. Everybody wuz pleased with thet, speshully me, cuz Celindy wuz my girl, an' thet $25 went part uv the way to settin' us up at housekeepin'."—N. Y. Sun.

Face Bath.—One pint of rain water. Half an ounce of tincture of benzoin. This can be used several times a day and allowed to dry upon the face. It will whiten and refine the skin.

To Remove Freckles.—A perfectly harmless remedy for these blemishes, and one which is usually effectual, is a saturated solution of borax in rosewater. Apply five or six times a day and let it dry on the skin.

To Remove Wrinkles.—A preparation which aids massage in the removal of deep lines is made by dissolving one-half teaspoonful of pulverized alum in one tablespoonful of rose-water, beaten with the whites of two eggs.

Bath Powder.—For those who invariably use powder after bathing the following is an excellent preparation: Mix three parts of fine starch with one of orris root. If this is sifted through the bolting cloth it will be beautifully fine and soft.

For Muddy Complexion.—Into one pint of rain water, put one wine glassful of fresh lemon juice. Add a little rosewater to the contents of the mixture, and keep it in a tightly-corked bottle. Apply several times a day with a piece of soft linen, allowing it to dry on.

GAVE WATER FOR BEER.

THE BOTTLES EMPTIED OF THE AMBER FLUID CAUSE TROUBLE.

A West End Boarding House Keeper Gets Into a Scrap Over an Original Action on His Part—Now in Court.

A West End scrap has assumed such proportions that the city will have to settle it in court. A man named Ramsberger lives on Essex street with his family. Sometime ago he took a man named Frank as a boarder. Frank used to keep a supply of beer of his own down cellar. One day he went down to get some and found that the beer was all gone and the bottles filled with water. He was very angry at this and accused Ramsberger of having changed the liquids. The quarrel grew rather exciting and Mrs. Ramsberger took a hand in the last that boarder left, leaving his trunk behind. He tried to come after it but Mrs. Ramsberger objected strongly. Frank claimed that his boarding house master and mistress treated him rather roughly and started to place the matter in the hands of the law. The trunk was finally given up, and it is now Ramsberger that made the complaint this afternoon against his former boarder for assault and breaking into the house.

CANDIDATES FOR SHERIFF.

Wires Already Being Laid by Republicans to Secure the Nomination.

Certain Republican politicians, feeling confident of carrying Union county next fall, are busily engaged in laying plans to capture the convention. Very little is said about the Senatorship, although Sheriff Kyte and ex-Assemblyman Codding are talked of for the position, if Senator Voorhees refuses re election

The Shrievalty, however, is the most coveted, and for this easy berth a dozen men are willing to sacrifice themselves. Among those whose names are prominently mentioned for Sheriff are Deputy Sheriff Miller of Fanwood, Deputy Sheriff Clark, of Rahway, Alderman Houston, of the Third ward, Freeholder Hulskamper, of the First ward, and ex Alderman Joseph G. Ogden, of the Ninth ward, of this city.

The Elizabeth Republicans feel that if the Senatorship is given to an out-of-town man, the Shrievalty should be awarded to the city, and from now on the battle will rage.—Elizabeth Leader.

A BOOK SOCIABLE.

All Souls Church Members Enjoy a Novel Form of Entertainment.

Washington's Birthday was celebrated at All Souls Church, with a "book sociable," given by the women of the church, which was largely attended. The room was pleasingly decorated with flags and bunting, while a large picture of Washington occupied a prominent place. All of those who came represented a book and its name was guessed by the rest. One of the best was "Our Mutual Friend" by Miss M. B. Brown, who wore a picture of the pastor, Rev. Hobart Clark, on the front of her dress. Among the other especially good ones were "Prince and Pauper," Mrs. David Horr; "The Uncle Tom's Cabin," Mrs. Adams; "Through Darkest Africa," J. D. Patton; "The White Company," Henry Wells; "American Notes," Miss Mary Wells; "The Four Georges," Mrs. H. Clark; "Woman's Reason," Miss Caroline Haviland; "Pathfinder," Miss Anna Haviland; "American Politician," Mrs. F. E. Hebard; "The Man With the Broken Ear." F. E. Hebard; "Middle Much," Rev. Hobart Clark. The winners of the prizes were decided upon by Miss Caroline Haviland, Samuel Huntington and Mrs. Ruth C. Leonard. Miss Leonard won first prize for guessing the most. Rev. Hobart Clark was second prize winner. Elmer Walker took the consolation prize.

The sociable was arranged by a committee composed of the Misses Caroline and Anna Haviland Refreshments were served after the guessing was over.

WILLING TO PUSH THE TROLLEY.

Line from Elizabeth to Plainfield if Consents Can Be Secured.

Silas D. Drake in a letter to the Elizabeth Journal anent the trolley from Elizabeth to Plainfield, says:

Much has been said and written in the past two years on the above subject. I am now prepared to satisfy all parties interested that I have a responsible party who is willing to commence in the immediate building and completion of this line if the franchises can be obtained from the cities, boroughs and towns; and while they prefer Westfield, which should not be used for this purpose, still if they would build on the south side of the C. R. R. of N. J. While the business men of Elizabeth and residents in outlying towns are in favor of this enterprise, permit me the use of your valuable columns to inform my many readers in Lorraine, Roselle and Cranford to "help the good thing along" by giving it their moral support, and when asked for their consent to give it freely, and when this enterprise is completed they will have the direct benefit. I would like to hear the sentiment of the property-owners and others from these five towns on this subject.

To the Honorable the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union, N. J.

Gentlemen.—My opinion having been asked as to whether or not the Board of Chosen Freeholders would be required to advertise for bids for the re indexing of the records of Union County, I would say that I have devoted considerable time to the question and have been unable to find any statute or law requiring such advertisement. EDUCATE THE PEOPLE.

THAT WAS THE MORAL OF DR. RIGGS' LECTURE.

Refers to the Riots in Alexandria and Cairo, and From These Draws a Conclusion to Solve the Eastern Question.

Another lecture on the Eastern question was given in the chapel of Crescent Avenue church Tuesday evening by the Rev. James F. Riggs.

The lecture was a continuation of the one given last week and was one of great interest. In the course of the lecture Dr. Riggs said:

"Last week I spoke of the extravagances in Egypt; tonight I am going to speak of the effects of them, and in doing so we must turn our attention toward the riots in Alexandria and Cairo. In the year 1882, the riots in Alexandria were something terrible. On a bright summer day an European was in a coffee house in the city and was struck by an Egyptian and killed. At once the news spread over the city and in less than ten minutes over three hundred Europeans were killed. It was done in the twinkling of an eye, like the flash of a gun.

"These riots continued in cities and towns round about. people were slaughtered and property was destroyed. The ruler of Egypt began to fortify the city and re-fortify the fort on the coast.

"It did not take long for the English to become roused and to consider it their duty to stop the matter. At length an English officer came to the Egyptian ruler and demanded that European life and property be protected. But the reply of the Egyptian was, 'European life and property is protected.' 'But why are you fortifying the forts along the coast?' was the next query, and the reply came, 'We are not.'

"The English commander had seen enough to understand the situation and he made preparations for war. On the evening of this same day he sailed out from the coast and in the darkness of the night his large search-lights were directed toward the forts and the whole thing was revealed. There in the forts were thousands of Egyptians working like beavers hoisting cannons into place. On the English ships the next morning only coffee was served, as is the custom not to go into battle after a heavy meal, then every man sought his post and waited for orders. A gun was fired from the Admiral's ship to signify that everything was ready, then for ten minutes came an awful silence after which another signal was given and from both the small guns at the mast heads and from the large guns below came a continuous roar, only ceasing to let the smoke clear away.

"For two or three hours a steady shower of steel was thrown into the forts until they were nearly demolished. Then one by one the forts hoisted their flags of truce and immediately the English started ashore to accept the terms of surrender, but before they landed the flags were lowered and the battle commenced with new vigor. The English signal was given to renew the cannonading and after ten minutes more the forts were deserted. Then the English went ashore, demolishing the fortifications and destroying all the cannon. They found many reasons to suspect that the Egyptians were commanded by foreign officers, one reason being that many French and Italian newspapers were found in the forts.

"The loss to the English was very slight while that of the Egyptians was very heavy.

"Much has been written about the bombardment of the city by the English, but this is all false. All the damage done to the city was done by the Egyptian army. Defeated in battle and desperate over the tiresome march of the retreat and the suffering caused by the wounds received in battle, they rushed into the city like a band of crazy men and plundered the homes and shops of the Europeans.

"Many times, during the wars in the various countries, rivers have been blockaded in order to prevent navigation. Skilled engineers have loaded ships with stones, sailed out into the channel and there sunk the ships thinking by this means that they had stopped navigation on that river, but, not so; the water strikes the blockade, is turned out of its course and wears away a new and better channel. So it is with the great Eastern question, it cannot be stopped by force. It must be stopped by the workings of religion and education, by a moral change in the people. Educate the people and the trouble will stop. This is proved by the evidence set forth of this truth in the work of our colleges and missions in the east."

The last lecture will be given next Tuesday evening and the subject will be "Oriental Literature." This lecture is not one of the regular course, but it is thought best to have it in place of the last lecture of the course.

A COLORED Y. M. C. A.

Steps Are Being Taken to Organize One.

A movement has been on foot for some time to organize a Y. M. C. A. for colored young men. Another meeting was held Monday afternoon and it was definitely decided to organize regularly. A committee on permanent organization, with Mr. Butler as chairman, was appointed. Thomas Hooker was made chairman of the committee on by-laws and constitution. The committees will meet tonight, the latter at the home of W. A. Kline, of East Sixth street.

Another meeting of those interested in the scheme will be held on next Wednesday night, when the association will be regularly organized. There were thirty present at the meeting Monday afternoon.

A Book Worth Reading.

Among the books lately added to the Plainfield Public Library is one which is of especial interest to every good citizen of New Jersey: Sackett's "Modern Battles of Trenton," an "up-to-date" story of New Jersey politics and politicians, from 1868 to 1894.

Among the incidents touched upon in this "Romance of Jersey Politics," as one of the newspapers calls the book, are:

General Sewell's election to the United States Senate in 1881.

How Governor Abbett forced the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad to surrender the "irrepealable contract."

Details of the Ballot Box Stuffers' conspiracy in Hudson county.

All last winter Mr. Geo. A. Mills, of Labanon, Conn., was badly afflicted with rheumatism. At times it was so severe that he could not stand up straight, but was drawn over on one side. "I tried different remedies without receiving relief," he says, "until about six months ago I bought a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. After using it for three days my rheumatism was gone and has not returned since." For sale by Reynold's Pharmacy, Park and North avenue. T. S Armstrong, Manager.

GIVEN BY LOCAL TALENT

FOURTH ENTERTAINMENT IN THE STAR COURSE.

The Admirable Elocutionary Efforts of Miss Addie Parker Jackson Pleased Everyone—Music Was All Instrumental.

The fourth entertainment in the Y. M. C. A. Star Course was given Tuesday in the Y. M. C. A. Hall before a very appreciative audience. Those who took part in the entertainment were Miss Addie Parker Jackson, reader, William McKillop, violinist, a ladies' string quintette, which is composed of the Misses Blossom Randolph, Marie Newman, Bessie Cahoone, Marguerite Burnett, violinists, and Clyde Burnett, pianist, and Conde's Young Men's Symphony Orchestra.

The programme opened with an overture entitled, "Harvest Home," by Hermann, and was well rendered by the Young Men's Symphony Orchestra, composed of the following: First violins, Charles Davis, Clarence Mills and William McKillop; second violins, Lindley Hillman, Wyncham Beekman and Gilbert Lovell; flute, Walter Serrell; cornets, Raymond A. McGee and Benjamin LaVere; double bass, Mr. Maier; pianist, Walter Raynolds; conductor, P. Ludwig Conde.

The second number was a reading by Miss Addie Parker Jackson, the stirring story of "Annie Laurie," written by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward. This was given in Miss Jackson's usual charming manner, bringing the whole scene clearly before her hearers, and holding their most careful attention.

The ladies' string quintette now played very prettily a selection from Dencia, their graceful appearance and excellent rendering of the music winning them much hearty applause that they were obliged to return to the stage and play a dainty little waltz.

A sketch from Samuel L. Clemens' "Travels Abroad" was Miss Jackson's second reading; a humorous selection, which was much enjoyed and vigorously encored.

The orchestra now appeared again, playing an American fantasia, by Bendix, "Tone Pictures of the North and South." The familiar airs played in such a spirited manner, greatly pleased the audience, and the young men were obliged to play a second time.

A pupil of P. Ludwig Conde, William D. McKillop, next played a difficult violin solo, "Theme de Bellini," by Paginini, with such excellent technique and so much depth of feeling that he was most enthusiastically encored.

Miss Jackson's closing reading, "How Girls Fish," was a bright, little sketch that kept the audience laughing from the beginning to the end.

The last numer, a tarantelle, "Sicilianne," by Gramm, by the orchestra, was a pleasant close to an unusually delightful evening.

A SUCCESSFUL BAND.

They Elect Officers and Hear the Annual Reports.

The annual meeting of the Young Ladies Mission Band, of the Presbyterian churches, was held Tuesday afternoon in the parlors of the First Presbyterian church.

The election of officers was held and resulted as follows: President, Miss Emily Tracy; vice presidents, Miss Julia J. Ketcham and Miss Flora Petrie; secretary, Miss Harriet Halloway; treasurer, Miss Josephine Petrie; board of managers, the Misses Bessie Blair, Sarah Hayes, May Cahoone, Ethel Holmes and Marguerite Yerkes.

The annual reports of the secretary and treasurer were read. The latter showed the society to be in a good financial condition. During the year $200 had been paid according to pledges and $25 extra had been devoted to a woman's hospital in Siam. About $74 was cleared on the recent entertainment given by the band. Short accounts were then read about the different objects that the band is aiding. The meeting ended with an informal tea.

Justice Newcorn's Court.

A summons in the contract case of Cole against Henry was issued, returnable March 10th, and the case of Brooks, administratrix, against Conklin has been adjourned one week. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff today in the case of Feller against Myers.

FOURTH STREET FIRST.

WHERE THE HUM OF TROLLEY EXTENSION WILL EE HEARD FIRST.

Superintendent Adleman Says That Work Will be Pushed and Cars Running on the New Lines by June First.

Every person in Plainfield is delighted to know that the street railway is to be extended, thus affording easy access to all parts of the city, and the public will be pleased when they learn that arrangements are now being made to commence the work as soon as possible. A Daily Press representative met Superintendent John Adleman Wednesday and in an interview learned many interesting facts.

"Yes," he said, "we are getting ready to make the extensions. We will probably begin at the Watchung avenue terminus and lay the tracks through Fourth street to Grant avenue. The Netherwood extension will probably follow, then the line to Dunellen. The work will be pushed rapidly with a view to completing it at an early date for the summer travel. If we complete the equipments by June, open cars will be put into service. There will be five additional cars used and they will be built for the narrow guage track which will be laid. Until we can change the guage of the tracks now in use passengers will have to change cars at both ends. I think that cars will be run, alternately, direct from Netherwood to the Dunellen line. The remaining cars will cover the other portions of the road. The cars will probably be run under twelve minutes headway.

AUXILIARY OFFICERS.

The McAll Society Elect and Hear Annual Reports This Morning.

The McAll Auxiliary held its annual meeting at the Public Library Wednesday, and the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. Isaac L Miller; secretary, Miss Saidee Hilliard Hunter; treasurer, Mrs. John Gray Foster; vice-presidents, Crescent Avenue church, Mrs. A. Van Sickle; Park Avenue Baptist church, Mrs. J. W. Richardson; St. Stephen's church, Mrs. Constantine Ralli; Grace M. E. church, Mrs. Herbert Randolph; Friends, Miss Minnie G. Wood. The reports were then read. The report of the secretary, Miss Hunter, was a very interesting one, and gave a complete account of the work accomplished during the year, in the meetings as well as out. The treasurer's report showed that $577.42 had been received during the year. Several letters were read, describing the work in Paris. "Tithe Gleaners," a novel method of securing subscriptions, were distributed to the vice-presidents.

A New Pastor Called.

In view of the fact that Rev. Herbert F. Randolph expects to resign the pastorate of Grace M. E. church April 1st, a committee from the church have been considering a man for the position. The result of their deliberation is that a call has been extended to Rev. Harry T. Johnson, of Cranford. The committee have listened to his preaching and are very much pleased with him.

Mr. Johnson has not accepted the call, but it is believed that he will be assigned to Grace M. E. Church when the conferance meets.

Was Known in Plainfield.

Mrs. Sarah C Firman, of Newtown, Pa., was struck by a train and instantly killed last week near her home. She was the first cousin of Robert H Cook, of Rockview avenue, and Alfred Cook, of East Seventh street, and was well known in North Plainfield. Mr. Cook, of Rockview avenue, was another first cousin and returned to this city yesterday from Newtown, where she went to attend the funeral.

Superintendent W. H. Peddle, of the Central Railroad, has written to Street Commissioner R. A. Meeker, that he will have an awning erected under the Liberty street railroad brigde, such as have been placed under the other bridges in the city.

SUSINESS AND SOCIABILITY.

Christian Endeavorers Meet, Transact Business and Enjoy Themselves.

A business meeting and committee conference of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Park Avenue Baptist church was held in the lecture room of the church Tuesday. The reports of committees were made showing the progress of the last two months.

An interesting letter was read from Miss Barrows, a teacher in India, to whom the society sends $25 annually. The committees then retired for a short conference, after which an informal social was held. A vocal solo by Mrs. H. E. Riden, a piano solo by Miss Cora Richardson and a novel question contest made up the programme. In the latter each person was given a list of fifteen questions on the constitution of the society. There were fifteen others who each had one of the answers. The object was to answer the question or to find the one having the answer. At the end the answers were read aloud in concert.

The refreshments concluded the evening's pleasure and, although the attendance was not very large owing to the unpleasant weather, everyone went home much pleased with the meeting and sociable.

The social committee that arranged the latter part of the meeting consisted of Miss Alice Spangenberg, H. E. Rider, Miss Mary Giles and Miss Annie Wyckoff.

A DOUBLE FUNERAL.

Going Home, One of the Pall Bearers Was Badly Injured.

A double funeral took place at the Stony Hill Roman Catholic church Monday morning. The services were held over the remains of Louis Myers, who died last Friday, and of Andrew Herbert, who died Saturday. They were both residents of Stony Hill and the funeral services were largely attended. Father Miller, of St. Joseph's church, North Plainfield, officiated. The interment was made in Stony Hill Cemetery.

John Hess, one of the pall bearers, while returning home was knocked down and run over by a horse owned by John Machasoni, which had broken away. The injured man was carried to his home and Dr. Wescott was summoned. The physician found several bruises on the patient's body and his face was badly cut where he struck on the sharp stones in the roadway.

He complained of a severe pain in his right side, but Dr. Wescott could not tell whether he was hurt internally or not.

Not to be Trifled With.

(From Cincinnati Gazette.)

Will people ever learn that a "cold" is an accident to be dreaded, and that when it occurs treatment should be promptly applied? There is no knowing where the trouble will end; and while complete recovery is the rule, the exceptions are terribly frequent, and thousands upon thousands of fatal illnesses occur every year ushered in by a little injudicious exposure and seemingly trifling symptoms. Beyond this, there are today countless invalids who can trace their complaints to "colds," which at the time of occurrence gave no concern, and were therefore neglected.—When troubled with a cold use Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is prompt and effectual. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Reynold's Pharmacy, Park and North avenue, T. S. Armstrong Manager.

A CHARMING WEDDING.

MISS CROSLEY AND REV. MR. SCUDDER UNITED IN MARRIAGE.

The Event Took Place in the First M. E. Church and Was Largely Attended —A Delightful Reception Followed.

It was a very large assemblage that witnessed the marriage of Miss Janet Bullock Crosley, daughter of Justice and Mrs. T. R. Crosley, of 62 Duer street, to Rev. Charles Elmer Scudder, of Newark, last Tuesday, in the First Methodist Episcopal church.

The pulpit platform was neatly decorated with large palms, behind which was seated the organist, Albert Pangborn, who rendered a pleasing programme while the guests were arriving.

At 7:30 the ever-popular notes of Lohengrin's wedding march were heard, and the bridal party entered.

First came the ushers, Rev. W. C. O'Donnell, of Plainfield; Rev. W. W. Winans, Rev. Robert Elliott, Rev. Frank McDaniel, of Drew Theological Seminary; Rev. Alfred Evans, of Newark; and Rev. Harry J. Johnson, of Cranford.

They were followed by the flower girls, Nellie Valiant and Mable May Garey, gowned in pink and carrying bouquets of white roses. Then came the maid of honor, Miss Clara Hancock, of Trenton. She was exquisitely gowned in white silk faille, with pearl trimmings, and gracefully carried a bouquet of pink roses. The bride, accompanied by her father, followed, gowned in white silk, with pearl trimmings en train. The conventional tulle veil and wreath of orange blossoms were worn, while a handsome bouquet of bridal roses was carried.

When the bridal party reached the altar they were met by the groom, and best man, Rev. Arthur Scudder, of Wakefield, R. I., brother of the groom. Rev. Dr. C. R. Barnes, and Rev. Dr. Tuttle, of Roseville.

The party formed about the altar. The service of the Episcopal church was used. Dr. Barnes officiating, assisted by Dr. Tuttle, who offered prayer.

After the ceremony Mendelssohn's wedding march was rendered while the bridal party retired from the church. As they passed down the aisle, the bride and groom bowed pleasantly to their many friends. A reception followed at the home of the bride's parents on Duer street, where a number of friends gathered to congratulate the newly wedded couple. During the evening supper was served, and genuine sociability reigned supreme.

An exceedingly large collection of the most costly and useful presents were received as tokens of esteem.

Mr. and Mrs. Scudder left on the 10 o'clock train for a short wedding trip and upon their return will reside in Newark, where the members of Mr. Scudder's congregation have furnished a parsonage for himself and bride. They also made him a present of a purse of money.

Among the guests present at the house were: Miss Ida May Stull, Raritan; John Lewis Laing, William Laing, Brooklyn; Mrs. Amanda Wolcott, Mr. and Mrs. William Wolcott, Mrs. E. Mick, Cook, of Rahway; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Scudder, parents of the groom, Roxbury, N. Y.; Miss Minnie Vosburg, Newark; Rev. Arthur H. Scudder, Wakefield, R. I.; J. O Scudder, New York University; Dr. and Mrs. Tuttle, Roseville; Dr. and Mrs. H. K. Carroll, Misses Alice and Grace Carroll, Mr. and Mrs. Garey, Mrs. Mose Mrs. Valiant, Ex-Mayor and Mrs. E. J. Needham, J. F. Rumble, Mr. and Mrs. William Shotwell, Mrs. Homan, Miss Mary E. Laing, Miss Snyder, Miss Gertrude Sharp, Mrs. James Love, Miss Love, Robert Love, Mr. and Mrs. George R. Cornwell, J. A. Greene, Chief Marshall and Mrs. J. W. VanHorn, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Olasen, and Miss Humble.

An interesting incident was the presence of Mrs. Cook, of Rahway, who was bridemaid for Mrs. T. R. Crosley when she was married.

The groom is pastor of the Montgomery M. E. church, Newark, and is very popular.

MME. MODJESKA'S DEBUT.

A Veteran Journalist Describes Her First Appearance in America.

The Early Struggles of the Young Artiste in Which She Had the Encouragement of Edwin Booth and Other Warm Friends.

[COPYRIGHT, 1896.]

The serious reports of Helene Modjeska's illness bring into vivid relief the associations of her first appearance on the stage of the old California theater, in San Francisco, now over 18 years since. I was then chief editor of the Evening Post of that city. Several months before the persistent appeals of the dramatic writer of that paper, Mr. C. A. Mahany, a brilliant young Irishman, had fastened upon my consciousness the fact that a very gifted actress of Polish birth and antecedents was desirous of studying English and making an entry upon an English-speaking stage. Mr. Mahany secured from her copies of letters from Alexandre Dumas, Jr., of criticisms relating to her work from German and Polish periodicals. The letters and critiques were done into English by Mr. Mahany and published in the Post for the purpose of influencing not only the public but the management of the old California theater in favor of Mme. Bouvier Chlapolski. But that which first and most closely attracted me to this dramatic personality was the accounts given me of the lady by friends of European birth; army comrades and republican societies of Polish and German antecedents. There was also a very handsome, intellectual young man to whom we were all attracted who has since won for himself, as a poet and novelist, a foremost place in modern Polish literature. Several of his novels, one or two dealing with American emigrant life, have been translated into English by Mr. Curtin and published here. This brilliant man was the close friend of the already famous actress, and her talented husband, who was himself a leading journalist of Cracow, and has been a correspondent from the United States of leading European journals. Among the resident Polish citizens was a Capt. Bielun, who lived in the "mission" section of the city. It was at his home that I first met Mme. Modjeska.

Some time before, in the latter part of 1876, Edwin Booth was playing his famous engagement at the California. Helena Modjeska Chlapolski had met the great Shakespearean actor, and read to him the part of Ophelia from a French translation. It was reported then that she wished to play that part during the Booth engagement to his Hamlet in English. Of this statement I am personally assured, but madame was certainly advised by him to study English. I was present one evening early in 1877, at Capt. Bielun's residence, with John McCullough, Mr. Daine and Mr. Mahany, both editorial writers and dramatic critics, with two or three other gentlemen, when Mme. Modjeska recited several parts in Polish and French; I think in German also. The one which impressed me most was a Polish poem on "Hagar." The intense and powerful dramatic effect it produced has never faded, and I can still feel the thrills and see the hushed and white, almost awed, faces of that little group. Of the drama in power and professional capability of this artist, none who were present had thereafter the slightest shadow of doubt. For myself, at least, a campaign commenced which has been gracefully acknowledged as of value. But I confess, also, that besides the controlling admiration of her genius which had been aroused, my interest was personally intensified by the sympathy I felt on account of the associations belonging to her race life. Mme. Modjeska is intensely Polish and it probably has been fortunate for her in the past that she was a native of Gallacia, not Warsaw, and born under the Austrian, not the Russian government. Of course, the artist life always predominates, but those fortunate enough to have the confidence of this brilliant couple know how deeply interwrought are the associations and aspirations of birth and race. Mr. Chlapolski is especially earnest, but no more sincere or impassioned even than madame herself in this direction. At the time they and their group of friends came to California, Modjeska was a member of the staff of the Imperial (Russian) theater at Warsaw, and procured, it is said, a two years' leave of absence.

The decision to study English was finally made in February, 1877, and in the latter part of October Mme. Modjeska made her debut at San Francisco. She has herself told the facts of that debut in a charming simple paper published by a Boston magazine, so I shall not touch upon that ground, only illustrating the feelings which had been aroused before hand, and the effect on that first night. The men of the press were all friendly; some of them already enthusiastic. Madame had chosen "Adrienne Lecouvreur" for her opening part. She has shown a great interest in dramas which turn upon the struggles of the woman and artist, and it was doubtless that which made her first present "Magda" to the American stage, as well as "Mistress Betty" in her recent season.

For the eight months preceding that debut, Mme. Modjeska lived in pleasant but modest quarters on Geary street, San Francisco, studying with an intensity of application that was most remarkable. Of course in the time consumed, the effort was only to so master the new tongue as to enable the actress to both understand and deliver the lines. When the theater was secured for an "off week" for her debut, the command of her own parts was perfect, the only noticeable thing being the peculiar but musical intonation and the inability to master the "r's"—a point which still marks, to a slight degree, Mme. Modjeska's delivery. There was one thing which aided her, and that was the constant study she had previously given to Shakespeare during her career at Warsaw. Her Shakespeare she had to learn from German and French editions. The French stage and drama has had much influence on madame's art, but she has made it all over with her own individuality. In those months of severe study she was fortunate in having as a most competent instructor a lady of Slavic birth and American education with some dramatic faculty also. She possessed just the linguistic and elocutionary capacity that was needed to point the way to this most enthusiastic student. On the night of the debut madame was letter perfect in her notable part, yet she could not carry on an English conversation of any extent. The California theater was then the house, fortunately for the artist and the public, of one of the best and most notable stock companies to be found in America. It was under lease to John McCullough, who, though absent from the city at the time of the debut, had met Mme. Modjeska and her husband in October, 1876, when she first passed through San Francisco, en route to Anaheim. Barton Hill was manager, a most accomplished actor; Thomas Keene the leading man.

When at last the curtain fell on the first act, those few in the audience who were privileged made their way to the green room to witness the interesting scene, as the company gathered about madame and gave her their enthusiastic congratulations. We, who had waited and worked for months to smooth the way a little, knew, as we sat in front of the curtain and felt the great anxiety, that within five minutes after Modjeska appeared the stage was hers and the future assured. At the fall of the curtain after the second act, I was besieged in the lobby for introductions and information. The person who managed for madame during a couple of years thereafter was especially persistent. I found Gen. Salomon, her attorney, had made them acquainted. The newspaper men were especially and even youthfully exuberant and when the "play was o'er" we all adjourned to the Palace hotel, to which madame had moved and where we were invited to an informal supper in her apartments.

AN ENJOYABLE MEEETING.

Lucetta Council, No. 28, Daughters of Liberty, Meet in Their New Rooms.

The regular meeting of Lucetta Council, No. 28, Daughters of Liberty, was held in their new rooms, the Exempt Fireman's Hall, last Friday, and was largely attended. Besides the members of the home Council there were representatives present from the several councils in the vicinity, including the State Council Treasurer, E. J. Reining, of Jersey City.

After the routine business was transacted seven new members were initiated into the mysteries of the order by the new team recently organized, which is highly complimented not only by the members of the various councils that have had the pleasure of seeing their excellent work, but by the State officers as well.

During the evening John Bowman, in behalf of the friends and members, in a brief speech appropriate to the occasion, presented the Council with a handsome morocco-bound Bible, and an altar cover which was composed of an elegant pongee silk flag, trimmed with old gold fringe with tassels to match, and he also presented from Mrs. C. L. Stratton four covers for the pedestals, which were also composed of flags of the same material and trimmed in a like manner, and were accepted by the Councilor W. W. Stratton, in behalf of the Council in a few well-chosen remarks. After the presentation a rising vote of thanks was extended to Mrs. Stratton for securing the above-mentioned articles, as she, unaided, and by her own personal efforts, raised the money that purchased them.

An address by the State Council Treasurer followed by remarks by several of the sisters and brothers, intermingled with music and refreshments, brought the meeting to a close.

The Elizabeth Journal has the following concerning the windup of the Journal League:

The games played by the teams are particularly creditable. The E. A. C. stands first in every column, and, besides have the honor of having made the highest score. Their 1799 will stand for a long time.

There is a difference of 80 pins between the high and low averages, while the Crescents are only 11 pins behind the E. A. C. The general average is one of the highest ever made, considering the fact that 11 games were played in the individual work there is a record of which any league might be proud; four teams have averages above 1600. Kerr captured the individual prize, and Vanderveer with 229 has high-game honors.

Tabulated records of the league are given below:

DECLARED UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Borough Law Under Which Fanwood Exists Condemned by Supreme Court.

A decision handed down by the Supreme Court a day or two ago declares unconstitutional all laws passed subsequent to 1878 providing for the formation of boroughs. The decision was made in case of Benson against the Inhabitants of Bloomfield, and in effect prescribes that the law of 1878 affords ample means for the organization of boroughs, while subsequent acts conflicted with its provisions.

The borough of North Plainfield, formed in 1885, under the law of 1878, is, therefore, not affected, but Fanwood, which was organized last fall under one of the subsequent laws, has an unconstitutional government. What the effect will be remains to be seen.

The joint committee of the Legislature appointed to revise the borough laws, of which Assemblyman Reed, of Somerset county, is a member, held a meeting last night and discussed means to relieve the unconstitutional boroughs from their embarrassment. Nothing, however, was definitely settled upon.

TROLLEYS TO PLAINFIELD.

A Capitalist Will Apply for the Necessary Franchises.

The building of a trolley road to Plainfield seems to be nearer a certainty than ever. Yesterday afternoon Silas D. Drake accompanied a capitalist to Lorraine, Roselle, Cranford and Westfield, where residents and property owners were interviewed.

The capitalist, who is said to control the trolley line in Plainfield, talked with the prominent citizens in each town visited, regarding the privilege of securing right of way for a line between this city and Plainfield. He was so impressed with the favorable sentiment of the people that he believes the necessary franchises can be obtained, and decided to make application for franchises to the several town committees.—Elizabeth Journal.

MET A QUICK DEATH.

FATALITY ON THE RAIL AT STELTON LAST NIGHT.

Gay Party of Five Young People Suddenly Plunged Into the Jaws of Death, But Four Escaped With Injuries.

A striking illustration of the uncertainty of life was enacted Friday with all its vividness when a young woman was killed outright, two others seriously injured and two young men, who accompanied them, laid groaning with pain as the result of being run down by a locomotive while driving across railroad tracks.

Early last evening, at about 7 o'clock, Miss Laura and Miss Bertha Giles, daughters of Nelson Giles, who resides about two miles from this Market on the New Brunswick road, and Nelson and Bollie Dunbar and Miss Lydia Dunbar, who reside about three miles south from New Market, also on the New Brunswick road, started to attend a sociable to be tendered to the new pastor of the Stelton Baptist church, Rev. W. T. Dorwood, at his residence on Main street in Stelton.

Rev. Mr. Dorwood's house is situated about 200 feet from the Main street crossing of the Pennsylvania Railroad. There is an unobstructed view up and down the tracks at this point for fully half a mile and an approaching train can be easily seen. There is considerable travel over Main street crossing both night and day, as it is the main thoroughfare between Stelton and Dunellen. There are gates at the crossing attended by a gateman, but the latter is not on duty after 8 o'clock in the evening, and drivers of vehicles are forced to use extra vigilance while nearing this crossing.

The reception at the Rev. Mr. Dorwood's lasted until about 12 o'clock, and the Giles and Dunbar young people started for home in their two-seated platform wagon. One of the Dunbar boys was driving. They were undoubtedly talking and laughing with each other as they neared the crossing, and did not notice the approach of an east-bound freight train which was coming down on the outside passenger track, known as No 1. They were just on the first track when the train bore down upon them. The locomotive struck the wagon almost square and lifted it clear from the ground. The harness was cut, releasing the horse, which was uninjured, and the animal ran away. As soon as the engineer saw that he had struck the rig he reversed the throttle, bringing the train to a stop about 500 feet from the scene of the accident.

The crew found a body on the pilot of the engine, which was identified as that of Laura Giles. Death must have been instantaneous. The others had been scattered promiscuously about the tracks, and all were unconscious. When the trainmen investigated, they found all four were alive, but seemingly fatally injured.

The body of the girl Laura was taken to the home of her grandfather, Mifford Runyon, in Stelton. An examination revealed the fact that her head had been badly crushed, and death must have been caused by concussion of the brain.

The two boys and their sister were taken to the Stelton station, and later were taken to the hospital at New Brunswick. Their injuries were not as serious as was at first thought. Nelson suffered from a broken jaw, but beyond this the principle injury was the result of the shock. Bertha Giles was taken to the residence of E. J. Drake, nearby, where it was found that her hip was broken. The body of the dead girl Laura was brought to her late home this afternoon by Undertaker W. G. Runyon and the injured one will be taken home as soon as her condition will permit. Both the Giles and Dunbar families are highly respected and well-known in both this city and the locality where they live. Mr. Giles has a large milk route in this city. The mother of the girls, Laura and Martha, died last August, and they were the housekeepers for their father.

Coroner McDede, of Middlesex county, will hold an inquest over the body of the dead girl this afternoon.

A Singular Coincidence.

A singular coincident in connection with the recent flood at Bound Brook is related by J. E. Townsend, of Somerst street. He visited the place the morning after the fire and walking about the place picked up a piece of printed matter, which proved to be a leaf from the Bible. Upon reading it the verse that first struck his eye was as follows: "The floods have lifted up their voice; the floods lift up their waves." The verse being so particularly appropriate Mr. Townsend has kept the leaf as a memento of the great event in the history of Bound Brook.

Vandals in School Houses.

The district school houses in Union township and Lorraine were broken into Wednesday night. Seats and desks were smashed, the walls defaced and lamps broken. In the Union school house a large American flag was torn to shreds.

SALOON CASES IN ELIZABETH.

Unwillingness of Witnesses to Testify Causes Embarrassment to Both Sides.

The Union County Court, at Elizabeth, was crowded Thursday morning when the adjourned excise cases were called to trial. The seventeen indicted liquor men, who had had half a dozen lawyers, had, since the adjournment last Monday, listened to the pleadings of the 150 subpoenaed witnesses, many of whom belong to Elizabeth's "400" and dreaded the exposurs sure to follow if the cases went to trial, and, after a brief consultation, decided to plead non vult. This course was taken in sixteen of the cases. The other, that of George Hirtzel, was made a test case, to decide the power of the court to try the cases. It was indicted before a jury and resulted in the conviction of Hirtzel for illegal selling.

The seventeen saloonmen were admitted to bail to await sentence on March 7th, when it is intended to carry the cases to the higher courts.

It was intended to have gone to trial with all the cases, but the threats of the unwilling witnesses subpoenaed by both sides to "give away" all who had been in the habit of frequenting the various resorts and disclosing sensational developments proved too much for the saloonmen, who understood that it meant ruin to their future business. So they decided to take the chances of going to jail, and pleaded non vult. This action was hailed with joy by the many anxious ones in the court room, who dreaded the outcome of the testimony the State had secured.

RUNNING THE SLIDES.

Stereopticon Exhibition Given in the Seventh Day Baptist Church.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Seventh Day Raptist church and their friends had a delightful time last Friday, when a large collection of lantern slides, each one a work of art, were shown on a canvas. The principle collection, consisting of thirty-seven slides, was the work of the late George H. Babcock and presented views from various points of interest in the world. There were also views by J. Hervey Doane, Wm. Stillman, Walter Freeman, Franklin Smith, John Neagle and Harry Coward. Among Mr. Neagle's collections were several excellent views of different parts of the church. Mr. Doane, Mr. Coward and Mr. Freeman also had a few local views around Plainfield and vicinity. All the views were very good and the lantern in the hands of Mr. Teal, Mr. Dunham and Mr. Neagle did superb work, while Mr. Teal in his usual entertaining manner described them.

A pleasing instrumental duet was rendered by Miss Mable Maxson and Miss Maude Mosher in opening the entertainment and during the intermission Miss Mosher gave a delightful vocal solo.

In the forepart of the evening little silk bags were given to each one present and they were expected to respond liberally by placing as much money in them as possible. The committee in charge consisted of Miss Allis, Miss Mosher, Miss Clawson, Mrs. H. M. Maxson and Dr. Frank Clawson.

A Silver Reception.

A silver reception, celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society, of the Eastern and Middle States, will be held Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the lecture room of the First Baptist church. An interesting programme will be rendered including the story of the years, singing, and brief sketches of China, Japan, Burmah, Telegu and Africa, given by six young girls in native costume.

MR. TITSWORTH'S DEATH

THE RAVAGES OF CONSUMPTION RESULTED IN DEATH THIS MORNING.

Was Well Known and Respected in This City, Where He Had Lived For Many Years—Steel Engraver Until Eyes Failed Him.

Death came silently and peacefully to William L. Titsworth Thursday morning at his home at 518 Watchung avenue.

Mr. Titsworth was born at Cincinnati on February 20th, 1830. He lived there until he was five years old when his father brought him east, where he has since lived. He was first in business in Jersey City, but at President Lincoln's call for volunteers, he was one of the first to respond and enlisted in the Second New Jersey Infantry. When he returned from the war after serving his time, he took up the occupation of steel engraving and was one of the most expert in this part of the country. Some specimens of his work may be seen today in many Plainfield homes. His eyes, at last, were unable to bear the strain, and he took a position with H. Schubart & Co., of New York, wholesale tobacconist, where he remained until ill health compelled him to give it up.

Mr. Titsworth was one of the oldest commuters on the road, having resided here for the last twenty-five years. He was a Past-Master in Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26, F. & A. M., a member of Plainfield Council, Royal Arcanum, and of the G. A. R.

He has been confined to his home for the last two years with consumption, which finally caused his death. He leaves one brother, J. D. Titsworth, of Madison avenue, and is closely related to a number of other Plainfield people.

He attended the Seventh-Day Baptist church until he became an invalid.

Service Stripes on Police Force.

Another of the up-to-date changes made in the police department is the awarding of the service stripes to the police. one for each five years of service. Chief Grant now wears four gold stripes on the sleeve of his coat, bearing silent witness to his twenty years of faithfulness and strict attendance to duty. One light blue stripe adorns the cuff of our genial Sergeant Kiely. Roundsman Frederickson has a similar one, while the patrolmen that have them are McCue, two, Flanagan, two, and Cooney, one.

Gehring's Dog Bites Him.

Philip Gehring, ex-chief of the Rahway fire department, was badly bitten by his bulldog Tuesday night. Mr. Gehring was bitten when he stooped to unchain the dog. Poultices were applied, but the hand is much swollen, and there is fear of blood-poisoning.

WOULDN'T STAND INSULT

ACCUSED, DENIED, AND AFTER ALL GOT A BLACK EYE.

A Couple of Cartmen Get Mixed up in a Quarrel in an Embryo Boarding House and a Lively Time Results.

Louis Coddington, who is in the trucking business, has a number of men working for him who live in his stable on Second street near Park avenue. The most reliable two of his guests are Mike McCarty and Harrison Randolph, colored. Randolph is the cook for the establishment and arranges savory dishes to tempt the inner man, while McCarty does the washing, sweeps the floor once a month and washes the windows every Christmas. They have a patent bed, too, which they shake up every time the moon changes. Willie Murphy, of base ball fame, boarded there until recently, but of late "Gentle Willie" has been giving the place a wide berth but why, no one seems to know.

Tuesday, "Doc" was told that McCarty had been talking about him. "Doc" went down to the stable to look for McCarty with the determination to get satisfaction. When he found McCarty, he accused him of saying ungentlemanly things about him. The latter denied the accusation, but in turn accused Randolph, who was cooking the dinner, of making the alleged remarks. Randolph jumped up, punched McCarty under the eye and closed that member. He also badly cut his face. "Doc" then attempted to take McCarty's part and Randolph picked up a hatchet and chased "Doc" out into the street. Then he went back to find McCarty, to put more force into his argument but the latter had vanished.

FIREBUGS SET ROPE SNARES.

Tried to Hinder Rahway Firemen from Saving the Auditorium.

The outlaws who have been for several months ransacking private residences and frightening the famale occupants in Rahway at midnight into hysterics, have now turned their attention to arson.

About 2 o'clock this morning the Auditorium, on Irving street was discovered on fire. The firemen found that one end of the building had been bespattered with kerosene oil, and that inflamable material had been spread in several places and set on fire. The flames were put out before much damage was done.

Whoever committed the crime had stretched ropes across the sidewalks in several places to impede the progress of those who would run to the fire. The ropes were arranged about two feet from the ground, and several persons were seriously hurt by being tripped up.

The building is owned by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and the anti-saloon element has been holding meetings in it. The supposition is that the fire is the work of persons who are trying to get revenge for the closing of the liquor traffic in Rahway on Sundays.

FIFTY DOLLARS IN BAGS.

Birthday Party in the W. C. T. U. Rooms a Success Socially and Financially.

The birthday social Friday evening under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., in their rooms on Watchung avenue, was well attended.

The programme opened with a piano duet by Miss Burnett and Miss Cahoone. Its rendition was greeted with hearty applause, as was also the vocal solo by Wm. N. Runyon, which followed.

William McKillop gave a violin solo. A feature of the evening was the appearance of Miss Addie Parker Jackson, whose delightful recitations won admiration and applause from all. Miss Opdycke, of Somerville, closed the programme with a vocal solo. This well-known soloist is always a favorite with Plainfield audiences, and her efforts were very much appreciated last evening.

The small silk bags that had been distributed among the members and their friends were then collected and as a result nearly $50 was realized.

During the balance of the evening refreshments were served and a general social time enjoyed.

HAND-PICKED BERRIES BY LAW.

A Boom to a Jersey Industry—The Legislators Home for the Week.

If Assemblyman Wildes, of Burlington county, can have his way the people next summer will eat hand-picked huckleberries. He introduced a bill in the House yesterday, says The Sun, providing that huckleberry-pickers shall use their hands only in gathering the fruit. Mr. Wildes says the Italians and Hungarians who flock to the pine barrens of Burlington and Ocean counties every July have invented a contrivance with which they clean the berries from a bush in a few minutes, and take also the green berries and leaves. This injures the bushes, and resident pickers are seeking protection.

In the Senate yesterday afternoon two bills introduced by Senator Voorhees were opposed by Senator Daly, who thought they reflected on the lawyers. One of the bills requires lawyers who bring damage suits against corporations to file for public inspection copies of the agreement made between lawyer and client for a division of the money recovered, and the other requires all such suits to be brought within two years of the date that injury is sustained or death occurred. Senator Daly charged that the bills were introduced in the interest of trolley companies which sought to escape payment of damages, and he wanted the bills laid over to give to reputable lawyers an opportunity to be heard in opposition.

Senator Voorhees ridiculed the idea of giving a hearing. Public hearings, he said, amounted to nothing. He denied that the trolley companies were behind the bills, and said they drawn by himself because of the public scandals concerning the manner in which legal Shylocks had robbed their clients in such cases, taking fourfifths of the amount recovered; besides under the present laws, he said, there was an inducement for lawyers to incite the beginning of damage suits. The bills were ordered to a third reading, and Senator Daly promised that he would fight them then.

Both Houses have adjourned for the week. This afternoon there will be a public hearing of the Equal Taxation bill demanded by the Jersey City people.

PROOF OF THE BIBLE.

Rev. Henry Mason Baum Illustrates Facts of Interest to Students.

The Y. M. C. A. Hall contained a select and cultured audience Friday evening when Rev. Henry Mason Baum, D. C. L., gave his illustrated lecture on Chaldae. Those present included many pastors, Sunday school teachers and Biblical students who thoroughly enjoyed the remarks and pictures given on this important subject.

The views shown by Mr. Baum are exceedingly beautiful and, in fact, a rare treat from the ordinary ones usually presented. The lecture throughout substantiates the authentisity of the Bible and brings vividly before the hearer many truths to increase his belief in Christianity. It is founded entirely on facts, and as this is the important thing nowadays among active men and women, it was of peculiar interest to the large audience present.

Tomorrow evening Mr. Baum will give what he considers the best of his two lectures. The subject is on Egypt, and those who attend will not regret it.

Stole a Load of Hay.

For some time William Ludlow, of Linden, has been annoyed by thieves who have pillaged his barn and his feed. Tuesday night he and Constable Titus hid in the barn. At 10 o'clock a wagon was backed up to the barndoor and two men began to load it with hay. After the hay was loaded on the vehicle the men started to drive off, but were confronted by the constable with a revolver. He took them in custody. One of the men, who gave his name as Benjamin Tice, was held and later brought to the county jail in Elizabeth. His companion's name could not be learned. He said he could get bail and would later tell his story.

TOTS UNDER AN ENGINE.

Two Cute Youngsters Lie Close When Run Down by a Locomotive.

James and John Bendar, aged nine and six years respectively, had a thrilling experience at Elizabeth yesterday. They attempted to cross the coal car tracks of the Central Railroad at Park avenue, when they were run down by a drill engine.

Both boys with great presence of mind crouched close to the ground in the middle of the track until the locomotive had completely passed over them. Both escaped alive, but the largest received a bad cut on the head.

Both boys were exhausted by fright and had to be carried to their home.

Pastor Randolph May Leave.

The many friends of Rev. H. F. Randolph, pastor of Grace M. E. church, will be sorry to learn that there is a possibility of his leaving Plainfield April 1st.

MISSION WOMEN MEET.

SILVER ANNIVERSARY OF THE FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Papers Read on Different Communities by Women Dressed in Garb Representative of Her Subject—$74.48 Collected.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the First Baptist church celebrated their twenty-fifth anniversary Thursday afternoon in the lecture room of the church in a most interesting manner.

The room was artistically arranged with drapery, representing oriental style as much as possible.

The exercises opened with singing, "The Morning Light is Breaking," by Miss Clawson, Miss Blair, Mrs. Bigelow, Mrs. C. H. Smith and Miss Needham. Miss Gussie Runyon was the accompanist. This was followed with prayer by Dr. D. J. Yerkes, and Scripture reading by Mrs. D. J. Yerkes, who presided. Mrs. Shreve, Mrs. Manning, Mrs. Lowry, Mrs. Bigelow and Mrs. Wilson then gave brief sketches of the foreign mission work from 1871 to 1896. It was an interesting feature, telling in general how the society had grown from a few members to a vast army of workers in the cause of Christ.

Loving tribute was paid to the late Mrs. W. C. Butler, who was a leader in the work of the Plainfield society and whose earnest, untiring zeal resulted in the accomplishment of much good.

Mrs. Alexander Gilbert related in an intesting way the story of how a missionary won the hearts of many savages to Christ by singing "All Hail the Power of Jesus Name." The hymn was then rendered by the quintette, with violin accompaniment by Lindley Hillman.

The last number in part first was the rendition of a vocal solo by Mrs. DeWitt C. Brokaw.
